Four Masked Men, Driving a Buick Car, Line Up Joyriders and Frisk Them for $50.

Ida Grove, Ia., May 30.—Five Ida Grove young men were held up Wednesday night by automobile highwaymen and relieved of nearly $50 in cash. The young men were Fritz Pilcher, driver of the car; Charles Venard, a clothing salesman; Professors M. A. Massey, Paul Montgomery and W J Himmell, the last three named being instructors in the public schools of the city.

The men were out on a pleasure ride, and about three miles northwest of Ida Grove, as they were nearing the top of a long hill, four men with handkerchiefs covering their faces, stepped out into the road and ordered Pilcher to stop the car and the rest of the occupants to put up their hands. The holdup men enforced their demand by firing several shots in to the air.

Himmell, Montgomery and Venard were lined up along the road and their pockets rifled They were then ordered to "hit the grit," which they did, none of the jewelry on their persons being taken.

Massey, who is small of stature, had dropped down into the tonneau of the car and escaped observation, until one of the highwaymen happened to look into the car and found him He was then trussed up, gagged and left in the weeds alongside the highway.

Pilcher was forced to get out of the car and accompany the bandits to the top of the hill, where they had a large Buick touring car, and he was then ordered to go back to his own car and speed up for town.

It was at first thought that the holdup was a joke and that the boys' money would be returned, but as there has been no move of that kind they are now convinced that they were victims of a real holdup.

Pilcher says there was no number on the car. He has driven automobiles in the city for several years and he did not recognize the car used by the bandits.

Sixty barrels were taken on a search warrant filed by an attorney of the Law and Order league. This is being stored at the rear of the police station, the barrels being heaped up in several rows. SAVES THREE MEN AT RISK OF HIS OWN LIFE

Davenport, Ia., May 30.—At the risk of his life, Archie M. Lau, mate on a Mississippi excursion steamer plunged overboard, eluded the steamer paddles and carried a life line to three men clinging to an overturned skiff which had been capsized by the wash of the steamer, saving their lives. The three men rescued are Dr. J. C. Teufel, William Teufel and Calvin Anderson. They were sailing near the passing steamer when the swell thrown by the steamer paddles flung the boat into the air and caused it to overturn.

When the rescuer reached the capsized skiff Dr Teufel had weakened to such an extent that his life was barely saved. He was revived on the steamer. None of the three was able to swim.

NORRIS' MOVE PLACES M'REYNOLDS IN HOLE

New York Central Resolution Puts Trust Case Up to Attorney General.

Washington, D. C., June 1 —Senator Norris, by his New York Central resolution, expects to uncover a situation as to financing which if not as objectionable as the New Haven's will at least be indefensible. His resolution, calling on the attorney general for a report whether the New York Central is a combination in violation of law, and whether he contemplates prosecution is preliminary.

It is intensely embarrassing to the department of justice and to democratic senators who uphold McReynolds They are trying to sidetrack it by throwing it to the Interstate Commerce commission.

Senator Norris, however, believes it will pass sooner or later and cannot permanently be sidetracked

If McReynolds reports there is a combination then he will either have to prosecute or be put in the attitude of upholding violation of law That a combination which is unlawful does exist is the opinion of Senator Norris.

PRESIDENT BACKS CAUSE OF REBELS

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 1 From developments today in the Mexican mediation situation it was evident the American delegates would champion the cause of the constitutionalists until it had been determined whether the Carranza faction will have personal representation here during the continuation of the negotiations

John F. Urquidi, General Carranza's special messenger, called on the American delegation today and discussed with Mr. Lehmann, the constitutionalists' attitude toward mediation.

The mediators themselves conferred at some length in respect to the character of answer to be made to General Carranza's communication. They were inclined toward a mere acknowledgement, but the indications are that the wish of the Washington government will prevail that full consideration be given the constitutionalists If so, the negotiations will be prolonged

The mediators had believed it would be possible to frame a protocol dealing with the important phases of the controversy between the United States and General Huerta and such of the internal questions that must be settled here, which General Carranza would approve Then certain details would have been left to more leisurely settlement after the return of the mediators to Washington. It is understood now that the envoys have yielded to arguments from Washington that there should be no adjournment of the Niagara Falls meeting until disposition is made of all questions before it Should satisfactory arrangements be made whereby General Carranza may be willing to send delegates on terms satisfactory to the mediators, it is possible that the conferences might continue for two or three weeks or more

The department of agriculture estimates that disease and exposure caused a loss in meat animals in this country amounting to $250,000,000 last year. Of this only $20,000,000 was attributed to exposure. The loss in meat would have furnished more than a year's supply to the entire population of the New England states.

SUSPECT WINTERS CHILD WAS SLAIN: FATHER ARRESTED

Newcastle Ind June 1—Dr and Mrs W A Winter father and step-mother of Catherine Winters, aged 9 who disappeared from her home here more than a year ago, were arrested on their arrival here from Terre Haute, Ind today They were charged with conspiracy to commit a felony This makes three arrests in the case W. H Cooper a former roomer in the Winters home having been arrested late last night

It was such a second search of the home of Dr W A Winters, father of the girl, would be made late today. Private detectives and local police officers who searched the home last night asserted they found, sealed in the basement wall, a red hair ribbon, a red undershirt and red sweater, which had belonged to the missing child

The sweater, police officers declared, had holes in it which looked as if they had been burned there and the undershirt was stained as if by blood

Cooper Not Surprised.

Cooper was a roomer at the Winters' home at the time of the disppeaance of the girl but left Newcastle the day after she disappeared and remained away for 10 days He did not seem much surprised when arrested and declared he could prove an alibi He also blamed Mayor Watkins for his predicament

Dr and Mrs Winters were in Terre Haute, where motion pictures are being shown to raise funds to further the search for Catherine

Large sums of money have been spent in search for the child and she has been reported found in various parts of the country, but each report has proven untrue.

It was stated that the charge of conspiracy to commit a felony had been placed against the three persons under arrest, merely as a means of holding them and that the charge might be changed later

Catherine Winters, the 10-year-old daughter of Dr W. A Winters, disappeared April 20, 1913 The child had been canvassing the neighborhood in which she lived, trying to sell needles for a church society. She was last seen late in the afternoon. The police were not notified until the next day.

Catherine is the daughter of Dr. Winters by his first wife, who died several years ago. Catherine inherited $3,000 on her mother's death.

The warrants for the arrest of Dr. and Mrs Winters and Cooper were issued by Mayor Watkins, who has been a leading figure in the investigation of the disappearance of Catherine. Cooper's bond was placed at $5,000, which he was unable to furnish. The Winters' bonds have not been fixed.

Grand Jury Investigation.

W R. Meyers, county prosecutor, said today he would file affidavits against the three in the circuit court and that a grand jury investigation would be begun at once.

Police officials and the private detective employed by the mayor began today digging up the floor of the cellar in the Winters' home with the hope, as they expressed it, of finding either the body of the girl or evidence of how the body had been disposed of. It was said if no traces were found in the cellar other parts of the premises would be dug up.

Mrs. Winters, following her arrest, was questioned regarding the clothing worn by Catherine on the day of her disappearance, and the police said that, among the other effects, she described the sweater which was found last night.

It was said Dr. Winters probably would be taken to the jail in Muncie, so that he could not communicate with either his wife or Cooper.

SMITH IS SAFE.

On Board U. S. S. California, Mazatlan, Mex., May 30 (via wireless to San Diego, Cal., May 31.)—Officers of the cruiser Albany, who landed through the surf at Aristo today to investigate the case of T. J. Smith, an American under arrest at Tepala, found him confined in jail, but being well treated. They reported that his case was in good hands and that his family is at liberty.

Rimouski, May 29.—Probably more than 1,000 lives and surely not less than 700 were lost when the great Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Ireland sank before dawn today in the St. Lawrence river, ripped open from amidships to stern by the Danish collier Storstad. The estimate varies from 678 to more than 1,100. This was the estimate made here this afternoon, where the hysterical survivors, many of them pitably maimed and almost naked, were being brought. It was based on the fact that the Empress carried 1,437 persons, all told, of whom 399 were rescued and landed here by the ships Eureka and Lady Evelyn. The Storstad at first reported to have more than 300 survivors on board, but has sailed for Quebec after landing only a handful of rescued and a number of dead.

Of those saved, crew members and third class passengers predominated. From partial lists available it was evident that but a mere sprinkling of the saved. Only three names of those in lists of rescued. They were address unstated, and Walter Groaning, and in some landed here, while the people cines and stimulants to relieve made up this afternoon on Montreal.

NO CHANCE TO ESCAPE.

The president of the Canadian Pacific railway issued a statement this afternoon, saying that the Empress had sunk within 14 minutes No one aboard had time to seize his belongings much less to dress Those in the lifeboats were in their night clothes The women suffered most. Only a few were saved, according to the early lists, and indications are that they lacked the strength to combat conditions which confronted them There was not, as was the case on the Titanic, time for calm deliberation and rigid observance of the unwritten rule of the sea, "Women first."

A party of Salvation army members, en route to London, was almost wiped out Laurence Irving, son of the late Sir Henry Irving, is among the missing, and other prominent persons in the first cabin wre unaccounted for late this afternoon When the rescue ships Eureka and Lady Evelyn reached the scene before daybreak they found nine lifeboats from the Empress, all jammed full and many of the occupants wounded. It was still dark. Wreckage covered the river everywhere. The Storstad, her bow badly crumpled, was still on the scene, picking up the living wherever she could In one of the lifeboats crouched Captain Kendall, commander of the Empress, dazed and greatly shaken He had leaped from the deck and had been picked up by members of his crew

Brief wireless calls for help sent out by the Marconi operator were heard by the pilot boat Eureka here, 10 miles from the scene, and the Eureka, followed by the Lady Evelyn, a mail tender, put on forced steam and made all speed for the spot.

It was these two boats that found afloat the few life boats that were launched from the stricken ship and picked up the survivors they contained. Three hundred and thirty-nine were saved by the Lady Evelyn and 60 by the Eureka. Among those saved was Capt. H G Kendall, of the Empress.

Noted Persons Lost.

Most of the first class passengers apparently perished. Among those in the first cabin were Sir Henry Seton-Karr, a noted English lawyer and big game hunter, and Laurence Irving, son of the late Sir Henry Irving, and his wife, Mabel Hackney

Of a party of 140 Canadian Salvation Army members on board, only 20 were rescued. They had left Quebec yesterday evening bound for the army's international conference in London

So quickly did the Empress sink that those passengers fortunate enough to get into the life boats found themselves garbed only in their night clothes No baggage was saved. The condition of the survivors was pitiable. Some had broken arms and legs and all had suffered terribly. L. E Gosselin, a prominent lawyer from Montreal, saved himself by clinging to a raft. When the rescue ships docked here the station platform was converted into a hospital and the townspeople, bringing food and clothing, united in a common effort to aid the sufferers

Twelve bodies with faces covered lay side by side on the wharf. They were passengers who had made the life boats, but who were fatally hurt

Survivors Suffer From Cold.

The sun shone brightly during the forenoon Though the water is still icy, the temperature today was not low enough to increase the suffering of the survivors.

The vast majority of the saved were members of the ship's crew Early estimates here indicated not more than 60 passengers were saved. Besides Captain Kendall, the first and second engineers and the ship's surgeon were rescued. The captain was too overcome to give at first any extended account of the disaster. He had sent a wireless to his line after the vessel was struck saying, "Ship gone."

The residents of Rimouski, numbering 3,000, came silently to the dock, where the dead and exhausted living were being landed, and under the direction of the mayor, H. R. Fiset, gave aid wherever possible. Every doctor in the town was on the scene and many of the injured were taken to private homes. From cedar chests and closets the townsfolk brought garments of all descriptions for those who had lost their belongings. Two headquarters were established—at the wharf and at the station of the Intercolonial railway. At the station those injured and who were not removed to homes were cared for.

Like Titanic Disaster.

The rescue boats, Eureka and Lady Evelyn, found, on reaching the point where the Empress sank, a scene not unsimilar to that which greeted the liners which rushed to the Titantic's aid. They found the ship sunk and the surface of the water fortunately calm, dotted with life bouts and smeared with floating debris.

In the life boats were huddled the survivors, dazed and moaning, some of them dying of injuries sustained in the crash or the rush of leaving the sinking Empress. Few could give anything but incoherent almost hysterical, accounts of what had happened. J L. Black and Mrs. Black, of Ottawa, said they had jumped together into the river. They had been roused by the shock of the collision and, unable to get into a life boat had risked the leap.

They were picked up by a boat from the Lady Evelyn Another survivor was Mrs Patton, of Sherbrooke, Que.

First reports had it that the collier Storstad had also sunk. These proved to be incorrect Though her bow was badly damaged the Storstad was able to keep afloat. Some reports said she had aboard 360 survivors. This, if true, would reduce the death list materially —from more than to less than 700 Among the survivors there 34 were from the Empress cabin

In the partial list of survivors available at 1 o'clock this afternoon appeared the name of only one saloon passenger, that of G W G Henderson, address not given

The Empress of Ireland was valued at $2 000,000, and with her cargo, valued at $250 000, was fully insured

At low tide today the top of her funnels could be seen She is lying in the channel It is thought by navigators that it may be possible to raise her At present the wreck is a menace to navigation

Explosion In Boilers.

The water that poured into the ship's engine room caused an explosion and this forced many to jump. Ernest Hayes an assistant purser, told of leaping from the upper promenade deck He climbed into No 6 life boat

The boat maneuvered about the wreck for a time and found Captain Kendall clinging to a piece of wreckage. He had jumped just before the Empress went down

W Davis of Montreal one of the few survivors able to talk coherently after first landing, said he and his wife had not been awakened by the impact of the collision and knew nothing of the accident until water began to rush into their stateroom He helped his wife to the boat deck, but the big ship had already listed and it was impossible to launch a boat.

Together they crawled on their hands and knees up the sloping deck of the liner The vessel was rapidly sinking. His wife was swept from his grasp. Both were carried down by the suction in the river They clung to a piece of wood and were rescued. The wife was unconscious.

J. W. Longley, a rancher of Canford, B. C., calmly sat on the deck rail and went down with the sinking ship. He held his breath, came up, grabbed the side of a life boat, held to it, and was rescued by the Eureka. William Measures, a Salvation Army bandsman, crept along the rail of the promenade deck and stepped into the water. He swam to a life boat and was rescued

Sailed Yesterday at 4:20 P. M.

The Empress of Ireland, in command of Lieutenant Kendall, royal navy reserve, sailed from Quebec, at 4:20 yesterday afternoon for Liverpool. There was 77 first, 206 second and 504 third class passengers, and a crew of 650.

The Empress of Ireland was a twin screw vessel of 14,191 tons. She was built in Glasgow in 1906 by the Fairfield company, limited, and was owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway company She carried a full wireless equipment

The Storstad registered 6,270 tons. She was built by the Amstrong, Whitworth company at New Castle, in 1911 and her owner is the Dampsk Aktieselk Maratime, of Christiania, Norway She is a single screw vessel and is loaded with coal. She carries a crew of 50 men

The disaster recalls the accident to the sister ship of the illfated vessel, the Emprese of Britain, which two years ago rammed and sank the Collier Helvetia in almost the same pace, that the collision took place this morning.

Those in the first and second cabins known to have been saved up to 3 o'clock this afternoon are: H. W. Henderson, C W Burt, Walter Fenton, Miss Alice Lee, Nashua, Bamahas, Miss E Court Liverpool, England, Walter Erginer, (this may be J. Ersinger) Winnpeg

When the train came from the wharf bearing survivors it was a pitiful sight to see them alight Most of them wore very little clothing Many had to be carried bodily A woman had a broken leg and shoulder and a man had two legs broken They were carried to the hotel opposite the station. H P O'Hara and his little girl, Helen were saved but up to present no news of Mrs O'Hara has been received She probably drowned

Shock Was Terrific.

A young Englishman said that when the ship was struck by the collier the shock was terrific. He was asleep in his cabin He jumped from bed, put on a dressing gown and went directly to wake up two of his friends, telling them he thought the ship was sinking. He then went on deck and came back a second time to see if his friends had left their cabin, but in his excitement he went on the wrong deck The ship then was sinking so fast he could hardly stand He took hold of a rope on the side of the ship and swung into a life boat He said he had not seen his friends and fears they were drowned

Few women and children were saved. They were asleep in their cabins when the ship sank and the accident occurred so quickly they could not be rescued. One woman who was garbed only in a vest jumped overboard and swam to the Lady Evelyn. She was so exhausted, however, that she died a few minutes after she was taken from the water Her identity has not been established.

Praise Rescue Ships.

Both the first and second Marconi operators of the Empress were saved. Edward Bomford, the second operator, was coming on duty when the boat began to sink. He caught the Father Point Marconi station and called for assistance Bamford was saved by falling into a life boat. The other operator, Ronald Furgusson, had to swim for the boat Both operators came back to the Rimouski port on board the pilot boat Eureka Passengers were loud in their praise of the captain and the pilot of the Lady Evelyn and Captain Belandger of the Eureka and their crews.

All of them displayed the greatest bravery, it was declared. A Mr. Mc Williams, of Father Point, also was active in aiding the rescued All of the authorities of Rimouski and Father Point joined in caring for the survivors

The Lady Evelyn, which returned to the scene of the disaster, reported by wireless that she had picked up 17 bodies at 3 o'clock.

Montreal, May 29.—G W. S Henderson, of Montreal, who is among the Empress of Ireland survivors, telegraphed his firm this afternoon, giving the number of dead at 1 030

Some Things We Do

Stationery printed at this office is giving the best satisfaction. Last week we printed 100 statements for a man, and by their aid he collected a small fortune. Two months ago a man bought of us some note paper and envelopes to use when writing to his sweetheart, and now he is married. Another man forged a name on a check printed at this office, and is in jail. Another stole some of our paper with which to make cigarettes—he is dead. A young lady bought some of our paper to curl her hair on, and now she has a beau. (We only have a little of this kind left.) By using our statements a person can collect old accounts, tell fortunes, cause rain, change the color of your hair, have teeth extracted without pain, find out the name of your future wife or husband, be successful in business and get elected to office. Give us a call.

MRS. LYON'S ACHES AND PAINS

Have All Gone Since Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Terre Hill, Pa.—"Kindly permit me to give you my testimonial in favor of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. When I first began taking it I was suffering from female troubles for some time and had almost all kinds of aches—pains in lower part of back and in sides, and pressing down pains. I could not sleep and had no appetite. Since I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound the aches and pains are all gone and I feel like a new woman. I cannot praise your medicine too highly."—Mrs. AUGUSTUS LYON, Terre Hill, Pa.

It is true that nature and a woman's work has produced the grandest remedy for woman's ills that the world has ever known. From the roots and herbs of the field, Lydia E. Pinkham, forty years ago, gave to womankind a remedy for their peculiar ills which has proved more efficacious than any other combination of drugs ever compounded, and today Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is recognized from coast to coast as the standard remedy for woman's ills.

In the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., are files containing hundreds of thousands of letters from women seeking health—many of them openly state over their own signatures that they have regained their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; and in some cases that it has saved them from surgical operations.

A Romance of Extraordinary Distinction

THE MARSHAL

By Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews

Author of The Perfect Tribute, etc.

Copyright, The Bobbs-Merrill Company.

"Sacre bleu!" he flung back in his strong sudden voice. "It is my friend, the marshal Was it you, then, glued up there? Yet another fashion to play with death, eh? Nom d'un chien! You have a star of good luck—you are saved for something great, it must be. Madame," he spoke to the mother, "you should guard this adventurer. He tells me that his life is of importance to his country, yet he risks it with damnable freedom. I caught him kicking over a precipice, and here he is running his neck into danger again. France will lack a marshal and you to blame—yet he is hard to kill, I confess it."

"He is hard to guard, my Seigneur," La Claire answered seriously "I never know the next danger. He is more obedient than the others, yet it is he who will make my hair gray. But he is good, my Francois," and her arm slipped around the boy. She drew him close, as if only now realizing how nearly she had lost him "I believe it is simply that fear is left out of him, as they say in the village. He does not know how to be afraid, le petit"

The stranger turned a glance like a blow on the little fellow. "Francois," he demanded, "what made you still so long at the top of the ladder just now? Were you afraid?"

"No, M'sieur," the child answered. "I was looking at the chateau—the new chateau There is some one living in it now, M'sieur. I thought as I looked that when I grew big and an officer, I might go there and place my soldiers about that chateau. I arranged how to attack it very well. I also arranged how to defend it. There should be infantry to take the little gates while the cavalry kept the defenders busy at the great gate."

The bay horse, restive, whirled and plunged sidewise; the rider sat close yet loose as he played the reins, and in a moment had the beast facing again toward the boy and the woman. His brows down, he stared at the lad with his keen hard glance, but he spoke to the mother.

"Madame," he said, "it is a soldier you have there. I have not heard of another boy who lingers at the top of church steeples to plan military operations. He has a love for the business—if he have the genius also he may go far. He should be instructed." The two waited, attentive, a little astonished to be noticed so long, and then the heavy brows lifted and a smile came into the stern eyes, making them astonishingly kind. "It is my poor house which you have honored with your reflections, M'sieur the Marshal," he flung at Francois. "Come and see me there in the chateau, and I will help you arrange the attack against it. Good day."

There was a clatter of galloping hoofs; the bay mare and her rider were far down the street.

"Who is it, my mother—the fierce gentleman?" Francois asked.

"You are fortunate today, Francois." Claire answered him. "The good God has saved your life from a very great foolishness, and also I think you have made a friend. It is the new seigneur."

CHAPTER IV.

COMING TO HIS OWN.

Possibly the greatest human quality is creativeness. It is an echo of the most characteristic divine quality. Napoleon I was essentially a creator. He breathed into France the breath of a life not before there, he took disorganized masses and made of them invincible armies. He clipped territories from countries and made of them kingdoms, beyond all, he made men. A hero is often crisis-born; Napoleon made the crises and shaped heroes to fit them. Again and again he drew out from the mass of common clay a lump in which his master glance saw the leaven of possibility; he breathed his own conquering, limitless spirit into it, and in a turn the automatom was a great general, ready to do his work, bound to him for life by a chain of devotion unbreakable, unreasoning, self sufficient, a mystery of that astounding personality.

He made great men and then in his lordly way he set them in frames which suited his fastidious sense of fitness. Out of old France's domains he helped himself to lands and castles and gave them with a free hand to his marshals and his generals.

Six years ago, before Waterloo, he had given the new chateau of Vicques and its lands to General the Baron Gaspard Gourgaud, whom he had before then fashioned into a very good pattern of a soldier out of material left over from the old aristocracy. Vicques was a village when "all Gaul was divided into three provinces" of Rome; a village much the same in 1820. It lay in the Valley Delesmontes—"of the mountains"—a league from the little city Delesmontes, whose 6,000 inhabitants constituted it the chief city of this valley of the Jura. Over Vicques hung the mountain called Le Rose, behind Le Rose loomed that greater mountain called Le Raimeu; back of Le Raimeu rolled the Jura range. The ancient road of the days of Julius Caesar ran through Vicques, runs now, the main road straight to Rome. It is kept up at present by the government and one may see a man working on it any day. A little river cuts across the hamlet—the Cheulte; over it arches, steep, like a crooked finger, unbelievably steep, the Roman bridge built in those same times before France was, and used now every hour of every day. Solid and age-defying and dignified, it goes about its business of holding the land together from one day to another as it has done for 2,000 years, as it may do, to all appearances, for 2,000 more. The old road passes over the old bridge high into air and makes an "elbow" as the villagers put it, at its foot, swinging down stream at a right angle; a team of horses rattling down the slope there such an impetus that often bump into the barn of Pierre rames built stolidly at the turn of the elbow, before their driver can stop them. One wonders why the grandfather of the grandfather of Pierre built his barn at this place, but there it stands, and the horses must accustom themselves.

It is a quaint old village sitting under its mountains, gay with its gardens and poppy fields, strung on its little river and its old, old highway, tied together with its steep-arched bridge. The general looked about him with approval when he drove down of a morning from the "new" chateau on the hill. The new chateau, the castle, is 1,000 years old, built before the crusades, in the time of Charlemagne, but yet habitable. It stands not distant from and on the same spur of Le Rose as the old Roman chateau, that pile of tumbled ruins which Francois loved. The castle is a massive square of gray stone with a pointed roof of red tile, four towers flank it, two battlemented, two with spires red tiled. Windows narrow and high and round, meurtrieres in the towers, prick the stretch of masonry, the front facade is battlemented, a hedge of thorns 15 feet high reaches a delicate green arm about its strength; half a mile back a stone wall battlemented, too, defends the place from attack on the mountain side; the mountain rises sharply 800 feet high behind, A park of beech trees stands stately about the castle; above it one sees only the red roofs, and the towers, and glimpses of gray stone. It was like this in the year of 1200; it is like this today.

The Baron-General Gourgaud, taking possession in the month of July, thought it lucky he had not seen this domain of his before, else the vision would have turned his heart from his duty. After a full career almost in boyhood—for the Cross of the Legion of Honor had come to him at 24—after service in the Spanish and Austrian campaigns and diplomatic missions; after saving the emperor's life at Moscow; after Waterloo, Napoleon had chosen him as one of three officers to go with him to St. Helena. The chateau and estate of Vicques had been given to him by the emperor after that brave and lucky moment at Moscow when, the first man to enter the Kremlin, he had snatched the match from a mass of gunpowder which would a moment later have blown up both officers and emperor. But, what with battles and diplomacy, what with years at St. Helena and the years in England after, he had not till this summer of 1820 seen his property. Now, at once his heart went out to it, and he loved it as naturally, as whole-heartedly as if it had come to him through a line of ancestors. The splendid, gray, old pile, the wide green fields, the little village nestling to its castle—all this seemed to the soldier of fortune not a strange new luxury but like coming to his own.

Ten years before he had married; four years after that his wife had died, and the daughter she had left was now a girl of seven, a fairy type of girl, airily and daintily made, quickfooted and quick-witted; unexpected, too, like a fairy, and with a brave and obstinate spirit which gratified her soldier father every day.

"You are perfect in every way but one, Alixe," he said, as he swung her high to kiss her. "You are—"

"I know," the girl interrupted, comrade-like. "I know the fault I have. I am not a boy. But I do not wish to be a boy, father. I would then grow to be a great fierce person with a mustache" and the two laughed together "Men are more like the brutes, like the horses or tigers or lions—like you, father. It is only women who are really people—dumode."

"Indeed!" General Gourgard received the statement with his heavy brows in a tremendous frown, and his eyes gleaming with pride in the defiance. "Is it so, my daughter? I am lucky to have some one who is really a person to save me from being a brute altogether. But all the same you grand lady and person, you can not hand down the name of Gourgaud. You will fly off some day to a brute with a mustache, and leave your father alone in this big chateau, is it not?" He knew her answer, but he liked to hear ie.

"I shall never marry anybody," Alixe announced. "I can not ever love any one like my father."

In spite of the satisfaction which this speech gave him, it was a sadness to the baron that no grandchild of of his name would live in this chateau which he had so soon loved so much. He thought of it many times, and the more keenly he felt the joy of his life the more keenly he felt this missing thread in its pattern. Yet it seemed a disloyalty to Alixe when the memory of the little pleasant boy with the large dark eyes came to him as he told stories to his daughter in the twilight. The story of the battle of Ratisbon it was tonight, and how he he had gone down into that "glorious ditch" and swarmed up the ladder with the French troops under fire.

Alixe's blue eyes flashed and her hands clutched his coat lapels—she loved the tale. Yet into the mind of Gaspard Gourgaud shot the idea that if he were telling it to a boy of his, he might dream how that boy would march away some day and do such a deed with a memory of his father in his soul. Yet no boy could ever have been so dear to him as this girl, gentle and spirited, elusive, caressing, sweetest always in the world.

CHAPTER V

HIS STAR

"Father, father!" Alixe dashed into the library the morning after the tale of Ratisbon. "I told you, mademoiselle, that I was not to be troubled. I am writing my book," the general thundered at the little figure.

Alixe was not impressed. "Do not drop your eyebrows in that way"; she put a forefinger on each bushy line. "It makes you so ugly, father."

He put his arm around her. "What is it you wish? Be quick."

"Oh!" Alixe danced in excitement again. "There is a queer little village boy—but a good boy, father. He has brought you a bunch of lettuce—such white fat lettuce! Will you see him? May I bring him here? He is a very good boy."

"Alixe, you are impayable," the general groaned. "I am your plaything! Yes, bring the good little boy—send for all the village—have in the servants—that will help me with my writing."

Alixe, ignoring sarcasm, had flown. In a minute she was back and led by the hand Francois.

"Ah!" the general greeted him sternly. "My friend, the Marshal! You have already begun the attack on my chateau, it seems?"

"No, my seigneur," the boy answered gravely. "Not yet. I bring you some salade as a present. It is from my mother's garden. I chose the best."

"I thank you," said the general with seriousness. "I am not sure if your mother will thank you equally. It is a good present."

Francois was gratified. La Claire had this morning sent him to the gardens with a wide margin of time, and the inspiration had come as he looked down the gleaming row of white lettuce that he would take a tribute and make a visit which the seigneur had asked him to make. The seigneur would be glad of the lettuce, for had not his father said yesterday that it was the best ever grown, that he would wager there was none such in the village, no, not even in the garden of the chateau. He filled his mother's basket so full that he staggared, and climbed the slope and made his way past the ruins to the left around the lift of Le Rose, across the Pre du Sac, on to the new chateau to the great paved courtyard 100 feet square, past the stables at the left and on to the door. There a big man, dressed beautifully in violet, had refused to let him in, had even refused to take his lettuce to the seigneur, and the boy was about to go off grieved when a wonderful little girl, also in beautiful clothes, but less lovely than the violet ones, had appeared. Like a fairy she looked, he thought, and like a fairy she had changed everything, and now here he was in the presence of the seigneur, accepting thanks, looking about as much as he might and yet be polite, at the unknown splendors of a room in the chateau itself.

General Gourgaud brought down his fist on the table so that it rattled and Francois started—but not Alixe.

"Sabre de bois!" he threw at the two children. "You have ruined my morning between you. I meant to finish those cursed chapters this morning. But let them wait. Having the honor to receive a visit from an officer of high rank, the least I can do is to entertain him. What amusement do you prefer, M'sieur the Marshal? I am at your service."

It was natural to Francois to believe every one kindly, he accepted with simplicity, if with slight surprise, the general's speech.

"Does the seigneur mean it?" he asked.

"But yet," the general shot at him.

"If the seigneur means it," Francois went on promptly, "I know what I wish"

"Parbleu! you do?" General Gourgaud was surprised in turn at this readiness. "What then?"

"The seigneur has fought battles under the great emperor himself?" the boy asked in an awed tone.

"Yes" came the abrupt answer again.

"Think!" whispered the French boy. "To have fought under the emperor!" And the old soldier's heart thrilled suddenly. The child went on. "If the seigneur would tell me a story of one fight—of just one!"

"Ratisbon, Ratisbon!" clamored Alixe, and she scrambled over the arm of his chair to her father's knee and her hand went around his neck. "Tell about Ratisbon and the ditch and the ladders, father. It's true," she nodded at Francois, encouragingly. "It's really true; he was right there." And she went on, addressing the general. "And when that is done, tell about Austerlitz and the soldiers drowning under the ice. And when that is done tell about Wawram and—"

"Halt!" ordered the general. "I have not a week to talk. But I will tell about Ratisbon if you wish." He settled himself into his deep chair and drew the little girl closer; a dark curl caught on the rough cloth of his coat and lay across his square shoulder; she held his thumb tightly with one hand. The boy stood erect in front of them, his knitted peasant cap in his hand, his luminous eyes not stirring from the general's face; outside the hot stillness lay over the park and over the wide fields—where thousands of poppies stretched scarlet heads higher than the wheat; one heard the trampling of horses in the paved courtyard of the castle where the red-roofed stables stood, the distant voices of grooms; in the dim room there was no sound.

"One lived in those days, my children," the abrupt strong voice broke the quiet. "War is terrible, but after all one lives—if one is not killed at once. It happened so to many that day of Ratisbon; many were killed that day." The deep voice stopped, then went on again. "The Austrians held Ratisbon and the bridge across the Danube river. The emperor wished to take the town and that bridge. Marshal Lannes was ordered to do it. You see, my children, the walls were very old but filled with Austrian artillery, and there was infantry on the parapets. An old ditch lay under the walls, a large ditch, dry, but 20 feet high and 50 feet wide. All the bottom of it was a vegetable garden. To take that town it was necessary to go down into that ditch and climb up again to the walls, and all the time one would be under fire from the Austrians on the walls—do you understand that, children? Very well. Twice the marshal asked for 50 volunteers to take the ladders and place them in the ditch. Twice 100 men sprang forward, and it was necessary to choose the 50. Twice they dashed out, carrying the ladders, from behind the great stone barn which had covered them, and each time the detail was wiped out—50 men wiped out. It was like that, my children, the fight at Ratisbon." The brown curl lay unstirred against the dark coat; the shining eyes of the boy held, as if fastened there, to the face of the story-teller. Into the silence came a choking sigh.

Win Two More

Klemme Defeats Clear Lake Saturday and Belmond Tuesday.

The Klemme ball team won two more games during the past week and the count is now five wins and one lost. At Clear Lake, Saturday, Klemme won a listless game by the score of 10 to 5. "Bally" Kluckhohn the old time pitcher was in the box for the locals and was the whole cheese, striking out 15 men and only allowing 5 hits. Only for errors the game should have been a shut out for Klemme. "Bally" came back right, and considering the fact that he had not pitched a game for some years back, was there with the goods. When "Bally" was in his prime there was not a better pitcher in this part of the state, and with a little practice has still got many a good game left in his system. Outside of his superb pitching the features of the game were Parsons' base stealing and Countryman's hitting. The score by innings is as follows:

Three base hits; Countryman; two base hits; Countryman, Lucas; stolen bases; Parsons 4, Magner 2, Williams 1, Lucas 1, Epps 2 F. Kluckhohn 4. Batteries: Clear Lake, Hartman, Hayden, Towne and Carter. Klemme F. Kluckhohn and Lucas.

The locals went down to Belmond, Tuesday and took the "bell" out of Belmond to the tune of 15 to 5. The game was one of the most poorly played on the part of Klemme of any game this season, but at that they had easy pickings, but the Belmond team promises to be stronger in the future. Belmond had a guy with heap much smoke and it rather got the Klemme boys goat the first two innings, but in the third inning the fireworks started and before the fog cleared off they had scored 13 runs and much of the swell head and steam was taken from Mr. Pitcher. The Klemme team started out rather poorly and presented Belmond 4 scores during the first three innings but after that settled down and played fairly good ball. In the third inning every man on the Klemme team scored and four of them twice and it was sure a merry go-round. After that inning the locals were willing to rest on their laurels, but scored twice more just to show Belmond what they could do, if they so wished.

The following is the score by innings:

M. Constantin, a well known designer abroad, has applied the principle of the "saute vent," or wind deflector, to the wings of an aeroplane, and it is said that surprising results have been obtained. The deflector comprises plates placed forward of the wing and curved upward toward the rear in such a manner that the wind is deflected up and away from the wing. Thus the wings of the aeroplane are protected from direct force of the wind on their upper surfaces. The object of the device is to increase the rarefaction of air above the wing, thereby increasing the lift.

Some Englishmen do not take kindly to the suggestion that a monument to George Washington should be placed in Westminster abbey. "Are we," asks the London Outlook, "to have a monument of Washington in the abbey, but none to the men and women and children who were his victims? Then let us be logical for once and erect another monument to the late President Kruger. Equally with Washington, he had the two necessary qualifications—he was the mortal enemy of England, and he persecuted a British population. What more is requisite?"

The Ravenwood plan of raising money for the church originated in a town named Ravenwood, somewhere in Missouri Each parishioner is to bring to church every Sunday a certain number of eggs. These are to be stamped with the date, and the church s stamp will be accepted by the dealers as a guaranty of the freshness of the product. Consequently it is expected that Ravenwood eggs will command a higher price in the market than other eggs It looks as though the office of egg collector might rival in importance that of the pastor

MAN'S BODY CRUSHED TO PULP IN GEARING OF MISSOURI DREDGE

Starts Machinery Accidentally Trying to Stay Fall Over Side of Boat.

Council Bluffs, Ia., June 8.—Joseph Batchelder, of Riverton, met a horrible death on the dredge boat along the Missouri river, a few miles below Council Bluffs, near Percival, last night, being literally crushed and mangled to death. He was unmarried, but his parents and other relatives live at Riverton.

Young Batchelder was preparing the dredge for the night shift, and in some manner lost his balance and fell. As he did so, he reached out to try to clutch something that would stay his drop into the water below, and in some manner grabbed the throttle of the engine, starting the machinery.

One of his feet was caught in the machinery, and the merciless steel caught him and dragged him up to his waist, and then literally disemboweled him. He was in terrible shape when some of the other workmen stopped the machinery and released him from his position. He was so badly injured he died within an hour.

IDA COUNTY DEMOCRATS STAGE FIGHT FOR CONTROL

Ida Grove, Ia., June 8.—One of the side features of the primaries this week was an upheaval in the Ida county democratic camp. It is not often that there is a fight in Ida county over the election of democratic delegates, but there was one in every precinct of the county. Opposed to the "slate" of the organization were those who wanted to put Julius Rohwer in as democratic county chairman Maj A C Johnson being in command The Johnson forces won in seven of the 12 townships, and Rohwer, who recently was elected to the office of state consul of the Iowa Modern Woodmen, will be the next democratic chairman.

CHINAMAN RETALIATES ON HOSTILE MOVEMENT

Sac Sun: Tom Fong, who recently had purchased an air gun, was practicing with it in the garden at the rear of his laundry, and Councilman J. A. Anthony, who chanced to step outside the back door of his restaurant in that locality, in sport picked up a piece of brick and hurled it at the Chinese marksman. With no malicious intent, but acting upon a quick impulse, the Chinaman discharged his weapon in the direction of the councilman and a BB shot was lodged almost in the center of his forehead. After the bullet was removed by a surgeon Councilman Anthony mentioned the matter to Mayor Gishwiller, who paid a visit to the marksman and heard his explanation. Later, upon instruction of the mayor, the city marshal accompanied the Chinaman to the mayor's office, where a fine of $5, with $2 costs, was assessed for discharging a firearm within the city limits. The Chinaman did not retaliate by filing information against the councilman for throwing a brickbat, but as the matter stands the parties to the sheoting are about even—the councilman was shocked and the Chinaman was fined.

Open Competition Rule Adhered to in All Lines—Coal Men Raise Question.

Des Moines, Ia., June 6.—A delegation of Iowa coal mine operators held a session with the state board of control yesterday and arrived at a better understanding as to sale of Iowa coal to Iowa institutions. The delegation appeared for the purpose of trying to induce the board to buy only Iowa coal. At the last letting of contracts Iowa operators secured the business at only five of the state institutions. What they want is a way they can get it all.

The board showed the specifications and the bids and offers. The coal is all bought strictly on the B. T. U. basis, or on that of heat units rather than bulk alone. It is a matter of competition in price alone. The law is very strict as to letting contracts to the lowest bidders and the board would have no right to deviate from the rule.

The operators went away very much better satisfied with the situation than they had been before. They suggested one small change in the specifications which seemed to give advantage to outsiders over many of the Iowa mines in relation to the screening of the coal. The change will be made and Iowa operators will make an effort to get all the business of the state.

The board of control has had trouble of the same kind in regard to flour and meats and other products, and while the preference is always given to Iowa bidders wherever other things are equal, the competitive feature can not be overlooked.

REQUISITION FORWARDED TO CANADA FOR MEYER

Des Moines, Ia., June 6.—Attorney General George Cosson has received notice from W. J. Bryan, secretary of state, that the requisition papers for Franz Meyer, held at Winnipeg for alleged abduction of Elizabeth Huppertz of Oelwein, have been forwarded to the Canadian government by the officials at Washington. The hearing on the extradition will be held at Winnipeg today. If Meyer fights too hard, the attorney general has decided to drop the attempt to return him to Iowa for punishment, and to prosecute him in the Canadian courts. The only crime which Meyer can be charged with in Iowa is abduction, punishable by a sentence of not to exceed 10 years in the penitentiary. In Canada, the officials say he can be prosecuted for rape, which under the Canadian law is punishable by life imprisonment and a whipping.

REVIEWING STIRRING RACES OF OLD STEAMBOAT DAYS

Muscatine, Ia., June 6.—The opening of the resort season on the upper Mississippi river has brought about a revival of stormy scenes on the Mississippi, such as were so interestingly told by Mark Twain. A rivalry which exists between the Streckfus and the Wisherd steamboat line companies has resulted in a schedule contest Several races between the largest boats of the two leading river steamer lines have attracted wide notice and others are anticipated. Two steamers, each carrying 2,000 passengers raced from Davenport to Muscatine, a distance of 30 miles and during the entire race neither boat lost sight of the other in the winding channel of the stream When with the stacks belching forth smoke in dense columns and the engines responding to the conflict, one or the other boats would surge ahead, the cries from hundreds of voices brought back recollections of earlier days to the veteran rivermen.

AUTO HURLS MINISTER AND WIFE IN MISSOURI

California Junction, Ia., June 6.—Rev. Harvey Hostetler and wife, of California Junction, had a narrow escape from death when their automobile turned turtle and threw them into the Missouri river. Both managed to escape the overturned machine and made their way home on foot, leaving their automobile in the river. The Hostetlers had been to Noble Lake and were returning on a road close to the river. The automobile skidded, turned completely over and fell into the river, taking both passengers with it.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., June 6.—A camping party came to a sad end yesterday afternoon when Mrs. George Atwood wife of a former hotel man here, was killed two miles south of Vinton when an automobile turned turtle. WOMAN SEARCHING FOR HER SALESMAN HUSBAND

Dubuque, Ia., June 6.—The Dubuque police are searching for Stephen Smith, of Chicago, a traveling salesman, who was last seen in Dubuque on April 30 and who has been missing since that date. His relatives fear that he has met with foul play. Smith is married and the father of four children. Greatly alarmed at her husband's absence and the fact that she has not received any word from him since April 30, Mrs. Smith arrived in Dubuque Tuesday and asked the assistance of the police in her search. The case was taken in charge by Chief of Police Gilleis and two detectives and is still in progress. Mrs. Smith, it was reported, intends to remain in Dubuque to await developments. She is of the belief that her husband has been murdered.

TAXI BANDITS MAKE SEVERAL BIG HAULS

New York Police on Trail of Daring Quintet, Working in Heart of the City.

New York, June 8.—Joseph Longo, a chauffeur, and James Fay, a pool room owner, were held today, charged with participation in the holdup yesterday of two employes of the American Can company, who were robbed of nearly $3,000, part of the weekly pay roll. Fred Kelley, arrested previously, confessed, according to the police, that he had driven the car in which the men made their escape. He said Longo hired him.

Joseph Reardon, 27 years old, a steamfitter, was arrested today as a material witness, and other arrests were expected to be made.

The police say Kelley confessed to being the driver of the automobile in which the two robbers escaped after the holdup. He is said to have implicated five men.

The detective department was working today on the theory that the holdup of the American Can company employes was the work of some men who, earlier yesterday, held up two clerks of the Masury Paint company, in Brooklyn, and robbed them of a satchel containing $3,000 drawn for the weekly payroll. These two robbers also used an automobile to escape.

A third holdup on which the police are working resulted in a loss of $500 to McKenzie, Vorhees & Gmelin, architects, although the five robbers overlooked two bundles of money, each containing $500. An employe of the architects was taking $1,500 into the offices when his hat was knocked off and while he stooped to recover it the men seized one of his bundles. The five men escaped down the elevator and sped away in an automobile

MAID SAYS HUBBY OF DIVA IS FLIRT

Chicago, June 8.—If Madame Schumann-Heink, who is suing her husband, William Rapp, jr., for divorce is to attend the Wagnerian festival in Bairenth, Germany, June 15, as she earnestly desires, she must leave her case in the hands of her attorneys and hurry away for the defense has not yet begun and today was devoted to reading depositions of New York witnesses.

Further testimony that William Rapp was often at the New York apartments occupied by Mrs Catherine E. Dean, named in the diva's bill, was presented at the morning session of court. Few spectators were present and the attorneys hurried the reading of the depositions.

In her written testimony, one witness Mrs. Elizabeth Hauk, who said she had often seen Mr Rapp at the Dean Apartments replied to a question: Is Mr Rapp fat or thin," by saying "Not so thin—just nice"

She also said she had frequently seen him "out walking with Pluto." Mrs. Dean's dog Pluto the dog also appeared in the deposition of Lillian Schmidt daughter of the Dean apartment owner, who told of being hired by Mark Harrison the actor, who was said to have also been a frequent visitor there, to take the dog out for exercise

The girl testified she saw Rapp at the Dean apartment wearing an apron and fixing the stove She declared Mrs Dean asked him to buy some meat and called him "honey."

"Once," said the girl, "Mrs. Dean showed me a letter from Mr. Rapp. She kissed the letter and I pretended I did not see it She let me read the letter. I don't remember what it said, but it ended "your faithful Billie"

Loved His "Nonnie."

Mrs. Francis J. Ashton, an auburn haired nurse who for five months lived in Mrs. Dean s apartments, was questioned and her close acquaintance with the doings of Mrs. Dean and Rapp kept the attention of the crowded court room and apparently were of intense interest to the diva who listened intently. A letter identified by Mrs. Ashton as written by Rapp to Mrs. Dean was in evidence Some of the sentences were: "Dear Nonnie, this morning brought me a windfall—three letters from you and a postal from my sister."

"You are just simply 'Nonnie.' God watch over you and keep you. I do not pray, but that wish is as near a prayer as I can come"

"I am falling in love with you all over again and long to have you at the head of my modest little home, where your little heart and hands would control everything"

Another letter said

"Dearest Nonnie, please sign 'Nonnie' and not 'Katie,' anyone may use the name Katie, but Nonnie is to be secret and sacred. I look up to you and worship you and am entirely your Billy."

The closing words of another letter read by the attorneys were:

"You are the one woman who can give me happiness once my soul is at peace with itself Your darling, Billy."

Over the objection of counsel for the defendant a letter was introduced in which Rapp asked Mrs. Dean to write a forcible letter to Madame Schumann-Heink and to threaten her with a suit for damages if the diva coupled Mrs. Dean's name with that of Mr. Rapp. In the letter Rapp gave an outline of the letter which he wished to have written to Madame Schumann-Heink in Chicago.

A letter couched in similar language and received by the singer from Mrs. Dean was later received.

Mrs. Ashton told of having seen Mrs. Dean kiss letters which she said were from "her Billy." "What did you see Mrs. Dean and Mr. Rapp do?" she was asked.

"I saw them hold hands, they kissed each other and sat in each other's laps," was the reply.

Tarrytown, N. Y., June 8.—Two prominent members of the Industrial Workers of the World arrested a week ago, while proclaiming the rights of free speech, were brought today from White Plains jail and their cases temporarily disposed of with a sign of the disturbance for which the anxious village fathers had carefully prepared. The local police magistrate denied the motion of counsel that they be allowed to appear before a grand jury but to give time for further legal maneuvers postponed their cases until next Friday. Bail for each of the two set at $200.

Alexander Berkman, who promised to bring hundreds of syndicalists from New York, Paterson, Passaic arrived in town with Elizabeth Sinclair and half a dozen others but no man explained the absence of a single band of I. W. W. followers, saying they "expected them later"

CROWD BOOES VERDICT AGAINST JIMMY CLABBY

Sydney N. W. S June 8—Jimmy Clabby, the Indian middleweight was given the worst of an unpopular decision here last night in a scheduled boxing match with Jeff Smith, a Philadelphia fighter who has been appearing in Australia several years. So little did the crowd like the referee's judgment, that the decision broke on a riot. The police had difficulty controlling the audience and the referee was hissed and booed.

This was Clabby's first fight since coming here from San Francisco, where he made a favorable impression. The opinion generally expressed by sporting writers and experts at boxing who attended the fight was that Clabby had been treated unfairly

GOVERNOR OF KANSAS IS CLEARED BY JURY

Topeka, Kan., June 8.—Mrs. Lizzie West, of Wichita, Kan., is not entitled to damages from George H Hodges, governor of Kansas, for alleged assault and battery, a jury decided today after deliberating two minutes.

Mrs. West alleged, while on a visit to the governor's office on April 9, that the governor struck her during a struggle for possession of papers in the case of Frank Sullivan, a convict, to secure whose release Mrs West had called at the executive offices.

Governor Hodges denied the charge. In his instructions to the jury Judge Dana contended Mrs. West had no right to the papers.

All of the passengers on the train felt that they had a miraculous escape. After viewing the wrecked buildings they had little doubt that the train would have been wrecked had it caught the full force of the tornado.

HIGH WIND CAUSES SOME DAMAGE AT SIOUX FALLS

Sioux Falls, S. D., June 6.—High wind, of hurricane proportions, swept over this city and vicinity at an early hour today, tearing awnings to shreds, breaking many plate glass windows in business places, partially wrecking some small buildings in the city and vicinity and breaking down a number of trees. The wind was so fierce that many of the most substantial buildings trembled and rocked. Since yesterday afternoon an aggregate of 2.21 inches of rain has fallen in this vicinity, according to the government gauge, making a total of 2.76 inches during the past 36 hours. Many basements in the business district are flooded.

THURSDAY NIGHT STORM REGISTERED IN EASTERN IOWA

Muscatine, Ia., June 6.—A windstorm which swept over Muscatine Thursday night caused thousands of dollars' damage along the Mississippi river front, where scores of pleasure boats were swamped by high waves. A number of them have been lost. The waves and wind, together with a small cloudburst which followed, caused a washout of levees and embankments along the Mississippi river here. The storm was the most severe in years, and resulted in many small buildings in the rural districts being demolished. Several serious fires resulted from lightning.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., June 6.—One of the worst storms in recent years passed over this vicinity Thursday night. Tents and paraphernalia at "The World at Home" carnival grounds were ruined, causing loss estimated at $7,500. Damage caused by heavy rain in Bever park will amount to $2,500.

RELIEF FORCE SENT FROM MASON CITY TO SANBORN

Mason City, Ia., June 6.—Calls for assistance at Sanborn, Ia., stricken by last night's storm, were received here today A wrecking train was sent west to assist in repairing damage and all available wire repair men in town were taken along.

COMMERCIAL CLUB WIRES SYMPATHIES TO TOWNS

B. H. Kingsbury, president of the Commercial club, and W. E. Holmes, secretary, today sent the following telegrams to the mayors of Hospers, Ia., and Sanborn, Ia., both of which towns were stricken by a tornado last night:

"Sioux City sympathizes deeply with you and your people in the losses and suffering incident to the storm. Is there anything we can furnish, or can we help in any way? Do not hesitate to call on us."

VILLA "CUSSES OUT" DICTATOR BY WIRE

Begs Huerta Not to Leave as He Will Be There Soon and Wants to See Him.

Vera Cruz, June 8.—President Huerta is now in daily communication with Gen. Francisco Villa, according to a report brought here by a refugee, but the character of their communication is somewhat unconventional.

General Villa, according to the report sent one of his telegraphers within the federals lines. He tapped a wire and sent to Huerta a message in which Villa called his enemy unpleasant names and urged him not to hasten his departure from the capital as Villa was anxious to see him before he left. Villa requested Huerta to wait, saying he soon would be in the capital.

President Huerta, according to the story, appreciating the grim humor of the situation, gave orders that any similar messages should not be withheld but delivered to him immediately. Since this order was issued Villa, according to the refugees, has not disappointed Huerta one day Though the wording of his messages are always different each message is said to be more vituperative than the other. The daily receipt of these messages is said to have become something of a joke at the national palace.

BIG LONDON BANK FAILS IN EFFORT TO BACK PLUNGER

London, June 8.—Chaplin, Milne, Grenfell & Company, limited, the well known firm of merchants and bankers in Princess street, suspended today. The company was registered in 1899 to take over the business of Morton, Chaplin & Company, (formerly Morton, Rose & Company). Its authorized capital is $1,750,000.

The firm is an old established one, with high reputation and excellent family connections. It conducted general and private banking and a company for promoting business. The directors include Ernest Chaplin, G. Grinell Milne and R. W. Skipwith.

Speculation Is Blamed.

The failure is believed to be the result of large operations in Grand Trunk by Arthur Morton Grenfell, formerly a member of the firm and whose dealings recently have been the subject of much gossip. It is said saveral Canadian and other companies wherein he was interested are involved. Earl Grey, whose daughter was Grenfell's first wife, is reported among the heavy losers.

Banking and other interests have been working for some weeks to reestablish Grenfell's affairs in the interest of many stockholders of the companies he controlled. The firm recently issued a notice that Grenfell had not been connected therewith since February 17.

The affairs of the bank were largely involved with those of the Canadian agency, limited, which is controlled by Arthur Grenfell. He and the Canadian agency had been engaged in a campaign for the purchase of a controlling interest in the Grand Trunk railway, but when those securities depreciated the obligations he had created were taken over by a strong group of financial sources in order to protect the many stock exchange firms involved.

Think Bank Is Solvent.

The bank's loss through loans to Grenfell and withdrawals of business consequent on his operations caused the bank to suspend. It is believed, however, to be entirely solvent, but time will be required to liquidate the assets in order that depositors may be paid.

The total of the deposits is understood to have been greatly diminished in the last month and the amount outstanding is believed to be about $1,250,000.

Further failures in connection with this one are not expected.

Arthur Grenfell recently formed a syndicate for the purchase of a controlling interest in the General Petroleum company of California and Earl Grey has been in California in connection with the negotiations. Grenfell is retiring from the transaction which will now be carried through by other members of the group.

Family to Aid Him.

The Grand Trunk transaction attempted by Grenfell is considered as one of the most daring stock operations launched here in years

In the notice posted on the doors of the bank, which has been surrounded by a crowd since morning, the firm expresses regret at having to suspend and states that its books have been placed in the hands of chartered accountants to prepare a statement.

The members of Grenfell's family are coming to his assistence in the settlement of his affairs.

New York, June 6.—The suspension of Chaplin, Milne, Grenfell & Co., excited some surprise in this market, private assurance having been received here a fornight ago, when Arthur Grenfell's embarrassment became generally known, that the firm was in no wise involved.

VERA CRUZ TRADESMEN ARE BOOSTING PRICES

Vera Cruz, Me., June 8.—Brigadier General Funston announced today that he contemplated appointing a committee of Mexican residents and American army officers to investigate the increased cost of living in Vera Cruz since the occupation.

Complaints have reached the general that wholesale dealers and importers have been squeezing the retail dealers and hotel keepers. Several importers are known to have considerable stock on hand, but they are forcing up the prices. It is said that if the investigation discloses the existence of such conditions General Funston may seek permission, from the war department, to sell army subsistence to individuals, in order to restore prices to a normal level.

While employed as a brakeman he fell from a train at Gibson, Okla., and lost both legs. He secured $18,000 in damages from the railroad company, part of which he invested in oil property at Wichita Falls. He went to Denver last March.

Wise's death is reported here to have been due to stomach trouble and the effects of voluntary starvation, undergone in an effort to effect a cure.

SENATORS SHELVE ANTI-TRUST BILLS PASSED BY HOUSE

Washington, June 8.—The Senate interstate commerce committee today voted to report out only the trade commission measure of the trust bills The action was construed by many as an indication of limitation of the administration's program at the present session of congress. The trade commission, railroad securities, and anti-trust bills all passed the House last night.

There was no record vote In a general discussion some senators opposed the move and others declared themselves opposed even to the bill at the presen time. Chairman Newlands, said the committee later might take up supplemental legislation and issued this statement:

"The committee determined today to segregate the trade commission from the supplemental legislation and authorized me to present an amendment in the nature of a substitute for my original bill for a trade commission. The committee concluded to name the trade commission the federal trade commission, instead of the interstate trade commission, in order to clearly distinguish it from the Interstate Commerce commission.

Need Not Fear, He Says.

"The fear expressed that this bill will inaugurate a wholesale inquisition of the 350,000 corporations of the country is groundless. This power is substantially the same as is now possessed by the bureau of corporations, and certainly the powers of that bureau have not been exercised in such a way as to annoy the honest business of the country

"The committee will continue its consideration of supplemental legislation regarding interlocking directorates, holding companies, railway securities, etc., and its action may be on the line of amendments to the trade commission bill or of separate legislation."

Some administration senators declared the committee's action did not foreshadow a curtailment of the trust program at this session. Those inclined to that view point out that the committeee's action came after conferences of some of the members with the president and expressed the pressure for an adjournment before the fall campaign.

TRHEE BUSINESS MEASURES ARE ADOPTED BY HOUSE

Washington, June 8.—All three bills on the administration trust legislation program passed the House late yesterday and were sent to the Senate for action.

Opposition melted when the final test came, and the motion went through quickly The Covington interstate trade commission bill was passed without a record vote, and the Clayton omnibus trust measure received 275 votes to 54 against it, and the vote on the Rayburn railroad capitalization bill was 325 to 12.

The clerk hardly had finished the last roll call before the House had settled down to consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, one of several supply measures that must be disposed of before the session ends. The adjournment problem now is squarely up to the Senate, and the democratic leaders on that side of the capitol are expected to agree upon a program in the near future

Action on the trust bills in the House came unexpectedly. The three measures had been agreed to in "committee of the whole" after weeks of speech making, consideration of the Rayburn bill as amended by the committee being completed late this afternoon. When the trade commission bill came before the House for a final vote Progressive Leader Murdock moved that it be sent back to the interstate commerce committee with instructions to report the Murdock bill as a substitute This was rejected, 151 to 19, and the pending bill was passed without a roll call. Then the votes on the other two measures were taken in rapid succession.

Representative White, of Ohio, was the only democrat to vote against the Clayton bill, and all the progressives voted for it except Representative Chandler, of New York.

Forty-three republicans and 16 progressives joined the majority in supporting the measure. They were.

Republicans — Anderson, Barton, Burke of South Dakota, Campbell, Carey, Crampton, Curry, Davis, Dillon, Fair, Frear, French, Gardner, Good, Green of Iowa, Haughen, Hawley, Helgeson, Hodgson of Washington, Kelley of Michigan, Kennedy of Iowa, Kent, Kinkaid of Nebraska, La Follette, Lenroot, McKenzie, McLaughlin, Mapes, Mondell, Morgan of Oklahoma, Moss of West Virginia, Porter, Roberts of Nevada, Scott, Sinnott, Sloan, Smith of Idaho, J. M. C. Smith of Michigan, Stafford, Sutherland, Tower, Vare and Woods—43.

Progressives—Bell of California, Bryan, Copley, Falconer, Hinsbaugh, Hulings, Kelly of Pensylvania, Lindbergh, MacDonald, Murdock, J. I. Nolan of California, Rupley, Temple, Thomson of Illinois, Walters and Woodruff—16.

The eight republicans and four democrats who voted against the Rayburn bill were:

Democrats—Bartlett, Buchanan of Texas, Garner and Witherspoon—4.

The Rayburn Bill.

Close regulation and control of the stocks and bonds of railroads by the Interstate Commerce commission is proposed by a substitute for the Rayburn bill prepared by the House interstate and foreign commerce committee and considered by the House as the last measure of the administration anti-trust program. The committee divided the Rayburn measure into two sections in order that one might stand if the constitutionality of the other failed in the courts. The bill makes it unlawful for any common carrier to issue stocks, bonds, notes or other evidences of indebtedness without the approval of the commission.

The bill broadens the powers of the commission to require information from railroads and other common carriers and prescribes an elaborate system of reports. The commission would be authorized by the bill to require periodical or special reports on the financial condition of railroads, balanced statements of receipts and expenditures in relations to capital accounts, and all other financial transactions.

The Clayton Bill.

The Clayton bill, a part of the administration anti-trust program, carries provisions designed to strengthen and support the Sherman law and other acts against monopolies and restraints of trade. As framed by administration leaders and considered by the House the bill contained.

Prohibitions against price discrimination, or arbitrary refusal to sell natural products, and against the enforcement of conditional leases, or contracts of sale under which lessees or purchasers agree not to deal in the products of competitors of the seller or lessor, a provision that decrees in suits brought by the government under the anti-trust law shall be final evidence in suits brought against the defendant by others, involving the anti-trust law; provisions against holding companies and interlocking directorates in concerns under the jurisdiction of the federal government, and provisions guaranteeing labor and farmers' organizations their legal existence under the Sherman law, limiting the use of the injunction in labor disputes, and providing for jury trials in cases of indirect contempt of court.

In addition the bill clears up various jurisdictional questions and questions of procedure which have arisen in the administration of the anti-trust laws.

Trade Commission Bill.

The Covington trade commission bill, the first measure on the administration anti-trust program, as considered in the House, would create a commission with broad inquisitorial powers over corporations engaged in interstate commerce. The bill would turn over to a commission of three members the power now held by the bureau of corporations in the department of commerce and confer on the commission additional powers.

The bill provides for the appointment of three commissioners, no more than two of one political party, by the president. The commissioners would serve six years at $10,000 and employ a secretary at $5,000. The commissioners would be barred from engaging in any other vocation while serving.

After abolishing the bureau of corporations and the positions of commissioner and assistant commissioner of corporations the bill would turn over the organization and powers of the bureau to the new commission. It then provides that all corporations, with a capital of not less than $5,000,000, except those now subject to the interstate commerce commission, shall submit annual reports, "records of its organization bondholders and stockholders and financial condition" to the commission. The commission may also designate corporations having capitalization of less than $5,000,000 from whom it desires reports It may call for special reports in addition to the regular annual statements required by the bill, and would provide a penalty of $100 a day for delay in filing reports.

Upon the direction of the president, the attorney general or either house of congress, the commission would be authorized to investigate and report the facts relating to any alleged violations of the anti-trust laws. The commission would also recommend possible readjustment of the business of corporations so investigated in order that they migh conduct their business in accordance with the law. When the commission finds information as to any "unfair competition or practice in commerce, not necessarily constituting a violation of the law," it is called upon to report to the president and aid him in making recommendations to congress for remedial legislation.

CHOICE OF POINCARE FOR PREMIER REFUSES

Paris, June 8.—Rene Viviani, who yesterday, was said to have accepted the premiership and to have virtually selected all the members of the new cabinet, today informed President Poincare that he was unable to form a ministry and declined to make any further efforts to do so.

There was heated discussion when the statemen chosen by M. Viviani met informally today to prepare their declaration of policy to be laid before parliament The question whether the new combination should unreservedly support the three-year military service law or modify it, found a hopeless division of opinion. As a consequence of this decision M Viviani at once proceeded to the palace of the Elysee and told the president he had decided to give up his attempt to form a cabinet.

DE LAVAL

We do not believe that a farmer who knows anything about farm machinery could be induced to buy any separator other than a De Laval after he had seen the latest improved De Laval machine and had given it a trial.

It is a fact that 99% of all separator buyers who do SEE and TRY a DE LAVAL machine before buying, purchase the De Laval and will have no other. The 1% who do not buy the De Laval are those who allow themselves to be influenced by some other consideration besides real genuine separator merit.

If you are thinking about buying a cream separator we will consider it a favor if you will permit us to set up a De Laval for you on your own place and have you give it a fair trial.

You will be under no obligation to buy the machine if it does not make good all our claims, and should you decide to keep it and cannot conveniently pay cash, you may do so on such easy terms that it will actually save its cost while you are paying for it.

New Engine Arrives

The new special electric engine for the light plant arrived Monday and will likely be installed ere this paper reaches it's readers. It certainly is a dandy and will develope sufficient power to handle the plant with a capacity load for some time to come.

It is a 25-horse power Fairbanks-Morse, and some idea of it's size can be realized when you know that it's fly wheels weigh 5700 pounds. The smaller engine will still be used and Klemme can now boast of a very well equipped small town electric light plant.

First Visit In 30 Years

J. C. Kirkwood and son, Owen, of Little Falls, New York, arrived Monday, for a visit with the former's brother, A. Kirkwood and family. This is the first time in over thirty years that these two brothers have met and it is needless to say that the visit will be enjoyed by both.

R. F. Kienst, a farmer near Titonka, has a herd of Holsteins that are infected with tuberculosis. He had twenty-six head shipped in from Wisconsin early last spring and out of that number twenty of them were infected with the dread disease. They will be shipped to Sioux City where they will be sold to the rendering works. It means a loss of over $1,000.

Among the items we neglected last week was the leaving of Mrs. R. H. Fouts, who has been staying with her daughter, Mrs. A. D. Gimer for a visit with relatives at Abbot and South Dakota points. Also the departing of Mrs. J. E. Harlend and children for a months visit with relatives and friends at Stuart and Casey.

A COLUMN OF FUN.

From Tit-Bits.

"Could you do something for a poor old sailor?" asked the wanderer at the door.

"Poor old sailor'" echoed the lady who had opened the door

"Yes'm I follered the wotter fer 20 years."

"Well," said the lady, as she slammed the door in his face after a critical look thereat, "you certainly don't look as if you'd ever caught it up."

Whistler and Oscar Wilde did not love each other much, and as they constantly met in London drawing rooms their sparring was pretty deadly

On one occasion, Whistler made a remark so brilliant as to provoke applause even from Wilde.

"By Jove, Whistler," he exclaimed, "I wish I had said that."

"Never mind," replied Whistler, "you will."

The Lord Mayor of Manchester has a merry wit, and this is one of the stories he told in his racy speech at the Manchester motor show dinner. A motorist drew up at the Midland hotel, Manchester, just as one of the city fathers was leaving that establishment.

"Hey, my man," quoth the motorist, "do you mind looking after my car while I go inside for a few minutes?"

"Sir," said the irate dignitary, "do you know I am a member of the city council?"

"Oh!" rejoined the motorist. "That doesn't matter, I can trust you?"

Five young men trooped into a shop each to buy a new hat Scenting fun, the man behind the counter waxed jocular.

"Are you all married?" he inquired.

"Yes!" they chorused.

"Then I'll give a hat to the man who can truthfully say he has not kissed any woman but his own wife since he was wedded."

"Hand over the hat," said one of the party. "I was married yesterday."

One of the others was spinning the yarn to his wife when his laughter suddenly gave way to fear.

"I say, John," she asked, "how was it you didn't bring one?"

"Gone to bed," was his wife's reply.

"I hope he's not ill"

"No, I sent him to bed as a punishment for swearing"

"Swearing?" repeated Jones; "I'll teach him to swear"

Without waiting for a light the angry father rushed upstairs to interview the culprit, only to fall over a loose stair-rod and bump his chin At once he became exceedingly fluent and when the air had cleared he heard his wife call, gently

"Better come down, dear I'm sure Tommy has heard enough for the first lesson"

Prizes Waiting for Aviators.

From Tit-Bits.

There is plenty of encouragement for aviators who wish to outdo the feats already accomplished by flying men, and for designers and inventors who seek to perfect the biplane and monoplane. Prizes ranging in value from £1,500 to $100,000 are open to be won during 1914, and it is safe to affirm that this year will see the performance of even greater flying feats than have been already accomplished

The most interesting prize, perhaps, is the $100,000, which is being offered by the Union Aerienne which is formed of members of the Aero club in France and is supported by the French government. This prize is offered to the constructor of an aeroplane affording the greatest degree of safety, and several recompenses of $4 000 and upwards will be distributed to inventors of machines which the jury may consider worthy of encouragement.

Complete liberty is left to the competitors as to the manner of attacking the problem, and the competition is open to persons of every nationality. The jury, which will consist of 10 members appointed by the union, and five nominated by the ministers of public works marine and war, will examine the machines submitted on different dates, fixed by itself.

A prize of $50,000 is waiting for the first aviator to fly from Europe to America, while there promises to be an exciting contest for the prize of $25,000 for the winner of the seaplane race round Great Britain. Everyone will hope that Mr Hawker, who made such a gallant attempt last year, will again enter this arduous test and emerge successful.

Another great competition of particular interest to this country is the reliability trial, which will probably be held by the government in April next, to discover the best British-built engine. There have been about 30 responses to this tardy effort of the authorities to encourage the home industry. The first prize is $25,000, and there will be an additional $200,000 in orders to the firms who produce the best work.

Among the smaller prizes might be mentioned the $5,000 offered for a seaplane race, open to all nationalities, probably to be flown between two Riviera resorts; a prize of $4,000 for an "all-round France" competition, with 16 stopping places, and a similar prize for a circuit of Paris. Five hundred pounds is being offered by a newspaper for a flight across Africa, from Cairo to the Cape, a distance of about 5,000 miles, while $2.000 is being offered by the Paris municipal council for a race from Paris to a capital, probably in the near east, via Vienna and Budapest. The same sum is offered by the Aero club of France for the longest direct non-stop flight; while $1,800 is offered for the greatest number of hits on a painted target in a competition for bomb-throwing from aeroplanes.

Yellow Fever on the Amazon.

Iquitos is a town on the Amazon river, within four degrees of the equator. An equatorial swamp not only surrounds the place, but thrusts invading swales into the city itself. Open sewers run the length of the principal streets, which are quite innocent of paving. Yet an American surgeon, loaned from the public health service, and loyally supported by the Peruvian government of the place, has driven out yellow fever even under such disadvantages as these, and reduced the general death rate from 49 per 1,000 per year to 28. In the face of such an achievement, what excuse has any American city for harboring preventable disease?

"The emperor!" Francois breathed—"the emperor was there!"

Probably nothing, which had not to do with his daughter, could have touched General Gourgaud as did that tribute. That it was a tribute to his story meant much, but the worship of Napoleon which burst out in the gasp went deeper. The followers of the Corsican never asked for a reason why they adored him; it was a feeling blinder and stronger than love which he inspired, and it lasted in the hearts or his soldiers to the latest moment of the longest life The veteran officer who felt this possession of his own being saw it mirrored in the slim lad who quivered before him, and he loved the lad for it.

"Sapristi!" he growled. "The arm of the Little Corporal reaches a long way. The child has not even seen him, and voila, he loves him."

The child's face flushed. "But yes, my Seigneur," Francois spoke quickly. "But yes. I have seen the emperor."

"You have seen Napoleon?" The general was surprised. "How is that?"

In a boyish fashion, in homely language of his class yet with that dramatic instince which is characteristically French, Francois told his tale as his grandmother had told it to him and to his brothers and sisters—the tale which the children called "Napoleon Comes." The general listened with a sincere interest. As simple in many ways as the child, every least word of his demigod Napoleon was charged for him with authority. He considered deeply when the story was finished.

"My boy," he addressed the lad, "I do not know the law—I am a soldier. Yet by my idea you are Chevalier, created so by the act of the most powerful monarch who ever ruled France—by our Emperor Napoleon. Another monarch sits now on his throne, yet he was in truth France's ruler when he gave that blow on the shoulder which made you a knight; he had the right of an emperor—therefore you are that which he made you—the Chevalier Francois Beaupre. As for the rest"—his brows drew into a bushy line and his eyes gleamed like swords—"do not forget that he himself charged you with a duty to his house; your fate and his name are linked. The time may come when, as the emperor said, you may be a marshal of France under another Bonaparte. But that is a small thing if the time comes when you may help another Bonaparte to come to his right, to rule over France It is that of which you must think till the hour strikes and then it is that which you must give your life for."

Little Francois, the visionary, the hero worshiper, trembled. He had no words to answer the orders leveled at him in those rolling tones. "I will do it, my Seigneur," he said, frightened yet inspired, lifted into a tremendous dizzying atmosphere. And with that a secret which he had told no one, not even his mother, broke forth. "My Seigneur, a strange thing happens sometimes — I have dreams—yet they are not dreams—in broad daylight. I see things—I hear voices—which are not of our village. Three times I saw a long road up a mountain, and over the mountain was a large star. I saw it three times, and once a voice said 'It is the star of the Bonapartes, but also your star, Francois. Follow it.'"

The general was a hard-headed person for all his cult of Napoleon, and vision-seeing appeared to him nonsense. He pooh-hooded at once the idea of a star divided between the house of Bonaparte and a small peasant. "Your mother had better put a wet cloth in your cap," he advised. "Parbleu—seeing stars in midday! Some one-legged old fighter has been gabbling before you about the star of the Bonapartes, and that and a touch of sunstroke in this heat, it may be, have turned you silly. Let me hear no more of stars, but keep at your lesson and learn to be—"

With that he was aware that the boy did not hear him. The light figure was on tiptoes— the large eyes stared at the wall, and the child spoke in an uninflected voice as if something muffled spoke through him.

"I see the star," he said. "I see it through a window where there are iron bars . Ah!" The interjection was in the boy's natural accent, and he shivered violently. "Ugh!" His teeth chattered and he looked about vaguely. "It is like an ice house. I do not like those dreams, they make me so cold. Seigneur, it is late; my mother will not be pleased. And I must stop at the garden and pick the vegetables for supper—carrots and peas. I must hurry to get the peas and carrots."

Little Alixe, clutching her father's thumb, watched as the boy disappeared. Then, to the general's astonishment, she began to sob. "I—I don't know," she answered his quick question, "But I—I think it is because I am sorry the little boy was so cold."

CHAPTER VI.

A GAME OF CARDS.

Hidden in the mechanism of character are springs unsuspected by one's nearest, unknown to one's self, which the habits of every day keep polished and oiled, ready for action. Many times the psychological moment for their use does not arrive, and a life ends with no outside history but commonplace; sometimes in the midst of commonplace the touch falls on the electric button, the coiled wire is sprung, and an ordinary career rises unexpectedly to heroism, or falls as unexpectedly by temptation. It is the habit of years which has prepared the one crisis or the other.

Francois Beaupre—Le Francois of Vicques—sober, laborious, had in him a certain pig-headedness, and also a vein of the gambler which had swollen with use; yet because it had so far brought him only good luck the neighbors called this good judgment. He was a dealer in working oxen; he bought and raised and sold them, and only his wife knew what chances he often took in buying young beeves. It was a simple solid form of speculation, yet it was that. It had given him the custom of taking chances and of confidence in his "luck"—all of which is perhaps no bad thing, yet it prepared a bad think for Francois Beaupre. Up to this time he had been fortunate to a miracle and his bargains were so lucky that he stood highest among his neighbors for keenness and for caution. His house was the largest, his table the most generous, his wife the best dressed of the village; he planned to give his children, particularly young Francois, who was more than a common student, opportunities. Francois should go to the college at Delesmontes. No other man in the place was so comfortable, and because of his genial and simple soul he was not envied. Le Francois was a popular person, and it was a pride to the village that his name and his prosperity were known about the countryside.

On a day in September he left Vicques early in the morning to drive to the market in Delesmontes, a league distant, two pairs of oxen which he had bought as calves for almost nothing from poor stock out of a farm leagues away. He had fed and trained and cared for them till now they were well set up and powerful and smooth working—ready to sell for a good price. Francois kissed his wife and the baby, and called goodby to the children playing in the garden, and left the little place so full of hopeful life, with contentment in his heart. He planned, as he swung along the road whistling, what he would do with the money which he would bring back—800 francs, he believed it would be. Not a clearer head or lighter heart passed that day along the Roman road to Delesmontes. At the market he found that there were few oxen to be disposed of, none which compared to his, and his ideas of value went up—he would get 900 francs for them, which delayed the sale. Eight hundred he might have had easily, but the other was a large price, even for the best. However, Francois was cheerful and obstinate and confident, and such qualities accomplish things—he got his price.

But it came to be, by the time his bargain was closed, 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and he had had no dinner. With the cattle off his hands and the money in his pocket he felt a sense of leisure and of wealth. Hungry as a wolf he felt also, and he turned into the inn of Delesmontes, where the sign of a huge bear, cut out of tin and painted black, swung before the door.

It was pleasant inside in the great clean hall of the inn, 20 feet wide by 40 long. Bars of yellow afternoon sunlight patterned the white scrubbed floor; at the tables of black oak a number of men sat on benches, bottles and glasses before them, and puiled at their pipes, and the clouds of smoke rose to the dark wood ceiling, bluish already with much smoking, against the white-washed walls hung engravings of battles framed in red cherry wood. Doors and windows were open, and through them one saw harvest fields lying gold in sunlight. As Francois sat down he faced a window through which, down the slow slope from Delesmontes perching on the mountain, beyond a stretch of tranquil country, lifted, three miles away, a bunch of roofs, red tiled and brown shingled, and the red spire of a church with a newly gilded ball, his village of Vicques. He sighed hungrily and happily. In half an hour, after a glass of wine and a little bread and meat, he would be on his way there with that comfortable purse of 900 francs in his pocket, eager to tell his good comrade and dear wife of the day's success.

He was alone at this table, but three or four men who he knew slightly, nodded with friendliness across the room; he was a man who inspired friendliness. In the big hall, in all Delesmontes, in all the country was no one happier or more satisfied with life than Francois Beaupre when he entered the Inn of the Bear at 3 o'clock on that sunshiny afternoon of September 8. Before 6 he rose up to leave it a man ruined and broken hearted.

A waitress approached him—a sommelliere—trim in her short calico skirt and white apron, her hair done in the picturesque fashion of the place—braided and turned around the head in the back, in the front parted and laid in two great puffs with a wide blue ribbon between to hold it. The girl took his order; and as she turned to go a man just coming in knocked against her, and apologizing with many words, caught sight of Francois.

"Good day!" he saluted him heartily. "Good day, Monsieur Beaupre," and Francois, friendly always, answered, "Good day," but with a reserve, for he did not recall the man. "You don't remember me? That is natural, for we met but once. Yet I have not forgotten you. It was at the house of my cousin, Paul Noirjean of Devillier—he who also deals in oxen, though not so fortunately as you, perhaps. We met there. I saw you only a few minutes, but I have not forgotten you, and my cousin also speaks very often of Francois Beaupre. He has a great opinion of your judgment."

Now Paul Noirjean was an old acquaintance and a solid man, and though Beaupre did not see him often, living six leagues away, he respected him highly. A cousin of his was to be considered, and Francois was embarrassed that his memory could not focus on the meeting. He tried to cover this with cordiality, and invited the stranger to share his meal.

"Not at all, not at all," the other answered. "Yet we must have a bottle of wine together, but it shall be my bottle."

Francois objected; the man insisted. At length: "See, we will play cards for that bottle," the unknown man suggested, and the cards were brought, and a game of la rame—euchre—was in progress in two minutes.

Meanwhile the wine had come, and Francois, a touch more generous and more cordial for it, was genially sorry when he won and the stranger must pay.

"Tiens! We will play again for another bottle," he announced with a bit of swagger. He was conscious of a right to spend silver in treating his friends, with that fat purse in his pocket.

"No," spoke the stranger—Duplessis, he had said his name was. "No. I have drunk enough. However, if you feel sensitive at taking the small sum of money at my hands—it is a good game—La rams—let us play for the franc which the bottle would cost. Eh bien!"

Francois certainly could not refuse that; they played, and again he gained. Again they played, this time doubling the amount, and again Francois gained, and again and again, till he felt ashamed in carrying away all this money of a new acquaintance, and at the same time a cock-sureness that so lucky a devil as Beaupre might well lose a little and stop at the right amount. He insisted that the game should go on. More wine had been brought. The excitement of cards and excitement of wine met in a heady mixture; Duplessis drank little, though Francois urged it on him. The luck began to change; now and then the stranger won, now and then Beaupre yet more often now the stranger, till at length Francois was playing now with the desire to lose, but with a hope to gain back something at least of the considerable sum which he had lost Before this he had gone into his pocket and brought out that honorable 900 francs, and had thrown one louis d'or after another on the black table, and lost one after another. Yet his confidence was still strong—luck would turn—this was his lucky day. And now he would not regret carrying away the stranger's money. He began to feel a fierce eagerness to get the better of this antagonist become so formidable And a horrible nervousness was creeping over him at the dim vision of a thought—a thought kept resolutely on the confines of his consciousness, yet persistently pushing forward—the thought that it might be that he could not win the money back.

With eyes excited and bright on the table, with fingers snapping out the cards boldly, that thought shook him suddenly—he jeered at it and despised it It was absurd, grotesque. He was Francois Beaupre, a rich peasant, a respected and well known citizen; moreover, of good judgment; and moreover still, lucky. He had been lucky all his life, always things had turned his way, the trick was not going to fail him now

"Double!" he shouted promptly as he lost again.

And he lost again. The 900 francs were gone; he gave a note now, on his stock, and again he lost. A deathly sickening sensation had gripped him and was holding him; the horrid thought had come close and was looking him in the face; he seemed to feel an appalling hot breath from it. He tossed off another glass of wine and for a moment was dumb. Then in a flash he saw what he must do; this was of course the last point before the luck turned—that was evident. It would make a fine tale how Le Francois had come within one of losing all he owned but even then his courage had not failed him. He had drunken of his wine at that crucial moment and called "Double!" once more in a stout voice and played—and won. Won back all he had lost and more—so the tale would run.

And so Francois set down the glass empty, and for the last time cried the fatal word—"Double!"

In silence, with a crowd of silent men, who in some way had come to know what was happening, standing about them, the two played the last round. And Francois lost.

In silence he signed the note which gave to the stranger his house and furniture and land, all that he had in the world, and stood up and looked about at the faces gathered as if astonished A long second he looked at them; then he bent and stared from the low open window which faced him, and the men following his eyes, saw with a manner of shock that they were focused on the distant village of Vicques and on the church standing separated at one end of it, and on the house next, his home With that he stood straight, and fell through the crowd without a word, and out of the doorway, and plunged forward with strides which lurched drunkenly. But he was not drunk.

CHAPTER VII.

WORK AND HOPE.

The next day a sheriff and his clerk came and fixed red seals to the house and to everything in it which locked, and Claire watched in a deep quiet, the baby in her arms. The children watcher, too, awed, but yet pleased, as it is with children, to be part of an event. Tomas bragged openly to Alphonse Villeneuve.

"You have no affairs at your house," he observed. "At our house all the neighbors are crying, and there is a very fine man, the sheriff, who puts red things on the table drawers and on my father's desk. It is amusing to have affairs."

It came as a surprise to such honest pride to receive at this moment a blow on the ear from his older brother. "Blockhead," Francois said, "do you not understand that we are losing our home? Is that amusing?"

The brown eyes of Francois were burning like coals as he stalked away from Tomas—quiet for once—like a tragedy hero. On his shoulders, it seemed, was the weight of the world, and he could not, as he longed to, carry it. He, being the oldest son, should, according to his code of 11 years, take up his nightmare which had turned his gay, capable father into a crushed heap sitting there at the table of the great room, and his happy calm-eyed mother into a haggard statue of a woman. He ought to lift it from them and throw it far away by some heroic effort, but he did not know how to begin. The sheriff seemed as sorry as any one; it was of no use to attack the sheriff, which he had considered. And that evil spirit, that man who had taken their happiness in an afternoon. Duplessis, kept far away. His heart swollen with affection and aching for action, Francois stood about uselessly. In him grew a resolve that he would give up all that he had hoped for, the normal school at Delesmontes, the college after, everything, to work and win back the lost home for his people.

PRESIDENT WILSON IS DOUBLE OF PITT

Englishmen Find Remarkable Resemblance Between Two Statesmen.

London. Special: A very interesting comparison is going the rounds just now of the striking facial resemblance between three public men, two of whom are still living, though one is hors de combat so far as public life is concerned.

The three men are England's greatest statesman, William Pitt, Joseph Chamberlain and President Wilson. If, for example, you place a monocle on the left eye of the Pitt statue, which stands at the entrance to the house of commons, you have the immortal "Joe" to the life. The same result would follow if you substituted Wilson's pince-nez for a monocle.

Each of these three men started their political career as liberals. All stumbled through the same irony of fate into the maelstrom of war. The long sanguinary conflict that followed Pitt's resort to arms and the Transvaal war for which Chamberlain was largely responsible, were only concluded after tremendous loss of life and an enormous outlay of money.

The last of the triumvirate, President Wilson, now seems to be stumbling, reluctantly, into the battle arena.

Tricking the Porters.

From Tit-Bits.

As illustrating the unfounded complaints which are sometimes made against railway servants, Mr. W. F. Jackson, the general manager of the North British Railway company, happened been telling a good story, the facts of which, he said, were ascertained in the investigation of a complaint made by the principal actor.

An old lady turned up at one of the Glasgow stations, and going up to a porter, said:

"I say, porter, can you tell me where I will get my train?"

"Where are you going, madam?" he asked.

"What have you got to do with that? Can you tell me where I will get my train?"

"But I cannot tell without——"

"Well, I'm not going to tell you where I'm going. I'll get someone else to help me."

With that the old lady toddled farther up the platform, and meeting another porter propounded her conundrum to him.

"Where are you going, madam?" was his natural question.

"Oh," she retorted, "you are just as impertinent as your mate. I'm not going to tell you where I'm going."

She went up to a third porter and asked him if he could tell her when her train was. She got the same reply and said, "Well, if you must know, I'm going to Paisley."

The porter directed her to the Paisley train, and just as it was leaving the platform she put her head out of the window and shouted:

"How do you feel when you've been 'had'? I'm not going to Paisley at all. I'm going to Edinburgh," which, need hardly be added, is in quite the opposite direction.

Railroads and Panama.

From the Wall Street Journal.

If there is one charge more childish than another in the needless discussion of our plain international obligation in the Panama canal tolls matter, it is that the transcontinetal railroads (whatever they may be) are intriguing against the exemption of the coastwise traffic.

Is there anybody in Wasington—perhaps excluding the Interstate Commerce commission—who can state the nature and amount of railroad freight which crosses the continent? The advocates of national dishonor would boldly start out with the California fruit trade. But the bulk of this will come by the railroads in any case, because it is essentially fast freight, which every day deteriorates. No California produce in any quantity will be shipped to New York or Boston by way of the Panama canal, unless our busy politicians succeed in their patriotic efforts to wipe the railroads off the map.

What other transcontinental freight is there? If a modest little 2,000 mile road had every scrap of it, and nothing else, the road would starve to death. Our politicians have never been able to get the fact into their heads that the freight of this country divides at the Mississippi. New England does not send shoes to San Francisco. They go from St. Louis. San Francisco and Los Angeles are not buying anything in New York which the express companies cannot handle. They can get all they want in Chicago, which is a full day and 1,000 miles nearer and, in the matter of freight rates, that much cheaper.

It is true that some railroad managers went up in the air when the Panama canal first became a certainty. But they only descended to the level of the politician for a time. They know better now; and it is no rash prediction that the canal will make them more business than it can ever take away. President Underwood of the Erie flatly declined to be any party to a campaign against the Erie barge canal. He was quite right. Carrying materials made more business for the Erie than anything that canal can take away. The most it can do will be to divert an unprofitable class of freight which the Erie will relinquish with a grateful smile.

In the case of the Panama canal the railroads are not guilty, and if they were guilty they would deserve condign punishment for an ignorant opposition flatly against the interest of their stockholders. They must know what this transcontinental freight bugaboo means.

Say ma!" said Willie, "do you know I think that that ash man that comes and dumps our ashes every week is a real good Christian man?"

"Why so?" asked his mother.

"Well, yesterday he came to Mrs. Smith's house next door and picked up their wooden barrel and raised it over his head and was about to dump it in his cart when the bottom came out and ashes fell all over him."

"My how terrible," said Willie's mother, "and what did he do?"

"Oh! he just sat down in the gutter and told God all about it."

Back Talk.

Howard Elliott, president of the New Haven lines, said at a dinner in New York:

"I don't encourage back talk among our employes—far from it—but I must say my sympathies are rather with one of our conductors who ventured, under great provocation, on a little back talk the other day.

"As the conductor was punching tickets, a man said to him, with a nasty sneer:

"'You have a lot of wrecks on this road, don't you?'

"'Oh, no,' said the conductor. You're the first I've seen for some time.'"

SCALY PSORIASIS ON LIMBS

Troop H, 6th U. S. Cavalry, Camp McCoy, Sparta, Wis.—"I was troubled with psoriasis for nearly two years. Portions of my arms and limbs were affected mostly with it. It appeared in scaly form, breaking out in very small dots and gradually grew larger and white scales formed when about the size of an ordinary match-head. The looks of it was horrible, which made it very unpleasant for me. It itched a little at times.

"I tried several treatments which cured me for a month, but it always broke out again. One day a friend saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment in the paper and I sent for a sample. They helped me so I purchased two more boxes of Cuticura Ointment and some Cuticura Soap and they completely cured me. It took three months for Cuticura Soap and Ointment to complete the cure." "Could you do something for a poor old sailor?" asked the wanderer at the door.

"Poor old sailor!" echoed the lady who had opened the door.

"Yes'm. I follered the wotter fer 20 years."

"Well," said the lady, as she slammed the door in his face after a critical look thereat, "you certainly don't look as if you'd ever caught it up."

Whistler and Oscar Wilde did not love each other much, and as they constantly met in London drawing rooms their sparring was pretty deadly.

On one occasion, Whistler made a remark so brilliant as to provoke applause even from Wilde.

"By Jove, Whistler," he exclaimed, "I wish I had said that."

"Never mind," replied Whistler, "you will."

The Lord Mayor of Manchester has a merry wit, and this is one of the stories he told in his racy speech at the Manchester motor show dinner. A motorist drew up at the Midland hotel, Manchester, just as one of the city fathers was leaving that establishment.

"Hey, my man," quoth the motorist, "do you mind looking after my car while I go inside for a few minutes?"

"Sir," said the irate dignitary, "do you know I am a member of the city council?"

"Oh!" rejoined the motorist. "That doesn't matter; I can trust you?"

Five young men trooped into a shop each to buy a new hat. Scenting fun, the man behind the counter waxed jocular.

"Are you all married?" he inquired.

"Yes!" they chorused.

"Then I'll give a hat to the man who can truthfully say he has not kissed any woman but his own wife since he was wedded."

"Hand over the hat," said one of the party. "I was married yesterday."

One of the others was spinning the yarn to his wife when his laughter suddenly gave way to fear.

"I say, John," she asked, "how was it you didn't bring one?"

"Where's Tommy?" asked Mr. Jones, on his return from business one evening.

"Gone to bed," was his wife's reply.

"I hope he's not ill."

"No, I sent him to bed as a punishment for swearing."

"Swearing?" repeated Jones; "I'll teach him to swear."

Without waiting for a light the angry father rushed upstairs to interview the culprit, only to fall over a loose stair-rod and bump his chin. At once he became exceedingly fluent, and when the air had cleared he heard his wife call, gently:

"Better come down, dear; I'm sure Tommy has heard enough for the first lesson."

Prizes Waiting for Aviators.

From Tit-Bits.

There is plenty of encouragement for aviators who wish to outdo the feats already accomplished by flying men, and for designers and inventors who seek to perfect the biplane and monoplane. Prizes ranging in value from £1,500 to $100,000 are open to be won during 1914, and it is safe to affirm that this year will see the performance of even greater flying feats than have been already accomplished.

The most interesting prize, perhaps, is the $100,000, which is being offered by the Union Aerienne which is formed of members of the Aero club in France and is supported by the French government. This prize is offered to the constructor of an aeroplane affording the greatest degree of safety [illegible] aval recompenses of $[illegible] will be distributed [illegible] chines [illegible]

A Romance of Extraordinary Distinction

THE MARSHAL

By Mary Raymond Shipman Andrews

Author of The Perfect Tribute, etc.

Copyright, The Bobbs-Merrill Company.

"The emperor!" Francois breathed—"the emperor was there!"

Probably nothing, which had not to do with his daughter, could have tauched General Gourgaud as did that tribute. That it was a tribute to his story meant much, but the worship of Napoleon which burst out in the gasp went deeper. The followers of the Corsican never asked for a reason why they adored him; it was a feeling blinder and stronger than love which he inspired, and it lasted in the hearts or his soldiers to the latest moment of the longest life. The veteran officer who felt this possession of his own being saw it mirrored in the slim lad who quivered before him, and he loved the lad for it.

"Sapristi!" he growled. "The arm of the Little Corporal reaches a long way. The child has not even seen him, and voila, he loves him."

The child's face flushed. "But yes, my Seigneur," Francois spoke quickly. "But yes. I have seen the emperor."

"You have seen Napoleon?" The general was surprised. "How is that?"

In a boyish fashion, in homely language of his class yet with that dramatic instince which is characteristically French, Francois told his tale as his grandmother had told it to him and to his brothers and sisters—the tale which the children called "Napoleon Comes." The general listened with a sincere interest. As simple in many ways as the child, every least word of his demigod Napoleon was charged for him with authority. He considered deeply when the story was finished.

"My boy," he addressed the lad, "I do not know the law—I am a soldier. Yet by my idea you are Chevalier, created so by the act of the most powerful monarch who ever ruled France—by our Emperor Napoleon. Another monarch sits now on his throne, yet he was in truth France's ruler when he gave that blow on the shoulder which made you a knight; he had the right of an emperor—therefore you are that which he made you—the Chevalier Francois Beaupre. As for the rest"—his brows drew into a bushy line and his eyes gleamed like swords—"do not forget that he himself charged you with a duty to his house; your fate and his name are linked. The time may come when, as the emperor said, you may be a marshal of France under another Bonaparte. But that is a small thing if the time comes when you may help another Bonaparte to come to his right, to rule over France. It is that of which you must think till the hour strikes and then it is that which you must give your life for."

Little Francois, the visionary, the hero worshiper, trembled. He had no words to answer the orders leveled at him in those rolling tones. "I will do it, my Seigneur," he said, frightened yet inspired, lifted into a tremendous dizzying atmosphere. And with that a secret which he had told no one, not even his mother, broke forth. "My Seigneur, a strange thing happens sometimes [illegible] dreams [illegible] bors called this good judgment. He was a dealer in working oxen; he bought and raised and sold them, and only his wife knew what chances he often took in buying young beeves. It was a simple solid form of speculation, yet it was that. It had given him the custom of taking chances and of confidence in his "luck"—all of which is perhaps no bad thing, yet it prepared a bad think for Francois Beaupre. Up to this time he had been fortunate to a miracle and his bargains were so lucky that he stood highest among his neighbors for keenness and for caution. His house was the largest, his table the most generous, his wife the best dressed of the village; he planned to give his children, particularly young Francois, who was more than a common student, opportunities. Francois should go to the college at Delesmontes. No other man in the place was so comfortable, and because of his genial and simple soul he was not envied. Le Francois was a popular person, and it was a pride to the village that his name and his prosperity were known about the countryside.

On a day in September he left Vicques early in the morning to drive to the market in Delesmontes, a league distant, two pairs of oxen which he had bought as calves for almost nothing from poor stock out of a farm leagues away. He had fed and trained and cared for them till now they were well set up and powerful and smooth working—ready to sell for a good price. Francois kissed his wife and the baby, and called goodby to the children playing in the garden, and left the little place so full of hopeful life, with contentment in his heart. He planned, as he swung along the road whistling, what he would do with the money which he would bring back—800 francs, he believed it would be. Not a clearer head or lighter heart passed that day along the Roman road to Delesmontes. At the market he found that there were few oxen to be disposed of, none which compared to his, and his ideas of value went up—he would get 900 francs for them, which delayed the sale. Eight hundred he might have had easily, but the other was a large price, even for the best. However, Francois was cheerful and obstinate and confident, and such qualities accomplish things—he got his price.

But it came to be, by the time his bargain was closed, 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and he had had no dinner. With the cattle off his hands and the money in his pocket he felt a sense of leisure and of wealth. Hungry as a wolf he felt also, and he turned into the inn of Delesmontes, where the sign of a huge bear, cut out of tin and painted black, swung before the door.

It was pleasant inside in the great clean hall of the inn, 20 feet wide by 40 long. Bars of yellow afternoon sunlight patterned the white scrubbed floor; at the tables of black oak a number of men sat on benches, bottles and glasses before them, and pulled at their pipes, and the clouds of smoke rose to

PILOT LIGHTING PLANTS

HOME MADE ACETYLENE GAS FOR LIGHTING & COOKING

Fine for Dairy Farms

We sell a great many Pilot Lighting Plants to dairy farmers. Because dairy farmers can get even more out of an Acetylene installation than anybody else.

Our Dairy farmer patrons make these Acetylene plants do double work. They run an extra line of pipe to each barn—and sometimes to other outbuildings. In these buildings they fasten the great balls of Acetylene light to timbers or rafters.

They also equip these lights with ignition devices — to make them light with the pull of a chain without matches.

Two of these Acetylene barn lights will make a big dairy barn as light as day. They will give more light than a dozen lanterns—and unlike lanterns, they cannot be tipped over.

The same is true of Acetylene house lights. They burn in handsome stationary bronze or brass fixtures securely fastened to ceilings or walls.

Acetylene is too, a double boon to the women folks. In addition to the beauty of the light, it brings even a greater convenience in the gas cooking stove.

For Acetylene is used in gas cooking ranges in thousands of country homes, just as city gas, is used in millions of city homes.

In all of these homes the gas range has shortened cooking hours and has done away with the drudgery of handling coal, wood and ashes.

Pilot Acetylene Generators are now made to set out in the back yard—in an out of the way corner far from the buildings they supply with gas.

KLEMME, IOWA

A book on "The Church, the State and the Poor," has been written by an English vicar. The book is comprehensive, tracing the subject of prereformation days. The author regrets that during the growth of collectivism, under which he classifies what is called "Christian socialism," the church has trusted too much to the state to better conditions among the poor. Now there is a revival of interest in the welfare of the poor on the part of the church. The writer's contention is that a firm belief in the Christian creed is the only inspiration and guide to any effort to solve "the social problem."

A recent report of the Swiss electrification committee points out that, technically speaking, electrification of the Swiss federal railways can no longer be considered a risk and that the lack of coal deposits in Switzerland and the abundance of hydraulic power makes electrification peculiarly attractive. While the amount of capital required to electrify the federal railways could not be raised at one time, it would be well to plan now for the acquirement of the water powers so that the necessary energy would be available when wanted for railroading.

Where was the most ancient civilization known? A recent traveler in Turkestan, Dr. W J Parmelee, writes to his home paper the Springfield (Mass.) Republican that explorations show that 10,000 years ago (twice the age of the Egyptian pyramids) a people lived southeast of the Caspian sea, about 125 miles from the sea, who had brick houses, decorated pottery, household articles, kept domestic animals, raised and ground wheat, and cooked their food As far as can be told, they had no weapons and lived in peace with their neighbors

Delegate F. Feuchter, of Davenport demanded that the convention indorse the demand of the wets, stating that question was an economic one carrying the livelihood of a great number of union men in its train, and stated that the convention, in justice to the union men employed in the brewery trades, must vote wet. Delegates Sorenson of Sioux City, Clarke of Des Moines and Rev Henke of Cedar Rapids opposed him, Rev. Henke carrying the convention with him after a stirring and dramatic appeal to the higher interests of the working men.

CASHIER'S LOANS TO BROTHER CAUSED FAILURE OF BANK

Des Moines, Ia., June 13.—Money loaned his brother largely was responsible for the condition of the bankrupt Bank of Sully, according to Frank G. Sherman cashier of the institution, who testified today in a hearing before H. H Whitaker, referee in bankruptcy.

Since 1896 the bank has been lending large sums of money to L. H. Sherman, of Pasadena, Cal. This debt to the bank kept increasing till April, 1913, when it reached $52,000 The bank was capitalized for only $7,500, and the deposits amounted to but $90,000. Sherman visited his brother last summer and he settled his obligation by turning over stock in a mausoleum company in California, valued at $35,000, and a land contract on 1,000 acres of Canadian land, which the bank accepted for $20,000 in spite of a mortgage against it for the same amount. In addition to cancelling the notes, the bank paid Sherman the $3,000 difference in cash

According to E J Kelly, attorney for the depositors, the mausoleum stock is worthless and the Canadian land is not worth more than $10,000.

CONVICTS MAKE GOOD ON OUTSIDE ASSIGNMENTS

Fort Madison, Ia., June 13.—This month the warden has out at work, outside the prison walls, about 200 of the convicts These men are out on honor, in camps, attended by only a nominal guard, or no guard at all. The men out recently are engaged in all sorts of labor. One bunch is engaged in building a barn Another is doing some road work. One camp of 25 is in the employment of a man who has a contract for grubbing out a large tract of brush land and clearing it ready for farming Several are working with teams. Others are doing general work for farmers. The railroad is having a lot of grading done for shops and a number of convicts are at work there with spade and shovel

This week the warden sent out a number of men to pick cherries on shares.

The state allows the men a portion of the compensation received and out of the remainder pays all expenses of having the guards sent out, etc. The men are delighted at the opportunity to earn something and to get into the open for healthful work. The scheme has proven quite profitable to the state.

Whether or not Mr. and Mrs. Steven Barner, living near Clare, will be arrested for conspiracy in helping hide the goods is not known. Mrs. Barner is a daughter of George Rentz. A brother, Frank Rentz, was arrested in Minnesota.

COLONEL ROOSEVELT ARRIVES IN LONDON

Will Lecture Before Royal Geographic Societies on Recent Discoveries

London, June 15.—Col. Theodore Roosevelt arrived in London today from the continent, accompanied by Mrs. Nicholas Longworth and Miss J. Roosevelt, his cousin Ambassador Walter Hines Page was waiting at the station. With him were the members of the embassy staff Lieut. Col. Alfred Hamilton Lee, former British military attache at Washington and now a conservative member of parliament, Mr. Newton Crane, of the American society in London and a number of other Americans.

One of the first to welcome Colonel Roosevelt was the archbishop of Canterbury, who had traveled on the same train and who greeted him on the platform.

"My visit to England is purely social and scientific one I have come here to lecture before the Royal Geographical society on the subject of my discoveries and adventures in Brazil and also to meet friends. I shall not discuss politics, either English or French"

This was the reply of Colonel Roosevelt to a bombardment of questions from a score of newspapermen to whom he held an informal reception at Colonel Lee's London residence.

One of the colonel's first visitors was Dr. John Scott Keltie secretary of the Royal Geographical society, who brought with him a number of maps for the use of the colonel in his lecture. This is to be delivered in a large lecture hall so that the audience will be composed entirely of those "in the society" who made early application. There is to be no discussion while it has not been disclosed whether Colonel Roosevelt will make an address to A. Henry Savage Landor the British explorer and others who have mentioned his discoveries it is understood that this is not considered necessary because there has been no attempt to discredit the sincerity or the usefulness of the colonel's explorations.

It is possible Colonel Roosevelt may see King George before his departure from England. His majesty is spending a week at Windsor Castle but no arrangements have been made for a meeting.

REVOLT IN ITALY GROWING SERIOUS

Bologna, Italy, June 15—Republican socialists and anarchists who in the past have fought each other vehemently, joined in a riotous campaign against the government authorities at Ravenna, it was learned today that reinforcements of troops drove the leaders of the revolutionary movement into the republican, socialist and labor exchanges where they are now besieged.

After a mass meeting messengers were dispatched to the surrounding country to announce the conclusion of the alliance, and to instruct the different parties' adherent to gather and oppose the authorities.

Simultaneously a reign of vandalism was begun. The rioters invaded the church of St. Mary of Suffrage and destroyed the sacred objects and stole the pictures and alms boxes. They removed the confrssionals benches from the pulpit and formed a barricade across them across the street, filling in the open spaces with chairs, statues, candlesticks and crucifixes.

Another mob invaded the Constitutional club, where the orgie of destruction was continued. The furniture was used to build another barricade on top of which the national flag was hung.

Cavalry and infantry with fixed bayonets attacked the barricaders in the face of volleys of stones and other missiles while the rioters shouted "Long live the Revolution!" "Long live the social republic!" and "Long live anarchy!"

Rome, June 13.—Detachments of troops were ordered today to take control of the railroad station and tracks in Rome.

IMPENDING CONFLICT FOR CONTROL OF AEGEAN SEA

London, June 15.—The Daily Telegraph's naval correspondent suggests that the real reason for the attitude of Greece against Turkey is a desire to secure mastery of the Aegean sea before the new Turkish dreadnought building in England are ready for sea.

The Daily Telegraph's Athens correspondent says the Greek minister at Constantinople has been instructed to demand the cessation of persecutions of Greeks in Asia Minor and the restatement in their homes and on the properties of 50,000 refugees who sought shelter from the Turks in Greek territory. A guarantee also is demanded according to the correspondent, that these refugees be not again molested.

The reported attack by Turkish regulars and a force of Bashi-Bazouks on the town of Aivalik, Asia Minor is denied. It is said that instructions from Constantinople to the Turkish troops arrived in time to prevent the attack.

TURNED BLACKHANDER TO BUILD AEROPLANE

Young Negro Also Needed Money to Aid Sister, Who Is Nearly Blind.

New York June 15.—The desire to help a young sister, who is nearly blind and the need of funds to perfect a hydroaeroplane of his invention, are the reasons assigned by the detective bureau today for the alleged attempt on the part of Henry Joseph Burton, the young West Indian negro, to obtain $10 000 from the Cunard line under threats of blowing up a steamship of that company by placing dynamite in her coal bunkers

Since his arrest in a most spectacular manner by city and railroad detectives on Thursday night near Bogota, N. J., Burton has been confined in jail at Hackensack awaiting extradition to this city Yesterday he consented to talk of his life and his plans. This is the statement he is said to have made:

"I just wanted the money to save Anna's sight and to build my aeroplane I am sure it would win an air race across the Atlantic if I had the money to build it with I don't know a thing about infernal machines, but I seem to have scared a lot of folks."

SEEK PROVISIONAL RULER IN MEXICO

Salt Po Mex June 13, (via La- redo Tex June 14- After the dis- patch of General Carranza's note to the mediators at Niagara Falls, it was said today authoritively that the constitutionalists do not wish even one of their own members to become provisional president under mediation plans providing taking such office can be construed in any manner as legalizing any of Huerta's acts

Vera Cruz June 5—Anticipating the overthrow of the Huerta government and fearing its consequences for himself and for his family Gen Lorenzo Mondragon, the elder brother of Gen Manuel Mondragon who was President Huerta's first secretary of war, now in Paris took refuge within the American lines here today

Niagara Falls, Ont June 15.—A search for a man to take the place of Huerta as provisional president of Mexico today occupied the mediators following the signing of the first of a series of protocols The first peace document provides for the transfer of power from Huerta substantially as follows

A government is to be constituted in Mexico of a character to be later provided which shall be recognized in Mexico City on (date to be fixed) and which from that day forward shall exercise public functions until there shall be inaugurated a constitutional president

The language of the protocol purposely uses the phrase "which shall be recognized in Mexico City" without specifying by whom, so that in another protocol recognition will be proposed by the United States as well as the mediating countries, Argentine, Brazil and Chile

The first protocol is the only one which will deal with the method of sending him here and that through this agency he is constantly in touch with the Washington government and developments at Niagara Falls

Charles A Towne of New York, former United States senator from Minnesota is General Huerta's counsellor and during the last few days he has conferred with Secretary Bryan and has been in communication with President Wilson over the development of the plan whereby it is proposed to transfer the Mexican government from Huerta to a provisional regime

Mr Towne declared today the signing of the protocol was a hopeful sign of a satisfactory settlement being reached but he looked upon today as the most critical one since the mediation conference began

Mr Towne was in touch early today with Huerta's commissioners at Niagara Falls, and also in communication with Mexico City by telegraph.

Constitutionalist agents were silent on the protocol, but C A Douglass, one of Carranza's legal representatives conferred at length with Secretary Bryan

SONORA GOVERNOR SAVED BY MESSAGE FROM VILLA

Douglas, Ariz June 15—"I will hold you personally responsible for any injury or indignity suffered by Jose Maria Maytorena, constitutionally elected governor of Sonora."

This message from General Villa to Col U Elias Calles, military commandant of Hermosillo, several days ago, was all that saved Governor Maytorena from arrest and imprisonment, according to advices received today at constitutionalist headquarters here. It came when Colonel Calles had thrown troops around the governor's palace. On receipt of the warning, Calles withdrew his men, and it was not until after this that a force of Yaquis summoned to the governor's aid, reached the capital

Ygnacio Bonillas, General Carranza's "mediator," sent to compose the differences between the civil and military factions in Hermosillo, arrived there today

REBEL STEAMER SUNK.

On Board U. S. S. California, Mazatlan June 14—(Via wireless to San Diego, Cal., June 15.)—The Mexican troop ship Guerrero destroyed the constitutionalist armed steamer Culiacan after a battle near Guaymas last night, according to information that reached here today. No report of the casualties has been received.

SHELL HITS HOSPITAL.

On Board U. S. S. California, Mazatlan, June 14.—(Via wireless to San Diego, Cal., June 15.)—A shell from one of the constitutionalist batteries burst in a hospital in Mazatlan today. It is not known whether any one was killed or injured.

WILSON TO PRINCETON.

Washington, June 13.—President Wilson left here at 8 a. m. today over the Pennsylvania railroad for Princeton, N. J., to attend the reunion of the class of '79 of which he is a member.

MANY POLITICIANS CAUGHT IN CRASH OF CHICAGO BANK

Chicago, June 15.—Members of the legislature who voted for William Lorimer for United States senator, present and former federal, state and county officials and former aspirants for governor and other offices, are included in the list of stockholders of the LaSalle Street Trust & Savings bank, which was closed by the state bank examiner yesterday.

The stockholders' list reads like a political directory, and shows at a glance why the Lorimer financial institution has been known as a political bank.

The brief but spectacular career of the LaSalle street bank is interwoven with the political happenings of the last four years. The political and personal fortunes of some of the prominent politicians of Chicago and Illinois have gone up or down with the successes and vicissitudes of the bank headed by William Lorimer.

Mr Lorimer had held his seat in the United States Senate for nearly a year when the LaSalle Street National bank, which later became a state bank, opened its doors. His election at the end of an eventful deadlock in the legislature had taken place on May 26, 1909 The bank was opened in May, 1910.

Lorimer Charged Plot.

On the last day of April, 1910 at a time when the bank was in process of organization the confession of Charles A White that he had been paid $1 000 for voting for Lorimer was published The sensations which followed that publication jarred the political and financial world and delayed somewhat the opening of the bank Mr Lorimer a year later when on the witness stand before the investigating committee of the United States Senate, charged that the exposure was part of a plot to ruin the bank

The immediate cause of the run on the bank which forced its suspension yesterday was due to the run started after John H Coyne campaign manager for James J Brady, state auditor of Illinois had filed a declaration with the superior court in support of a defamation suit for $20 000 charging that campaign contributions were made the basis of claims to dictate the appointment of subordinates in the office of Brady.

Coyne named C B. Munday, vice president of the LaSalle street bank, and C E. Ward also connected with the bank Roger Sullivan, democratic boss and senatorial candidate, and Edward Tilden as contributors to the Brady campaign The LaSalle street bank, he declared gave Brady $500 to procure the retention of L L Bauchus, chief of the banking and loan department of the auditor's office"

Brady's Marital Row.

Brady is now being sued for $50 000 breach of promise by his wife who formerly was Mrs Kuhn Mrs Kuhn and Brady were married the day following the granting of a divorce to Mrs Kuhn from her former husband. The Illinois law provides a divorcee cannot marry within a year A second ceremony would be necessary to legalize the marriage of Brady and the former Mrs. Kuhn The woman alleges Brady will not consent to the second ceremony She alleges that he has treated her cruelly and that his attitude toward her is based, she declares, on certain politicians Brady formerly was a bartender

Fifth Bank Closed.

A fifth bank was closed today by the state bank examiner in connection with the disclosure of conditions in the LaSalle Street Trust & Savings bank. This bank, the State Bank of Calumet, according to the bank examiner, completes the chain of what well known as the string of Lorimer-Munday banks in Chicago

Two bank examiners from the state auditor's office, in Springfield arrived today to assist in the examination of the five banks now in the state banking department's hands

William Lorimer president of the LaSalle street bank, was said to be near a physical collapse from the strain of the developments of the last 24 hours.

The bank examiners worked steadily on the books of the LaSalle street bank, the Broadway State bank, the Illinois State bank, the Ashland-Twelfth State bank and the State Bank of Calumet

Approximately $4,000 000 of deposits are tied up in the state controled institutions.

Checking Up Assets.

State bank examiners began today estimating the value of the securities held by the closed La Salle Street Trust and Savings bank and the three small neighborhood banks closed, possibly temporarily, as a result of the suspension of the La Salle street bank.

These facts stand out in connection with the financial situation caused by the closing yesterday of the banks by Daniel V. Harkin, chief state examiner for the Chicago district.

Closing of the banks has no effect on other Chicago financial institutions, according to high authority here. The La Salle street bank was never admitted to membership in the Chicago Clearing House association. Its suspension will affect only the few small banks which had their reserves tied up in it, it was said.

The banks closed are:

The La Salle Street Trust & Savings bank; capital, $1,000,000.

The Illinois State; capital, $200,000.

The Ashland Twelfth State; capital, $500,000.

The Broadway State; capital, $200,000.

The La Salle street bank has about $4,000,000 in deposits. Validity of about $1,200,000 of its collateral is said to have been questioned by the bank examiner.

Rise of Munday.

William Lorimer, unseated United States senator, is president of the La Salle street bank. He and his sons own, however, but 920 of its shares. C. B. Munday, vice president, owns 2,060 of its shares and is declared to be its leading spirit. Munday has interests in a score of undertakings, ranging from banks to cemetery companies. A decade ago he was a telegraph operator.

James B. Forgan, president of the First National bank, and chairman of the clearing house committee, said:

"These banks are not connected with any Chicago clearing house banks and we know nothing about them. The Chicago banking situation is better than it has been in years.

ATTEMPT TO CONTROL WHEAT PRICE CHARGED

Numerous Western Concerns Alleged to Be in Combine to Rule Market.

Salt Lake City, Utah, June 15—Suit was filed in the district court yesterday by two stockholedrs of the Utah-Idaho Elevator company against that company, the Farmers' Grain and Milling company of Utah, the Longmont Farmers' Milling & Elevator company, of Colorado, the Globe Grain & Milling company, of California and several individuals, charging that the defendants and others under the control of J. K. Mullen, of Denver, were conspiring illegally to control the price of wheat and other grains in California, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Nebraska and Kansas, and asking for an injunction. It is alleged by the plaintiffs, R. E. Miller, of Salt Lake City and John L. Barr, of Denver, that Mullen, operating through the Colorado Milling & Elevator company, controls about 100 milling and elevator plants in the states named

2 DEAD; 23 HURT IN TRAIN CRASH

Los Angeles, Cal., June 15—With 23 men and women injured in a collision last night of the eastbound Santa Fe limited, with a freight train at an open switch at Bagdad Cal., a station on the desert a special hospital train was due here this morning The train also carries bodies of R M Cram, of Los Angeles, and Charles Beldin, of San Francisco crushed to death in the wreck. Some of the names of the injured as taken at San Bernardino, a division point are as follows

E. Barrows, train conductor, injured internally.

U. G. Orendorff, Canton, Ill., body bruised.

Mrs. U. G Orendorff, bruised about head

Robert J Kerr, Los Angeles, legs injured

Olivia Cunningham, Oakland, Cal., bruised

Mrs. G Zinnow, Hamburg, Germany, injured about head, serious.

Mrs. J A. Himmsen, Yokohama, Japan, left arm broken.

It was reported at railroad quarters that the wreck was cused by an open switch leading into the siding on which the freight train stood to let the limited pass.

Bagdad is a little station in the desert, 218 miles from Los Angeles It is a sink, nearly 800 feet below sea level, and limited passenger trains do not stop there The train therefore was traveling at high speed, when it ran into the open switch and crashed into the forward end of the freight.

A composite smoker telescoped the dining car of the limited. It is not known whether Cram and Beldin, the two men killed, were in the smoker or the dining car, but all were injured when the crash occurred shortly before 8 o'clock last night

U G Orendorff who was injured in the wreck, is a wealthy manufacturer and newspaper publisher of Canton, Ill. He and Mrs Orendorff, who also was injured, were returning home from Pasadena with their daughter, after having passed the winter in southern California

FREE SPEECH LEAGUE GETS COLD SHOULDER

Tarrytown, N Y, June 15—The citizens of this village may be denied the privilege of hearing the arguments of Upton Sinclair and Leonard D Abbott, free speech advocates, though not through any fault of President Frank R Pierson and a majority of the board of municipal trustees, who promised to hire a hall at their own expense to settle for all time whether the people wanted to hear the speakers President Pierson today admitted that it was doubtful if a hall could be obtained for a proposed meeting, two of the largest auditoriums in the village having been refused him and the remaining two being public buildings that could not be used for the purpose intended. Meanwhile Abbott, president of the Free Speech league, insisted that he intended to hold President Pierson to his promise

M'REYNOLDS DEPLORES HOSTILITY OF PRESS

Nashville, Tenn., June 15.—In an address before the Tennessee bar association yesterday, United States Attorney General James C. McReynolds said one of his most arduous duties was to superintend the publicity of the present administration.

"Those not in direct touch with the situation have no idea to what extent certain portions of the press will go to misrepresent the work of the various departments at Washington, in order to subserve their own interests," he said. "This situation," he predicted, "soon will present one of the most serious problems of the present administration to solve."

BIG LINERS COLLIDE; NEITHER BADLY HURT

Steamers Pretoria and New York Graze Each Other in Fog.

On Board Steamship New York, via Wireless to Siasconsett, Mass., June 15.—While the American liner New York, west bound, was motionless in a heavy fog 400 miles east of Ambrose light ship early today the Hamburg-American liner Pretoria, bound east, ran into her and ripped a hole 12 feet high and 32 feet long in her port side. The hole is flush with the main deck and is 15 feet above the water line So great was the force of the collission that the Pretoria's anchor was torn from her bow and left hanging inside the gap that had been torn in the New York. Practically all of the passengers on board both ships were asleep

Immediately after the collision, the engines of both ships were ordered full speed astern and passengers came hurrying to the decks The passengers of the New York were able to reach over and touch the bow of the Pretoria as she pulled away from her dangerous position There was no panic. Captain Roberts and Chief Officer Turner were both on the bridge at the time of the collision They reassured the frightened passengers, many of whom hurried to the starboard side of the ship, anticipating a list to port, that there was no danger Members of the crew also went among the passengers and urged them to be calm

Fortunately the watch, which occupied the quarters behind that part of the ship which was crushed in was on duty in the stoke hole. Had the collision occurred while this watch was off duty, a number of lives would probably have been lost. The Pretoria was less damaged by the collision than the New York Several of the plates at her bow were sprung and twisted.

After the passengers had been assured they were in no danger they began to laugh and joke over the queer costumes in which some of the travelers appeared on deck. The passengers refused to return to their cabins until daylight

After it was determined that no serious damage had been done to either of the ships they proceeded on their way

FEDERATED CLUBS ARE IN FAVOR OF FEMALE SUFFRAGE

Chicago, June 15—The principle of woman's suffrage was indorsed here today by the General Federation of Women's clubs.

By this action a 20-year fight by the suffragists to break down the federation's constitutional bar on political and religious subjects, was successful

The actual operation required less than five minutes. The motion was made by Mrs. M E. Denniston of San Francisco, clairman of the resolutions committee. There were seconds from all over the house, but Mrs James Lee, of Kentucky, insisted on being heard and read a paragraph of the hymnlike woman's creed Others would have spoken, but Miss Lutie E. Stearns, of Milwaukee, objected.

"I don't know why there should be any discussion," she said in a voice that shook with emotion "Eight million women are waiting for us"

"As Mrs Carrie Chapman Catt said in her wonderful address last night, the women of the world are waiting for our action today"

Tears and Cheers.

When the question was put there was a chorus of "ayes" but scattered negatives were plainly heard While Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker was declaring the motion carried and pounding with her gavel for order the pro-suffragists arose and clapped their hands. There were tears of emotion in many eyes. Then in a distant gallery to which the Illinois delegation as hostess had consigned itself the women raised their voices above the tumult in the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" The refrain, "Glory, Glory Hallejuah," was taken up in various sections of the auditorium

The resolution follows

"Whereas, the question of political equality of men and women is today a vital problem under discussion throughout the civilized world

"Resolved, That the General Federation of Women's clubs give the cause of political equality its moral support by recording its earnest belief in the principle of political equality regardless of sex"

Mrs. James G Berryhill, of Iowa, in recognition of long and productive service to the federation, was elected an honorary vice president.

MOUNTAIN EMITS SULPHUROUS HAZE

Redding, Cal., June 15.—A fifth eruption of Mount Lassen, more violent even than that of last night, which in turn was far greater than any of those that preceded it, occurred early today. For the first time the smell of sulphur was in the air. Ashes fell at Mineral, 16 miles from the peak

At this distance the mountain is hiding in haze, but the United States forestry station at Mineral reported that the vast column of blackened vapor rising from the crater was visibly tinged with sulphur fumes and that sulphur could be smelt there.

The successive outbreaks of Mount Lassen have been progressively furious, but the last two far overstepped the others.

A searching party of three started today to look for Ranger Abbey and his party of three who failed to return last night from a trip to the summit and who it is feared may have been overcome by gases in the eruption of yesterday.

San Francisco, June 13.—Forest Ranger Abbey and his party are safe. Word that they had escaped the eruption on Mount Lassen, which they were ascending when the eruption broke forth, was contained in a telegram to the United States forest service received here today from Supervisor Rushing. The lookout station on the summit, near the crater was destroyed.

DE LAVAL

Cream Separators

ARE TIME TESTED

Every little while you hear of some brand new cream separator, claiming to be a "world beater" and just as good as the De Laval but a little cheaper. These "mushroom" machines stay in the limelight only until they are "found wanting" by the the users and in a short time drop out of sight.

It takes years of experience to build a "good" cream separator. More than 30 years of experiments and experience have made the De Laval pre-eminently the best machine on the market for the separation of cream from milk.

If you buy a De Laval you run no risk of dissatisfaction or loss. It's time tested and time proven. Why experiment? Why take chances with an inferior machine when you know that the De Laval is the best machine for you to buy.

If you are thinking about buying a separator we will consider it a favor if you will permit us to set up a De Laval for you on your own place and have you give it a fair trial.

Genius Knocker As A Booster Sees Him

By C. F. CRANS

Taken From an Address Delivered Before The Annual Meeting of the Clear Lake Commercial Club

These chronic knockers, the kind that lack the ability to do anything themselves and ascribe and ulterior and selfish motive for every public enterprise remind me of the old style "one lung" automobile. You can hear their exhaust afar off, they are always making a loud noise but never get anywhere, and do not make progress themselves, but keep the main traveled path where others who do want to get somewhere have to turn out and go around. About every so often they backfire with a loud report, that always relieves their pent up energies for the time being. They easily start circuit, for every time they put their hands in their pocket and touch their pocket book their enthusiasm oozes out. Their radiator steams a little all the time and any enterprise that seems liable to cause a raise in taxes, no matter how slight, causes it to boil over. Their carburetor is never working right, due to the mixture which is mostly hot air and not enough of the real source of power. They have a blow out on the street corner about once a day. Their clutch is always slipping for no matter how much energy is expended they can never go forward. About the only mechanism that is always working is the reverse. Their forward movements are something wonderful, and you [illegible] to avoid being in the rear. The exhaust will be unmistakable, and in neighborhoods thickly populated with specimens of citizenship, polecats have been known to commit suicide for very envy

Have Good Show

The [illegible] of the Cairns Bros. under the Isis theatre drew a very good crowd Wednesday evening despite the very threatening weather. The play a Far West western drama was well acted and very much above the average and the prevailing sentiment seems to be that Cairns Bros. [illegible] a little more for the money than any other show that has ever visited our little city. They carry a fine band and orchestra which rendered very pleasing music. They plan to come back here at least once a year, playing an entirely new bill and they will be bound to have an extremely large crowd on their next visit.

Another New Home

Fred Musfelt has commenced the excavation for a basement for his new home on the northwest corner of the block just south of the school house. This will make the fourth house to be erected on this block this season and the fifth may possibly be added. This makes ten new houses for Klemme this year, and we would not be surprised to see the number doubled before the snow flies. And still the question of finding a place to live is just as hard as ever. We could use twenty more houses right now.

TEXAS WOULD CHECK PLEAS OF INSANITY

Proposed Law Would Send to Asylum Man Not Guilty on That Ground.

Fort Worth, Tex. Special: With the legal and medical profession both behind the movement, an organized effort will be made at the next session of the Texas legislature to enact a law to change the methods of handling insanity pleas in criminal cases and to provide a separte asylum for the criminal insane

It is aimed to put a check on the use of the insanity plea as a means of escaping punishment for crime As the law now stands, a man may be sent to an insane asylum in Texas only after he has been adudged insane by a jury of eight physicians. Even though a jury in the trial of a criminal case may have found him insane, an additional insanity proceeding is necessary to commit to an asylum

The move for a change in the Texas law really started in Fort Worth when Claude McCaleb and J J. Hurley, two young attorneys here, were appointed by District Judge Marvin Brown to defend Rufus Hales, charged with the murder of his wife He pleaded "not guilty" for their client and assured the court that they had been unable to get anything out of him to indicate their guilt or innocence They declared that he was insane

The jury disagreed and Hurley and McCaleb immediately filed a lunacy complaint against their client in the county court and he was adjudged insane by a jury of six physicians He is still in the county jail here there being no room for him in the state insane asylum

Proposed New Laws.

These two attorneys went to work to secure reforms in the laws applying to lunatic and drug fiends They proposed three new laws -one making the unlawful selling of cocaine morphine and other such drugs a felony instead of a misdemeanor one to provide a state asylum for criminal insane, a third to automatically send a man to this asylum after acquital of a felony charge on the ground of insanity

They presented the matter to the State Medical association at Houston and the association unanimously indorsed it It will be presented to the Star Bar association at its next meeting The three district judges and the prosecuting attorney here have already indorsed it as have many of the prominent members of the local bar

Judges Approve.

District Judge W T Simmons said

"A judge should have authority to send a man to an asylum whenever he is held insane by a jury with a provision that 'previous jeopardy shall not attach in such a case If a man is found to be insane at the time of his trial he should be sent to the asylum instanter but under such conditions that whenever he recovers his reason he could be brought back and tried again

'If it is shown that a man is insane at the time of the commission of a crime, he necessarily must be found not guilty even though he should become sane later But there are many cases where a man becomes insane after the commission of a crime, and still more where they feign insanity to avoid punishment In the latter cases there should be provision for a trial whenever the patient recovers or the fraud is discovered

No "Guilty But Insane."

District Judge Marvin H Brown said

"Our criminal statutes are 100 years behind the times on some subjects and this is one of them There ought to be a provision for a plea of insanity. If the jury finds a man not guilty on the ground that he is insane it should say so and in such a case the judge should have authority to send the prisoner at once to any asylum available. I believe that such a procedure would stop a whole lot of these insanity pleas. I would a whole lot rather be in the penitentiary than an insane asylum, and you would too

"I would not favor anything like the bill providing for a plea of guilty but insane' such as was passed recently by the New York legislature and I think that Governor Glynn did right in vetoing that bill I would want the jury to pass on the question and then give the court authority to act without further delay"

District Judge James W Swayne said

"It is the law in many other states and ought to be here The procedure under which a man must be adjudged insane in a separate proceeding, after a jury has already held him insane, makes it possible for some criminals to escape punishment altogether"

John W Baskin county attorney of Tarrant county, also favors the proposed laws

Quite Easily Pleased.

From the Christian Herald.

The Navajos are the least gregarious of native American tribes, never congregating in towns and villages, and never forming permanent communities. Their homes, called hogans, are mere hovels, built of stones or the trunks and limbs of trees, with rounded roofs, thickly covered with earth. A smoke vent in the roof and a doorway in the side are the only means of ventilation. In cold weather (which is never of long duration in that portion of the southwest), these cave-like structures are kept tightly closed, so that no one but an Indian could live in them at all. But when springtime comes, the Navajo squaw constructs a summer cottage, sometimes consisting of no more than a windbreak of sagebrush around a circular cleared space. Sometimes the summer hogan is a shady bower under a desert cedar tree, with leafy branches piled around as a measure of protection against winds and sandstorms. Sometimes it is a shelter, formed by the utilization of old pieces of canvas, sheet iron and other castaway material, picked up around the refuse dumps of the railroad towns. In any event, the dwellers in the summer hogans are practically in the open all the time. Fresh air is never for a moment excluded.

FOR THE UNDER DOG.

From the Kansas City Star.

"My passion," said President Wilson to Mr. Blythe, explaining his Mexican policy, "is for the submerged 85 per cent of the people of that republic who are now struggling toward liberty."

Curious, isn't it, that the president of the United States, with plenty to do at home, should be tremendously concerned in the great mass of ignorant Mexican peons? Curious, but evidently a fact.

And this sort of thing happens fairly often, to the mystifying of the Mr. Worldly Wiseman.

The Gracchi were a couple of Roman noblemen who might have lived peacefully if they hadn't happened to get interested in the cause of the under dog But they led movements to ease the common lot at the expense of their lives. St. Paul might have got on fairly comfortably if he had been content to side with the established order. But he fought against it at whatever cost.

So all through history the John Balls, the Wat Tylers, the Rienzis, the Hampdens, the Cromwells, the Patrick Henrys, the Washingtons, the Marats, the Dantons, the Mazzinis, the William Lloyd Garrisons, the Lincolns, have cast their lot with the poor and the oppressed. The Father Damiens among the lepers, the missionaries who have braved the dangers of savage countries, the leaders of unpopular causes, have been men of the same devotion to humanity.

Today Roosevelt and Wilson are both men with a passion for the fellow who isn t getting his share. Each in his own way is the champion of the downtrodden Each is working for the coming of the better day for the average man.

The friends of these leaders often do not comprehend them. They cannot understand why they should be distressed over the existence of injustices that don't come into their personal affairs. Their enemies, of course, try to discredit them with their natural allies They lie about them, hold them up to ridicule and misrepresent the measures they propose.

Sometimes the reactionaries bring out a weak demagogue against the people's real champion, as they did in the case of the elder Gracchis. Sometimes they paint the popular defender as a crafty self seeker, as they did in the case of Tom Johnson of Cleveland. Sometimes they try to make him out a drunkard, as they did in the case of Roosevelt

But it's all in the day's work, and great men of history with the passion for the submerged 85 per cent never have complained of their treatment. It is enough for them if they can be workers in the great cause of human advancement—a cause which after all must depend on the mass of men and women themselves.

For, as President Wilson added, liberty is never "handed down from above" It is always attained by the forces working from below, "by the great movement of the people"

With step triumphant and a heart of cheer;
Who fights the daily battle without fear;
Sees his hopes fail, yet keeps unfaltering trust
That God is God, that somehow, true and just
His plans work out for mortals, not a tear
Is shed when fortune, which the world holds dear,
Falls from his grasp—better, with love, a crust
Than living in dishonor; envies not,
Nor loses faith in man, but does his best
Nor even murmurs at his humbler lot;
But, with a smile and words of hope, gives zest
To every toiler. He alone is great
Who by a life heroic conquers fate.

CHAPTER VII—(Continued).

Something had been said already of sending the children to this or that uncle or aunt—there would in a short time be no home and no living for them until the broken father could gather himself and begin again. Little Francois resolved that he would not go. He would stay with his father and prove that 11 was not too young to make money. As he stood watching the sheriff who moved gloomily about his unwelcome duty he was aware of a horse's hoofs beating down the road, and he turned. In the midst of his grief it was interesting to see the Baron-General Gourgau coming, on his bay mare Lisette. The general drew up beside him and looked at him sternly

"Where is your father?" he shot at him, and threw a leg over and vaulted off and flung the mare's reins to the lad, and swung into the great entry and through the open door into the cottage.

Francois, though broken hearted, was but 11, and it was a proud thing to hold the seigneur's horse and pleasant to see the spirited beast paw the earth as he held her. He was so entranced with this occupation that he forgot his bruised life and his lost career entirely. For 15 minutes he forgot, and the other children gathered around him, and he ordered them away from the horse and felt himself its guardian and an important person, with complete satisfaction.

And at that, out of the house came the seigneur, big and black-browed and solid of tread, and with him that broken-hearted father whose face recalled all the tragedy

"Francois," his father spoke, more gently than ever he had spoken before, "I have taken your future from you, my son. The seigneur wishes to give it back. He wishes to make you his child. Your mother consents—and I—I consent." His father's arm was about his neck The general's abrupt voice took up the statement.

"Will you come and live with me in the chateau Monsieur the Marshal?" he demanded roughly, kindly 'I will treat you as a son—you shall learn to ride a horse and shoot a gun and be a soldier. You shall fit yourself for the part which we know must be played one day. Will you come?"

Francois, staring up with his great eyes stretched, was dumb. Just now all that he had hoped for in life had been snatched from him, more than he had dreamed was now offered in a turn of the hand. For a moment it seemed that heaven had opened and a miracle of joy came down, then it flashed to his mind that this dazzling gift had a price. He felt the touch of his father, the ruined, sorrowful father, he saw in the shadow of the entry his mother who listened' in a flood he remembered their life-long love and his resolutions of five minutes ago—the hard life of labor and saving which he had planned for himself. There is no half-way with a child With a whole soul Francois cast away the brilliant dream and hardly felt an effort.

"I thank you a thousand times, my Seigneur," he answered with decision "I can not go with you. I must stay and work for my father and my mother"

There was silence for a minute in the sunshiny garden, the children had wandered away; the men did not speak, one heard only the mare Lisette whom Francois held, who stamped her light forefoot and whinnied impatiently Then the general's grave voice sounded, more gravely than ever

"Francois Beaupre, you own a fine lad," he threw at the drooping peasant "I would like to have him for mine Since I can not, I shall try at least to be his friend Monsieur the Marshal, it must be as you say But come to see me at the chateau soon. I shall have things to talk over with you"

Little Francois, absorbed in admiration of the easy way in which the seigneur threw a leg across the restless Lisette, wishing desperately that he might learn to ride such a horse was disconcerted, as the dancing brown feet cantered away, to feel his father's arms holding him suddenly, closely, and a wetness on his cheek.

"Why are you crying, my father?" he asked wondering.

Three weeks later, of all the seven children only Francois and the baby were left with their father and mother The others were portioned out, one here, two there, among charitable uncles and aunts until the time should come, if ever, when Le Francois should prosper enough again to care for them all. He had rented a small cottage at the other end of the village, and Claire, in happy times a quiet woman of few words, had suddenly acquired pronounced gaiety. The little feet of her seemed always moving about the poor place and she sang at her work, which was a new habit.

"How can you?" the elder Francois asked one day, and she explained to him.

"A house without brightness might as well not be. In the other time you were cheerful always—at present you can not be, so I do it for you. With hope and work everything will come right again, and I dare not stop hoping or working. I dare not let grief take hold of me, for it would choke me. We have two children, and we shall get back the rest. Do not look backward, my Francois, where there was joy, but forward, where there will be joy."

And the big Francois brought down his fist with a bang on the table. "It is the right stuff that is in you. It is the women who are brave. I will be like a woman if I may' I will stop this whining and live like you, whom I have ruined."

And he did it. So it happened that the memory of little Francois held only pleasant pictures of those days of sudden poverty; recollections of a bare little place which shaped swiftly to attractiveness, of comradeship with his father in the business of money-getting; of deep satisfaction at feeling himself a factor in the growing hoard, and, above all, a recollection of that exquisite gaiety of his mother which had no likeness to resignation or duty, but rang with the unselfishness of love. Moreover, the hard labor to which he had sentenced himself came in an unexpected and delightful shape.

CHAPTER VIII

THE RETREAT FROM MOSCOW

On a morning Francois was busy at the new garden, digging beds for the plants which the neighbors had eagerly given them, and which, put in the ground now, in the autumn, would rise above them in brightness next spring. He heard the dishes clatter as his mother inside set the table for their bare dinner, he smelled the soup cooking, he heard his mother sing as she moved about, he lifted his head and saw her through the open window, in a bar of misty sunshine. The world seemed bright, surely when there is sunshine and the smell of good earth and the smell of good food, when one's mother sings—then the world is bright. Francois fell to whistling A l'ecole du Roi, the old chanson which his mother sang.

Into this contentment came, galloping gloriously, hoof beats of a horse. The busy spade, several sizes too big, stopped, and Francois leaned his chin on the handle, the boy out of drawing for the tool.

He stood, like a quaint little old workman, watching to see the general pass, the general on that apotheosis of horse flesh, Lisette. But the general stopped, which was a heavenly surprise to Francois each time that it happened.

"Good morning, Marshal. How goes the fighting? The colonel, your father, is in the field, is he not? Will you ask the lieutenant colonel, your mother, if I may speak to her?"

And the general, flinging titles about him, sprang to the ground. "All marshals to stay-inside," he shouted after the boy "Council of war excluding field officers above generals."

"Mother, mother, the seigneur wishes you, Francois whispered piercingly, but Claire was already on the little front walk by the new garden.

In a moment she stood at the gate in her fresh calico dress, with a white fichu over her head, and the big man towered and growled sentences friendily Francois, obedient in the cottage, gazed earnestly from the window out of earshot, incurious, admiring. Long years after he remembered the picture; the little boy, whose life was being settled, gazing from the humble house at the old soldier who opened a door for that small life into large possibilities; and the mother who loved him and saw the first step for her boy on a lader that mounted above her

Then the general trotted with jingling stirrup down the village street and Claire stood with eyes following for a moment When she turned she was smiling yet, but Francois vaguely wondered at the movement which twisted her mouth for a second as she looked at him She put her arm around his neck and kissed him, which was pleasant but seemed unpractical.

What did the seigneur say, my mother?" he demanded, struggling away 'Did he say I might come to the chateau tomorrow? May I? Am I to know what the general said, my mother?"

For he considered the seigneur his property he was a bit injured at being excluded from the council of war, he, the marshal

After his father came home to dinner he knew He was to go each morning to the chateau and do work in copying for the general. The general was writing a book, nothing less than a history of Napoleon himself. The boy's great dreamy eyes glowed. What luck to help in such a glory' How glad he was that he wrote fastest and most accurately of all the boys in school! And the general was to pay him six francs a week—it was dazzling! That would make the hoard mount beyond anything he had dared to hope. That would be a real help to his mother and to his father—"Is it not, my father?"

And the father said yes, proudly. And neither mother nor father suggested that there was even more to this great future

So the little lad, in his clean, patched peasant clothes, went up to the chateau the next morning serious and important, and was given a table and a corner in the library and words to copy which thrilled his soul. For the very first was about the battle of Austerlitz and the sunshine and the frozen river, it seemed a fate big enough for any life to sit there in the quiet book lined room and write out such things direct from a man who had seen them.

It came to be the spring of the year, and day after day Francois trod the path down the village street past his old home, which he resolutely looked away from, and across the arch of the old Roman bridge. From there he glanced up always to see the first broad view of the red castled roof with the gray towers below, vague through the trees. There were nuts by the thousands in the stately beech woods of the castled park, but Francois was too busy a man to stop for nuts in the mornings. Straight on he marched to the little side door, and there Jean Phillippe Moison, the son of Jean Phillippe Moison of Delesmontes, now a footman at the chateau and the wearer of very beautiful purple and gold clothes, opened the door and let him in.

Day after day, week after week he labored with all his might at the piles of manuscript; when it was a question of battle, murder and sudden death he was a happy boy, and also he sometimes made mistakes for joy of the story; but when descriptions of the emperor's policy came, and lists of provisions and such things, then, naturally, one was at times tired. Yet the work followed the bent of his inclination, for all that concerned war and soldiers concerned this lad of 12,

World after world opened as he worked in the big table, set into the window the deep gray wall A boy out at the angle there one ly see the still little figure ankles twisted about the the high chair, the slim shoe over the sheets of writing general talked to him

PICKLING EGGS ACCORDING TO MRS. ELLMS' DIRECTIONS.

Mrs. Ellms has been preserving eggs for years and says they will easily keep six months or more in this solution and be as good then as on the day they were preserved.

Mrs. Ellms purchases at a drug store a quantity of silica sodium solution, known as "water glass," which costs her 40 cents a gallon. Then she boils 10 pints of water, in order to sterilize it, and when it has cooled, adds one pint of "water glass." This amount of solution is enough to cover 12 dozen eggs, which she puts in a four-gallon crock. She places the crock in a cool place, preferably the cellar, and covers it to keep out dust and prevent rapid evaporation. Her eggs are then preserved.

When she wants fresh eggs all she has to do is to go down in the cellar and gather a few from the crock.

"I obtained the recipe for the 'water glass' from the United States agricultural department. It is the cheapest that can be procured," said Mrs. Ellms.

If you want fresh eggs all the year round and you object to paying 45 cents and more a dozen for them in winter why just follow these simple directions furnished by Mrs. Joseph Ellms president of the National Housewives' league who pickles eggs now, declaring they will be 'strictly fresh" at Christmas time.

"The housewife must be sure to boil the water before putting in the solution. You can mix up any amount of the preservative so long as you keep the proportions, one part of 'water glass' to 10 parts of water Buy your eggs in the spring time for spring eggs are the cheapest and be sure you get them fresh to start with."

HISTORY OF OLD TAVERN SIGNS

"The Goat and Compasses" Is a Corruption of "God Encompasseth Us."

Reed Smith, in the South Atlantic Quarterly.

Many of the absurdities in English tavern signs today are traceable to a process closely akin to popular etymology. The sign of the "Leg and the Seven Stars," for example, is thought to have been formely the "League and the Seven Stars." of the seven united provinces. "The Swan With the Two Necks" is presumably "The Swan With the Two Nicks." The nick was a mark or notch cut on the beaks of swans or cygnets by way of identification, like the notching of pigs' ears or the branding of cattle The curious combination of "The Goat and Compasses" has been heroically conjectured to be a corruption of "God Encompasseth Us," a relic of the days of the commonwealth when scriptural names were fashionable even in tavern signs. "Satan and the Bag of Nails" has been traced to "The Satyr and Bacchanals." "The Queer Door" is probably a corruption of Coeur Dore, "gilded heart." "The Goat in the Golden Boots" is ingeniously derived from the Dutch Goed in der Gooden Boote," "the good (Mercury) in the golden boots." Best of all, and probably authentic, is the history of the sign of "The Four Awls." An annotator on "Beloe's Anecdotes of Literature" accounts for it as follows: "I remember, many years ago, passing through a court in Rosemary Lane, whence I observed an ancient sign over the door of an alehouse which was called 'The Four Alls.' There was the figure of a king, and a label, 'I rule all;' the figure of a priest, motto, 'I pray for all ' a soldier, 'I fight for all," and a yeoman, 'I pay for all." About two years ago I passed through the same thoroughfare and, looking up for my curious sign, I was amazed to see a painted board occupying its place with these words inscribed "The Four Awls."

Libby's Luncheon Delicacies

Dried Beef, sliced wafer thin, Hickory Smoked and with a choice flavor that you will remember.

Vienna Sausage—just right for Red Hots, or to serve cold. We suggest you try them served like this: Cut rye bread in thin slices, spread with creamed butter and remove crusts. Cut a Libby's Vienna Sausage in half, lengthwise, and lay on the bread. Place on the top of the sausage a few thin slices of Libby's Midget Pickles. Cover with the other slice of bread and press lightly together. Arrange on plate and serve garnished with a few parsley sprays.

TEMPTATION WAS TOO GREAT

Little Edwin Resisted Long but Finally Made Trade for Newly Arrived Baby Sister.

Little Edwin, three-years-old son of Mr and Mrs Crosby Prior of Bremen, Long Island, has been rejoicing over the advent of a baby sister in the home, and as he proudly announced to all, 'she is all mine" A neighbor desired to purchase the baby of Edwin, but he would not trade. A hen and chickens, toys, candy, many things dear to the heart of a small boy, were offered and stoutly refused. 'I want you to think of this over night, Edwin,' said the man, "and tomorrow I ll see you again." The following morning Edwin was around. "I have one last offer to make to you for that baby sister." were the words that greeted Edwin. "I'll give you my motor boat for the baby" The youngster was almost staggered for a moment and then said. "You may have her. I was going lobstering this summer, and the boat is just what I need. Think I'll go out by Mohegan. Will went there and did pretty well," then he added a little remorsefully: "Perhaps you'd better take some of my playthings when you take her, she may get lonesome without me."—Kennebec Journal.

EYE STRAIN
Relieved by Quitting Coffee.

Many cases of defective vision are caused by the habitual use of coffee.

It is said that in Arabia where coffee is used in large quantities, many lose their eyesight at about fifty. Tea contains the same drug, caffeine, as coffee.

A N. J. woman writes to the point concerning eye trouble and coffee. She says:

"My son was for years troubled with his eyes. He tried several kinds of glasses without relief. The optician said there was a defect in his eyes which was hard to reach.

"He used, to drink coffee, as we all did, and finally quit it and began to use Postum. That was three years ago and he has not had to wear glasses and has had no trouble with his eyes since.

"I was always fond of tea and coffee and finally became so nervous I could hardly sit still long enough to eat a meal. My heart was in such a condition I thought I might die at any time.

"Medicine did not give me relief and I was almost desperate. It was about this time we decided to quit coffee and use Postum, and have used it ever since. I am in perfect health. No trouble now with my heart and never felt better in my life.

"Postum has been a great blessing to us all, particularly to my son and myself."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

Parson Had a Protest.

Towards the end of a long life old Mr Barleycorn, a well-known brewer in a quaint old town, joined the church, so with a view to their eternal welfare, he made it a custom for his workmen and draymen to turn up on Sunday mornings at the brewery, all dressed in their best smocks and top hats, when he would march along with them to church This had been going on for some time, when one day the parson met him, and, after stopping to chat, mentioned at parting, "Oh, by the way, Mr. B., I do wish you would cease bringing your men to my church, they snore so that I can't hear myself preach"

HOW TO TREAT PIMPLES AND BLACKHEADS

For pimples and blackheads the following is a most effective and economical treatment: Gently smear the affected parts with Cuticura Ointment, on the end of the finger, but do not rub. Wash off the Cuticura Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water and continue bathing for some minutes. This treatment is best on rising and retiring. At other times use Cuticura Soap freely for the toilet and bath, to assist in preventing inflammation, irritation and clogging of the pores, the common cause of pimples, blackheads, redness and roughness, yellow, oily, mothy and other unwholesome conditions of the skin

400,000 Settlers a Year

Immigration figures show that the population of Canada increased during 1913, by the addition of 400,000 new settlers from the United States and Europe. Most of these have gone on farms in provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Lord William Percy, an English Nobleman, says:

"The possibilities and opportunities offered by the Canadian West are so infinitely greater than those which exist in England, that it seems absurd to think that people should be impeded from coming to the country where they can most easily and certainly improve their position.

New districts are being opened up, which will make accessable a great number of homesteads in districts especially adapted to mixed farming and grain raising.

As Small as They Make 'Em

A Webster City minister declared that people "wasted money" when they buy chewin gum; buy candy; buy tobacco; buy an auto; buy your wife a $25 hat; buy a ticket to the ball game; buy a ticket to a moving picture show, etc. He might have added that they waste their money when they pay him a salary to preach and they waste their time when they go to hear him. He is too small to even run a peanut stand; in fact he is a back number and belongs to the dark ages and would make a good attraction for one of Ringling Brothers' side shows. We wonder if he thinks it is a sin to smile. We suspect he would think it would only be wasting your breath.

Teacher's Examinations

Teacher's Examinations will be held in the Court House at Garner, June 24th. 25th, and 26th, and July 29th, 30th, and 31st., 1914

The last legislature made a change in the school laws which now makes it necessary to hold Teachers Institute while the school are generally in session. For this reason the usual Institute will not be held until after the first of September.

Ingenious Smuggling Trick.

The smuggler's ingenuity is inexhaustible as M. Gernez, a customs inspector at the frontier station of Feignies, France, has recently discovered. He was inspecting a goods train, one of the wagons of which was filled with sacks of potatoes when his suspicions were aroused, and on taking out some of the suspected tubers he found that they were packets of tobacco cleverly done up in wrappers closely imitating potato skins.

Didn't Take Kindly to Pink Suit.

"I has come," a [illegible] coon sedately began the sad-eyed young idler, "to ax yo' for de hand o' yo' daughtah, sah, an'—" "Ah, yo' has has you?" ominously interrupted Brother Crockett the honest colored whitewasher. "Well, sah, I has a promise f' Sidney [illegible] de hand o' mah daughtah, an' he's yo' man fo' you—yo' triflin', yaller, no count, good-yah-pickin' scoundrel!"—Kansas City Star.

War Secretary Killed at Sea.

It is somewhat remarkable that the first British secretary of war Sir W. Clarke, was killed in a naval action. His duties were those of a secretary to the commander-in-chief, and, as such he accompanied the duke of Albemarle to sea in [illegible] and was killed on June 1. His official salary was at first $2.50, and subsequently $5 a day, out of which he paid his clerks.

Accept It as the Truth.

A Chicago working girl has become a heroine by refusing to marry a capitalist "I am all my aged father has to lean upon in his declining years. His home is my home, and I am going to remain here and care for him." This has so good a moral that one must refuse to inquire whether or not it be true.

Just the Thing.

Prospective Buyer—"Yes, I think the horse will suit me—but what age is it?" Dealer—"What age do you want?" Prospective Buyer—"I don't want it too young and I don't want it too old." Dealer—"Then it'll suit you, guv'nor, 'cause this hoss is just middle aged—say 39 or so."

Fine for Dairy Farms

We sell a great many Pilot Lighting Plants to dairy farmers. Because dairy farmers can get even more out of an Acetylene installation than anybody else.

Our Dairy farmer patrons make these Acetylene plants do double work. They run an extra line of pipe to each barn—and sometimes to other outbuildings. In these buildings they fasten the great balls of Acetylene light to timbers or rafters.

They also equip these lights with ignition devices — to make them light with the pull of a chain without matches.

Two of these Acetylene barn lights will make a big dairy barn as light as day. They will give more light than a dozen lanterns—and unlike lanterns, they cannot be tipped over.

The same is true of Acetylene house lights. They burn in handsome stationary bronze or brass fixtures securely fastened to ceilings or walls.

Acetylene is too, a double boon to the women folks. In addiuon to the beauty of the light, it brings even a greater convenience in the gas cooking stove.

In all of these homes the gas range has shortened cooking hours and has done away with the drudgery of handling coal, wood and ashes.

Pilot Acetylene Generators are now made to set out in the back yard—in an out of the way corner far from the buildings they supply with gas.

WATERLOO ABOLISHES JOB OF BATHING BEACH CENSOR

Waterloo, Ia., June 20.—Milady's bathing costume at the Cedar River park beach this season will not be restricted by the cool, calculating eye of a censor

Park Commissioner O. C. McClinton has decreed that there shall be no censor at the beach this year

But, the fair bathers must "be good" says the commissioner, else horrid old mashers may form a line and make all manner of troubles and annoyance for the lone park policeman

"Of course, you understand," said the commissioner "we don't wish to appear as offering any encouragement to some new fangled style in bathing costumes. We always try to have the bathers use the regulation costumes whenever possible, but have no objections if the bathers prefer to bring their own costumes."

The commissioners in raising the censorship ban intimated that costumes must be "within the bounds of reasonable propriety." By that it is presumed that the commissioner means the skirts shall not be too tight or cut too high or the blouse too low, in other words the costumes must be just about right

CLAIM HUGE FUND HAS BEEN RAISED TO BOOST TREA

Washington, June 20.—That a considerable part of the $25,000,000 to be paid Colombia by the Colombia treaty in case it is ratified is to go to attorneys, is common gossip in Washington. It is reported fat fees are to be distributed both here and in Colombia.

The most specific fact about the matter thus far disclosed is that Hannis Taylor of this city, prominent attorney and friend of Bryan, expects to get a handsome sum. He is counsel for the Colombian legation. His contract does not call for a definite amount, but it has come from good authority that he expects to get $1,000,000.

Allegation that as much as $10,000,000 will be paid out by the Colombian government to smooth the ways for the treaty are denied by the Colombian minister and are not backed up so far by proof, but the foreign relations committee expects to turn the searchlight on this phase of the matter

How Pressure Is Used.

The Colombian campaign to procure approval of the treaty comprises three different classes of endeavor

1. Anonymous circularizing of the press and Washington correspondents in an effort to sway the opinions of those who present the facts concerning the treaty to the American public.

2. Employment of distinguished American authorities on international law and former public officials to advise the Colombian government, to assist in negotiations with the state department, and to present arguments in favor of the treaty generally

3. Employment of lobbying agents to call upon United States senators to induce them to vote for ratification of the treaty.

Taylor Aid to Colombia.

Hannis Taylor, a Washington attorney with a reputation as an authority on international law, who formerly was United States minister to Spain, the man who, it is reported, will receive the $1,000,000 fee if Colombia succeeds in obtaining American approval of the treaty.

Senators obtained their first inkling of this situation from a chance remark at a dinner party by a member of Mr. Taylor's family The remark was to the effect that Mr Taylor will be on easy street" if the treaty goes through the Senate, for he is to be paid $1,000,000 for his services to the Colombian government.

Mr. Taylor admitted he has been employed by Colombia, but denied that the fee is contingent upon ratification of the treaty, or that it is to be $1,000,000 or any other amount agreed upon in advance. He said that his service for the Colombian government has consisted of assistance given Senor Don Julio Betancourt, Colombian minister to the United States, in negotiating the treaty with the state department.

Denies Scandal in Deal.

Mr. Taylor asserted that his agreement with the Colombian government provides for a "reasonable fee," to be determined after the termination of the service, and for arbitration to fix the amount in case of a dispute

Mr. Taylor contents that his employment has been legitimate in every respect that neither in the arrangements for compensation nor in any other phase of his connection with the negotiations there the slightest taint of scandal.

Mr. Taylor is reputed to be a warm friend of Secretary of State Bryan. He is an advocate of the Colombian treaty and who submitted the document to the Senate committee on foreign relations and presented arguments in favor of its ratification.

At any rate, Mr. Taylor has cultivated friendly intercourse with the secretary of state ever since the administration was inaugurated. Mr. Bryan was the guest of honor at a dinner given by Mr Taylor and the former diplomat has dined with the secretary of state.

Three Objects to Gain.

Secretary Bryan said there were three objects to be accomplished by the ratification of the Colombian treaty, which he enumerated as follows:

First—The restoration of amity between the United States and Colombia.

Second—The creation of an amicable relation between the republics of Colombia and Panama, which he holds is desirable.

Third—The action of the United States pursuant to the treaty will have a favorable impression throughout the Latin-American republics and promote general cordial good will between the United States and the younger republics of the western hemisphere.

Secretary Bryan was sharply questioned concerning "expression of regret" by the United States. The secretary soon discovered that this was an unpopular feature of the treaty.

Secretary Bryan defended the amount of the payment on the ground that the United States had once offered to settle for approximately $10,000,000 and that this sum in connection with the $250,000 o[illegible] which was to have been paid, would in the end have imposed as great a burden on the United States as the flat payment of $25,000,000.

Life Belts on Lost Liner Com- plicated — Bodies Found Head Downward.

Quebec June 20.—The Empress of Ireland wreck inquiry opened today with explanation and apologies by C. S. Haight, of counsel for the owners of the collier Storstad, which sank the Empress. He said that he had not meant to imply yesterday that the Canadian Pacific railway, owners of the Empress, had tried to spirit witnesses away This was the impression made by Mr Haight yesterday when he placed on the stand James Galway, a quartermaster of the Empress, who testified that the ship's steering gear was defective. Galway had told him, he said, that he was about to be sent to England Percy Hillhouse, of the Fairfield ship building yard, of Glasgow, where the Empress was constructed, testified the ship was carrying boats to accommodate 300 more people than she had on board at the time she sank.

The bulkheads extended all through the ship to the upper deck, he said, and with even the two large compartments in the middle of the ship filled, she would have floated Water must have got in somewhere else.

Captain Staunton, life saving superintendent of the Canadian Pacific railway, said that the Empress' life boats, belts and other equipment had been tested at Quebec on May 23, and found to be in perfect condition

Lord Mersey said that he had heard it suggested that bodies were found with belts on, but with the heads under water Captain Staunton replied that the belts would keep the heads above water if put on right. He could not say if the passengers had been instructed how to put the belts on. There were clear instructions with each belt, however

Lord Mersey remarked that he did not believe passengers read them.

400 COAL MINERS DIE IN ACCIDENTS

Calgary, Alta, June 20.—Two hundred men are believed to be trapped and killed as the result of an explosion in Hill Crest collieries mines, at Hill Crest near Frank, on the Crow's Nest line, this morning About 600 men went into the mine this morning before the explosion occurred More than 400 men escaped, but 200 were left and it is said there is no hope for them

Candian Pacific Railway company officials directed the equipment of a special relief train here. The special, carrying surgeons, nurses and a number of company officials with a large amount of hospital supplies, was expected to reach the Hill Crest mine this afternoon Private messages received here from the wrecked mine stated that dense clouds of black smoke continued to issue from the pit mouth. A government mine rescue car with trained rescue men departed from Blairmore for Hill Crest.

Liege, Belgium, June 20.—Two hundred coal miners were entombed in the Vielle Marihaye colliery, near here, when fire broke out today. Two hundred of their comrades escaped when the alarm was given.

The fire was still raging this afternoon and every effort was being made to rescue the miners left in the pits.

GRIMES IS ARRESTED; JOHANSEN SET FREE

San Francisco, Cal., June 20.—Peter A Grimes, convicted forger, who is believed to have drugged Albert Johansen in a Nagasaki saloon and substituted the Scandinavian sailor for himself just before his transfer under guard to the transport Sheridan, has been apprehended near Nagasaki by the Japanese authorities and is now in custody according to information received from Washington by United States Attorney John W Preston.

Johansen, unable to speak English and explain himself, was brought here as Grimes and had served two days of Grimes' three-year term in San Quentin penitentiary, California, before the discovery of Grimes' daring escape was made

After the full facts came to light yesterday a writ of habeas corpus was filed for Johansen's release, and when the case came before Judge Dooling, of the United States district court, last night the Scandinavian was granted his freedom.

SAYS PANAMA CANAL WILL BOOST BUSINESS

Cape May, June 20.—"The opening of the Panama canal will mean $2,000,000,000 more business each year for the United States," declared O. P. Austin, formerly of the federal department of commerce in address before the American Bankers' association. By using the canal he said, shippers in eastern seaports will save thousands of miles to ports in China, the Philippines, Australia and New Zealand and will be nearer them than is London, even by the use of the Suez canal. Mr. Austin suggested that the government construct an inland waterway in the great lake section of the country, "which would reach into the interior for 500 miles and send forth great amounts of freight."

STEAMSHIP LINES PLAN TO USE NEW WATERWAY

Washington, June 20—Six established steamship lines already have served notice on the Panama canal management of their intention to make regular use of the waterway. One vessel from the west coast ports of South America will be at the Pacific gates of the canal July 30 seeking to make her way to Liverpool by that route and thus to initiate a fortnightly service with Liverpool. An American steamship line now operating four steamers on the Pacific side and six on the Atlantic are waiting the opening of the canal to merge all 10 into a regular line between San Francisco and New York

OFFICER OF EMPRESS SAYS STEERING GEAR WAS OUT OF ORDER

Denial Issued That Owners of Ship Which Went Down With 1,000 Souls Tried to Spirit Witness Away.

Quebec, June 19.—C. S. Haight, of counsel for the owners of the collier Storstad, which rammed and sank the steamship Empress of Ireland in the St. Lawrence river, with the loss of more than 1,000 lives, today startled the commission which is investigating the disaster with a statement that word had reached him that on the night of the disaster the steering gear of the Empress was disabled. He had been so informed, he said, by Quartermaster Golway, of the Empress, about to depart for England.

Lord Mersey, chairman of the court of inquiry, immediately took a hand in the proceedings, and it was stated that Golway would be called as a witness this afternoon. Golway was on the bridge at the time of the accident and, according to Haight's statement, said the Empress' stearing gear was jammed

Captain Kendall, of the Empress, called to the stand, repudiated Golway's story as did Chief Engineer Sampson.

Captain Walsh, marine superintendent of the Canadian Pacific railroad, owners of the Empress, denied any attempts had been made to get Golway out of the country.

The commission that is investigating the loss of the Empress of Ireland, called as a witness today George Smart, a passenger on the wrecked steamship

Smart confirmed Captain Kendall's assertion that the Empress was standing still or practically stationary at the time of the collision.

John W. Black, a second cabin passenger on the Empress, testified briefly, then Lord Mersey ruled that it would be of no value to examine any more passengers.

Robert Henry Brennan, second engineer on the Empress, gave an account of the signals received by telegraph from the bridge.

The witness admitted that it would take about an hour to gather full speed from a dead stop. The throttle had never been thrown wide open after leaving Father Point, he said, as the ship had not gained sufficient headway to permit it.

Lord Lindell, senior third engineer of the Empress who had charge of the engines on the starboard side of the ship corroborated the testimony of Brennan in regard to orders received.

PORTE ANNOUNCES PLAN FOR FLIGHT ACROSS ATLANTIC

BY LIEUT. JOHN C. PORTE, R. N.
(Copyright, 1914, by Press Publishing Co.)

Hammondsport, N. Y., June 19.—While many baseless guesses have been made as to the route I purpose following in the Wanamaker trans-Atlantic flight, it is only now that I am ready to make any definite announcement on this point. I have given the matter much thought and sought to reach a conclusion that would satisfy first of all the requirement of practicability. I think the one adopted meets that test.

I shall make two stops in my trip. My first point of call will be the Azores and my second probably Vigo, Spain.

From that point I hope to wing my way far over the Bay of Biscay across the beginning of the English channel and land at Plymouth. As the New York World announced, my point of departure will be St. Johns, New Foundland. The mileage thence to the Azores is 1,198; from the Western islands, as the mariners call them, the distance of Vigo is 963 miles, from there to the final destination is 523 miles.

Must Make 60 Miles an Hour.

It is planned to reach the Azores 20 hours after making the water This means traveling at the average hourly rate of 60 miles an hour It will take 16 hours more to get to Vigo and about nine hours more from that place. If a total of 10 hours were used in stops, the elapsed time on the trip would take 55 hours, being almost three-quarters of a day within the time set down by the terms of the Daily Mail prize offer.

The question naturally asked by those interested in the attempt is why I am not flying directly from New Foundland to Ireland. There are several reasons and each of them is important. It will be recalled that the World said that a radical change in plans had been decided upon with reference to this point.

First of all I determined that the most efficient type of machine to use in the effort to do what has never been done before, in a flying boat with such a construction, I could, if necessary, light on the water and then resume my flight. With a simple aeroplane, if I once came down on the water I would be through, for I could not rise again. That having been settled, I was confronted with the seemingly insuperable difficulty pointed out by many noted experts of being unable to carry enough petrol to keep the flying boat with its great extra weight going through the whole distance between North America and the British Isles.

Must Replenish Fuel Supply.

To replenish my gasoline I hit upon the Azores as a coaling station, as that point pulls me pretty well to the south. I concluded that it would be the part of wisdom to resupply at a convenient European point and so selected Vigo Bay for that purpose. At each of the stations I will have assistants ready with petrol and other necessities. I shall alight on the water and restock from boats. I interpret the terms of the offer to forbid my going ashore, so I will not set foot on land, I hope, from the moment I leave St. Johns until I step out of my machine at Plymouth.

There are other important consideration which affected my judgement. By taking the southern route I shall escape the fog area in about six hours. On the direct route between New Foundland and the Irish coast I might be in a fog belt for the whole flight.

The variations of the compass is greater on the northern route than on the southern and the matter of navigation of the craft is one of the big problems confronting us on the flight.

In this connection I would encounter greater difficulties in taking my bearing by the sun on the northern route than on the other because the sun is more frequently obscured in the northern latitudes and again I will be surer of a good horizon on the south. And another matter of moment is the fact that on the southern track I shall be in constant sight of the Atlantic steamers with which I expect to exchange signals The Azores have a high altitude and can be seen from a long distance. All these little items go to make up the whole, and no matter how small they look one can not afford to ignore them.

Easy After Reaching Azores.

As has been said one of the heavy problems to meet and solve is that of navigation. By thus dividing my journey I shall at least simplify the question. It is obviously a less difficult proposition to lay a course for the nearer Azores than for the farther Irish shores. Once having reached the Azores the element of doubt is reduced because it makes little difference much where I hit Spain. All I do is to follow the coast line up the channel. I expect to fly from Vigo over the Bay of Biscay crossing Ushant point, then I will be nearer my goal. I shall be following here again the well traveled path of vessels. There is still another reason and one that is based upon the future which we believe will see ocean flying brought to the level of an every day occurrence.

Hopes to Blaze Trail.

After discussing with Mr Rodman Wanamaker, whose thorough going sportsmanship has made possible my effort, he and I agreed that one of the best things we could do would be to put the Azores on the map as a regular coaling station for trans-oceanic fliers of the years to come. We are projecting a route that we believe will prove of great value to those who follow, assuming I am fortunate enough to really blaze the way.

It is not the shortest route we are looking for; it is the safest and most practical, the most convenient and accessible.

It is well known that there is a strong easterly air current flowing at a high altitude from New Foundland to Ireland. The query may be raised, why not take advantage of that natural help? I am convinced it is not practical to try to utilize this air current on account of greater difficulties of navigation at great heights It will be almost impossible to see the horizon and the surface of the sea is almost always misty in the northern latitudes. The fog banks to be found in that region often extend clear across the ocean from America to England. So much for the route.

Trial Flights This Week.

I have withheld an authoritative announcement until the present time because I wanted to make sure that my plan was the best and, frankly, if it seemed to be so to use it myself without running the chance of having someone else step in ahead of me, regarding the progress of construction of the boat I can report satisfactory conditions. The Glenn Curtis shops are using every effort to turn the machine out on time and I am confident that by the end of the week I shall make my trial flights over Lake Keuka. Then the few alternations needed will be made.

The boat will be shipped to New York, put on the St. Johns liner, reassembled there, tuned up and from that point I prefer to hope, rather than prophesy.

The two 100 horsepower engines which will be operated independently each charged with the duty of handling a propeller, were given another test today and they stood up nicely The port wing of the boat is completed and in place. Tomorrow the starboard wing will be adjusted. Then the boat will be taken to the trial field on the shore of Keuka where the wing overhangs, each 13 feet in spread, will be adjusted There is not room enough in the shops for them to be put on, the spread from tip to tip being 72 feet The motors will be put in place tomorrow afternoon Each weighs 340 pounds. The radiators will be affixed on the following day

I am glad to state that our flight is receiving the kindest co-operation from the government at Washington and the British admiralty I hope to deserve these attentions.

SECEDING MINERS MAY FORM SEPARATE UNION

Butte, Mont., June 18—With two meetings of the secessionists of the Butte local of the Western Federation of Miners, called for today and tonight, efforts were resumed to arbitrate the differences of the factions. The heavy vote in favor of abolishing the presentation of union cards at the mines stirred the men who favor arbitration to greater efforts.

M. M. Donoghue, president of the state federation of labor, is expected to take a leading part in trying to bring the warring factions together.

The meetings of today are expected to stimulate the movement of the cessionists to form a new union. William O'Brien will be temporary chairman. He has announced that an independent organization with no affiliation with the Western Federation will be the result of the heavy vote of last night.

A committee of the Butte miners' union gave out a statement saying the operating companies in Butte had said that the contracts with the Butte union would be respected.

If an independent union is formed, the statement said, the executive board of the Western Federation would be compelled to call out the engineers and members of the other unions affiliated with the Western Federation. This would result in the closing of the mines.

STEAMER HITS ROCKS; PASSENGERS ARE SAFE

Weymouth, Eng., June 18.—The steamship Buelow of the China line of the North German Lloyd company went ashore today during a fog near Myrtledene, to the west of Portland.

A steamer was sent at once from Portland to bring ashore the Buelow's passengers, numbering 38 first class, 32 second class, and 32 third class.

The Buelow went ashore on the rocks at the foot of the high perpendicular cliffs dominating Blacknor Bay to the west of Portland Hill.

The sea was smooth at the time of the accident and plenty of vessels were in the vicinity so there was no danger to the passengers and crew.

AN ANTI-CHRISTIAN UPRISING IS FEARED

Situation in Asia Minor Grow- ing Dangerous, Morgen- thau Reports.

Constantinople, Turkey, June 19.—Henry Morgenenthau, United States ambassador to Turkey, today sent Hoffman Philip, secretary of the embassy, to Smyrna to ascertain the position there of American citizens who might be placed in danger by the threatened anti-Christian rising in Asia Minor.

Turkish refugees from Macedonia, who assert that they have been driven out by the Greeks have arrived in considerable numbers on the Asiatic coast, where they have taken possession of entire villages deserted by their former Greek inhabitants, who have crossed over to the islands of Chios and Mitylene.

There has been some pillaging in the district along the coast of Asia Minor and altogether the position there is generally regarded as a dangerous one although Turkish officials are using great efforts to keep the people in check.

At the same time preparations are being made by the Turkish authorities to meet any possible Greek attack. The Turkish minister of war has gone to Smyrna and the Turkish troops have planted mines at the entrance to the gulf.

BIG OPERATORS NOT ANXIOUS FOR PEACE

Independent Mine Owners Say They're Being Driven From the Colorado Field.

Washington, June 19.—J. A. Ownby representing independent coal operators in Colorado told President Wilson today the Rockefeller and other large interests in the state, were not attempting to settle the strike because small concerns were being driven out of business. He told the president, the federal troops were being used to assist the large operators.

Ownby, who was brought to the White House by Senator Owen, declared that most of the small mines were forced to close at the beginning of the strike riots and that federal troops had prevented any mines from being re-opened and kept new miners from coming into the field.

While such measures were intended to restore peace, he said, they were resulting to the detriment of the small operators

Mr. Ownby did not suggest any remedy for the conditions he outlined, but asked that the president confirm his statements by the military commanders in Colorado and find some means for settling the difficulty.

NICARAGUAN TREATY UP FOR DISCUSSION

Washington, June 19.—The proposed treaty with Nicaragua, granting the United States interocean canal and naval base concessions for a $3,000,000 payment, and proposing the extension of a protectorate over that republic, was again discussed today by the Senate foreign relations committeee.

Secretary Bryan and Charles A. Douglass, attorney for the Nicaraguan government, further explained the terms of the treaty and answered questions.

A sharp fire of questions was directed at Mr. Douglass to develop whether the main purpose of the pact was to continue the present Nicaraguan government in power and to show whether there was any relation between that government and American bankers.

Mr. Douglass explained that the people of Nicaragua desired the ratification of a treaty with such a guarantee to prevent further revolutions and establish a permanent and stable government. He agreed that it would tend to preserve in power for the present, at least, the administration now in office.

Senator Smith, of Michigan, brought out that 51 per cent of the stock of the Nicaraguan railroad had been bought by American bankers for $1,000,000, and that the other 49 per cent has been hypothecated for a like sum.

The committee did not complete its examination. Mr. Douglass and Mr. Bryan will return Monday to give further testimony.

PLANNING TO ERECT BIG MEDICAL COLLEGE

St. Louis, Mo., June 19.—Plans for negotiating a long term loan with which to begin the building of one of the greatest medical colleges in the world, are being considered by the faculty of St. Louis university, a Jesuit college, which ultimately will come into possession of the estate of James Campbell, the value of which is estimated at $20,000,000 to $40,000,000, according to a story printed here today.

By the terms of the Campbell will, the entire estate passes to the university for the building of a hospital and for the "advancement of medical science," as soon as Campbell's widow and only daughter die, or if the daughter has children, 21 years after the death of the daughter.

MOUNT LASSEN EMITS SMOKE FROM TWO VENTS

Redding, Cal., June 19.—There seemed to be no doubt today that Mount Lassen is now smoking from two craters—the original vent near the summit, from which all the serious eruptions since May 30 have broken out and a new blow hole on the south slope, which nobody has dared explore to date.

The new vent was first reported two days ago. Today a telephone message from a power house 25 miles from Mount Lassen reported that dense smoke was pouring from the south slope.

DE LAVAL

ARE TIME TESTED

Every little while you hear of some brand new cream separator, claiming to be a "world beater" and just as good as the De Laval but a little cheaper. These "mushroom" machines stay in the limelight only until they are "found wanting" by the the users and in a short time drop out of sight.

It takes years of experience to build a "good" cream separator. More than 30 years of experiments and experience have made the De Laval pre-eminently the best machine on the market for the separation of cream from milk.

If you buy a De Laval you run no risk of dissatisfaction or loss. It's time tested and time proven. Why experiment? Why take chances with an inferior machine when you know that the De Laval is the best machine for you to buy.

If you are thinking about buying a separator we will consider it a favor if you will permit us to set up a De Laval for you on your own place and have you give it a fair trial.

Rev. Schneider and family autoed up from Alden, Monday, visited friends here a short time and then went to Garner to spend the week at the camp meetings.

Moving pictures will be given twice each week until further notice. On Thursday evenings commencing at 9:15 and again on Saturday evenings at the usual hour.

E. P. Dow and family of Rake autoed over here Monday, from Shelfield, where they have been visiting their son, Elmer, and spent the day here at the Mrs A. B. Shaffer home.

Ten auto loads of Belmond boosters with their band were here Wednesday, advertising their 4th of July celebration and promised to show all those who attend a very good time.

The Signal in their write-up of the recent Garner-Klemme game stated that our lone score was the result of an error. We wonder how Garner received theirs? Errors if you please.

Rev. Thiel leaves for Norwood, Minnesota, the latter part of the week for an over Sunday stay, consequently there will not be any preaching services at the German Reformed church, Sunday.

When a manufacture looks for a change in location he usually selects a place where the business men and people are alive and up to date. The advertising pages of the home paper always tell the story.

There are 1,054 automobiles registered from Hamilton county Among them are 377 Fords, which proves the statement that every third car is a Ford From the present outlook, the total Iowa Registration will easily exceed the 100,000 mark.

The Klemme ball team will play at Forest City, July 4th. A good bunch of rooters should follow the team as good connections can be made by train. Forest City is planning a very good celebration and a large amount of money has been raised to entertain her visitors. Chautauqua is also that week.

A large crowd attended the lecture and entertainment under the auspices of the Northern Lumber Co. at the opera house on last Thursday evening. A representative of the American Woven Wire Co gave an illustrated lecture, and one of the other features was free cigars, and the giving away of a woven wire stretcher. Joe Harlan was the lucky man.

The Klemme ball team has ordered new uniforms which they hope to receive by July 4th. A subscription was passed among the business men and others to raise the money. Some signed up willingly while others—well you know how it goes. The ball team have been paying all their expenses including $30.00 rent for grounds and deserved better treatment than they received generally. In behalf of the ball team we wish to heartily thank those who did donate.

Warren Chamberlain, who is an Ames boy, and who is a student at the University at Valparaiso, Indiana, certainly holds the world's record when it comes to addition. In a recent contest he added and put down ten columns of figures, twenty figures high in twenty seven seconds. It is claimed that modern adding machines with expert operators cannot equal this record. Iowa leads in everything.

There was something doing in the wrestling game at the carnival. On Monday evening, Stanley Beals, the lightweight champion of Europe? agreed to throw Martin Jensen in fifteen minutes or forfeit $25 Beals forfeited the $25. Tuesday evening Beals wrestled Harvey McPeak and agreed to throw him in thirty minutes or forfeit $25. They wrestled thirty minutes without a fall and Beals was out another $25. On Wednesday evening Beals and McPeak wrestled again and this time Harvey agreed to throw the carnival company's champion twice in thirty minutes and he did it in fifteen. Beals is a fast, clever wrestler, but he was handicapped considerably by having too much McPeak on the mat.—Corwith Hustler.

AMERICAN WOMEN ARE BARBARIANS, HE SAYS

Max Nordeau, Great French Writer, Bitterly Flays Uncle Sam's Daughters.

Paris. Special: Max Nordeau, the famous French writer, says in the June La Revue:

"Ever since Dumas wrote 'The Forsigner,' American men have figured innumerable times in European plays, but you look vainly for the portrayal of the American woman in European literature. She never inspires our novelists or playwrights, who pass her by with indifference.

"Yet she is everywhere among us; she is found where life is costly and where fashion's slaves foregather

"She does not conceal her liking for Europeans, yet she is never a welcome guest except in the circle of fortune hunters. She is queen of the Rue de la Paix and of dressmaking salons, because she is not only content to buy, but distinguishes herself from elegant European women by paying for her dresses.

"Musicians and painters court her, but independent people who do not expect any monetary profit from her are never attracted to her.

"She never succeeds in forming an intellectual circle round her, nor does she play any role in society except that of brutal opulence

"She has a veneer of good manners and is perfect in horsemanship and winter sports, but at the bottom she remains a barbarian, who has not yet penetrated the profound sense of European civilization and our refinements of thought and sentiment.

"She has no culture also, because American men do not demand it of her They ask her to be pretty and elegant. She must be admired so he may be envied She must be one of the queens of the so-called smart set.

"It is her misfortune she has no ideals. Her only object in life is to surpass her rivals. If another woman possesses a seven-row pearl necklace, she must have one of 10 strands. If another has a fur cloak costing $100,000, must have one costing $160,000.

"Such are her thoughts and ambitions. Her strongest sentiment, perhaps the only one, is self-adoration."

Why is the barbarian American woman devoid of all culture?

Why do European playwrights and authors despise her as totally uninteresting and unworthy to have her character delineated in European plays or books?

Why does the American man deify her, rendering her the most conceited and self-centered type of woman in the world?

All these questions have arisen in Paris drawing rooms and at fashionable dinner tables, following Nordeau's stinging denunciation of Uncle Sam's womankind.

Nordeau, in his merciless pilloryirg, makes no reservations beyond saying that the American woman can't be blamed for her lack of culture and refinement

From Bandit to Patriot.

From the Kansas City Star

"I believe," an Englishman well acquainted with General Villa, told a correspondent of the Independent, "that responsibility is changing Villa. Francisco Villa, the successful general, is a very different person from Pancho Villa, the bandit."

It is a change that often takes place. Men develop under responsibility. Charles Francis Adams, appointed minister to England by Lincoln, never got over the disappointment he felt in his first call on the president with Secretary Seward, when Lincoln devoted the entire conversation to the Chicago postmastership. That wouldn't have happened a year later when all of Lincoln's hidden powers were coming out under the developing of the great struggle between the states.

It frequently has happened that a man of utopian theories, chosen to office and confronted with practical questions of getting results, has settled down into what seems hidebound caution.

That a once irresponsible bandit, animated only by discontent and the desire for loot, might settle down into a patriotic democratic leader is quite within the range of possibilities.

"There was a thick fog on that day, and out of it, and out of the wood we must pass, rushed with wild cries a cloud of mounted Cossacks across the road within 20 paces of the emperor himself. But General Rapp dashed forward at the head of two mounted squadrons of chasseurs and grenadiers of the guard who always followed the emperor, and the Cossacks were put to flight. I was in the charge; I was serving temporarily in the place of one of Rapp's officers, because, on account of my late weakness, it was thought well that I should be on horseback. So it happened that, as the skirmish finished, I saw coming toward me a figure in a furred coat and cap, brandishing a Cossack lance—rushing toward the emperor. I dashed down on the mad Cossack, as I thought him, and passed my great saber through his body. And the man fell, and as he fell the fur cap went off and he groaned and looked up at me with dying eyes—it was Zappi"

"Ah!" The little flinger sprung up and stood, fists clenched, threatening. One would have thought it was this second that the general had sabered Zappi.

"May I live a moment?" the general inquired. "Till I explain. Zappi did not die"

"Ah!" again. And Francois sank relieved on the stool, yet with stern eyes still on the general's face. The general laid the papers aside.

Not he. He had seized the lance from a Russian whom he had killed—it was most imprudent, especially in the dress he wore, which did not show the French uniform underneath. It was my turn then to play nurse. He was placed in one of the carriages of the emperor, and I cared for him as my own brother, and he came through it all, and went back to Italy, to his home."

The general's deep-set eyes were gazing now above Francois' head out through the narrow window where the boy's table stood, across the mountain's slope, to the blue distance.

"Alessandro, my friend," he spoke in his gruff tones, yet softly, "shall we see each other again? So close through that black time, so far apart now in the peace of our homes! Those warm hands which cared for me when I was freezing and dying in Russia—I shall touch them perhaps never again, never again!"

Francois, forgotten in the general's very French excess of emotion squatted in front of him and regarded him in a practical peasant fashion. With that he spoke, businesslike, fatherly.

"One should not say that word never, my seigneur," he remarked. "One should believe that the good thing will happen, and if the God thinks best it will happen. Besides that, if one believes a thing to be true, it is all the same as if it were true."

The general, brought to the right-about by this firmness, looked down with an enormous frown. "Ha! A wise little old marshal! It is lucky for me that I have such to superintend me. How came you to know these great thoughts, monsieur?"

"It is my mother who says that," Francois answered, undisturbed by the sarcasm "So, my seigneur, because my mother says it, I know it to be the truth."

"Ha!" exploded the general, and then reflectively: "It is a simple and inexpensive philosophy—on the whole there might be worse."

CHAPTER IX.

THE CROWN OF FRIENSHIP.

In a claw-footed, carved, old, mahogany desk of a Virginia house, in a drawer where are packets of yellowed letters tied up and labled, is a letter written years later, referring to that earlier time in France. Perhaps this bit of the chronicle of Francois Beaupre could not be told so vividly as in these words of Francois written from his prison. He begins with the account of an adventure, of a ride for life.

"So dear Alixe," he finishes this—the detailed story of his capture—"down went the poor horse, and over his head I spun into the ditch with a bump on the skull which dazed me. And when I came to there were the heavy Austrians around me, gaping to see the prince. And only Francois Beaupre to see, which they found out pretty promptly, as I have told you before, and how I defied them. But it was a good ride; I felt that all through the mad rush, and if you will believe me, Alixe, and if you will believe me, Alixe, as I rode fast from my enemies that morning, with more than my own life depending on the legs of the landlord's horse, I was thinking most, not of the prince, nor yet of the death or prison which awaited me, but all the time of those rides on Coq in the park of the chateau of Vicques, when you and I went, by turns, over his lively head, and the seigneur stood by and laughed.

"You remember those rides? I have no need to ask you, but it pleases me to say 'do you remember'—it takes me out of this dark place into the beech wood with its air and lights and shadows. Away back it takes me, to that first morning when Coq came and work was not even considered for the whole day, and you and the seigneur and the two grooms—Jules I remember. I have forgotten the other's name; but I know well how he looked—and I, Francois, spent the morning in the park and you and I, by turns, learned to ride Coq. You were good at it from the first, and I—I was not bad. N'est-ce pas, Alixe? None the less Coq put each of us over his head several times—and how the seigneur shouted a big laugh each time! He treated you like a boy always, and you learned so the good things that few girls know—to throw a ball and climb and run, to be courageous and laugh when hurt. You were the best playmate in the world, Alixe, and it is Francois Beaupre, the leader of the village for play, who says it. That game of all games, riding, we learned together and took the hard knocks equally. Many times I have thanked the seigneur for many things, but never so much, I believe, as I thanked him that morning with the Austrians closing on me, for having made me a horseman—because that saved the prince.

"In a great danger they say one thinks more clearly than usual—one's mind works with smoothness and at leasure. It was so during that ride, for I followed out as I dashed along, hearing the shouts of the men back of me, the whole train of circumstances from one of those mornings with Coq in the park, to this adventure of life and death. It was the morning—you will know before I say it—when Jean Phillippe Moison, in his lovely purple clothes, came mincing down the graveled drive, as if afraid of spoiling his good shoes—and I think he was—to the seigneur, who taught us to ride Coq. Do you remember how your father thundered at him?

"'A strange monsieur to see me? Impossible! I am engaged. Tell him I will not see him.'

"And Jean Phillippe smiling, for all of them understood the seigneur, and saying gently, 'Yes, my seigneur,' turned away with the message. And your father shouted after him:

"'Stop! Come back there! What do you mean by that? Bring the monsieur to me.' And the purple clothes disappeared and appeared again in a few minutes gleaming in the sun against the gray old walls—I can see it all now, Alixe—like a large violet blossom of a strange flower. And behind Jean Phillipe was a tall man in a long traveling cloak and behind him a tall little boy. And as they came the seigneur turned to go to meet them, and stopped and stared. And the monsieur in the cloak stopped and stared, and you, mounted on Coq, and I, holding Coq's bridle, watched curiously, because of the other child, and we saw how the seigneur suddenly began to shake as if ill, and then with a hoarse shout rushed to the tall man and threw his arms about him and held him and sobbed aloud. That was a strange thing to see the seigneur do, and I never forgot it. And to think that the child who stood there, shy and unknown, was Pietro! It seems unreasonable that ever there was a time when you and Pietro and I did not know one another well.

"As I rode that day, with the Austrians after me, I thought out the whole chain of events; how Pietro had come and had stayed while his father, the marquis, went to America, and had fitted into our life and become dear to us, the big, beautiful, silent lad. And how then, because of the death of the marquis, Pietro had come under the charge of your father, the seigneur, and how he and I went away together to the military school, always more and more like brothers and—all the rest I need not recite those things to you, yet I like to do it. My thoughts, in that wild, dangerous moment, seemed to go in detail through all, from the morning that the Marquis Zappi arrived with his little son at the chateau, through the 10 years of our life together, to my coming into Italy as his secretary—and from that, by a rapid step, to this castle prison"

The rest of the letter belongs to a later part of the story. That little Pietro Zappi should be led into the narrative by the hand of his closest friend was the object for which the letter was introduced, and, that accomplished, the course of history bends back to the quiet Valley Delesmontes and the children growing up under the shadow of the castle towers.

The general, sitting in his library the morning after the arrival chronicled in the quoted letter, stared at his old friend from under his heavy brows as if trying vigorously to convince himself of his presence. The marquis, an Italian of North Italy, tall and proud and quiet, had the air more of a student than a soldier. A little the air, also of an invalid, for he stooped and walked languidly, and a cough caught him at times. He was talking, on that morning in the library, while the general listened; it was not the usual order of things. Work on the book had been given over; the young secretary had been ordered out to play and outside, through the open window, one heard the children's voices in shouts and laughter. Alixe and Francois were teaching Pietro to ride Coq. The marquis turned his head toward the window a little as the sounds of gaiety floated in and smiled gently, and the general frowned ferociously, which meant the same thing.

"So you see, Gaspard," the marquis went on in his quiet reticent way, "that I have believed in our old friendship. I have taken for granted a welcome for my boy—I could not have done it with another man. The voyage to America and my stay there will last, it may be a year. I can not take the boy with me—he is too young to travel as I must. His brother died two years ago, his mother is just dead; he is lonely; I could not leave him in Castelforte alone with servants. So I thought of my old friend, Gaspard Gourgaud, and of what we had suffered together, and how suffering binds people; and I thought of words you said once, Gaspard, that if a time should come when I needed you, no matter when or how, you would be ready. So—though I know that men in general forget and live in the present, and fret to be recalled to dead friendships—yet I dared believe you were different. I have brought Pietro to leave him with you if you will have him, while I go to America."

Nothing could have gone beyond the savageness of the general's face as his friend finished speaking. His eyes flashed fire, his eyebrows gathered in to a line of bushy defiance, his mouth set grimly; he was a living threat of assault and battery. His voice came with a fierce rumble, well suited to his look. "If you had not done it, Alessandro," he growled, "if you had not trusted me, I—I—!" and with that the thunder storm broke down.

This old officer of Napoleon had, after all his battle and killings, the simplicity and the heart of his own little girl. But he cleared his throat hurriedly with a bravado of carelessness, and before the marquis could do more than smile at him wistfully, he went on.

"It is all settled; there was no need of a word; Pietro is my son till you claim him from me, and glad enough I am to get him for as long as I may. I have a lien on a very good manner of boy already, young Francois Beaupre, whom I wished to adopt, but the lad would not give up his parents. And that makes me more eager for another. They will play better together and work better together, and they will be a good brace of brothers for my Alixe."

"Your Alixe," the marquis spoke reflectively. "She is a charming person, that little woman of yours."

Again the general looked as if in a terrific rage. "She is the best thing that lives," he announced and suddenly smiled. "Alessandro, shall I tell you what flashed into my head before you and Pietro had been here an hour?"

"What then?"

"I saw the children—your boy and my girl—together as if lifelong playmates over the big books in the window seat there, and it came to me that it would be a joy to crown one's life if—later on—" He stopped and gazed inquiringly at the calm eyes which met his.

"Yes," the marquis answered quietly. "It would be that—the crown of our friendship, if some day they might love each other."

And with that the general gave a great shout of laughter and leaned forward and seized his friend's hand in a bear's grip.

"It is unbelievable—it is heaven—it is a dream come true that you are here, Alessandro. And here we sit, after all these years, we old soldiers of Napoleon, and instead of talking campaigns and battles, we plot a marriage like grandmothers. A marriage! Listen to those babies shouting outside over the pony! Such thoughts are far enough from them—sapristi! And there is indeed plenty of time; they are only babies yet." His voice stopped, but his eyes lingered on the face of the other as if he could not look enough to convince himself of its reality. "Tell me about your journey, Alessandro, as you promised, and why you should go that unheard of distance, to that vague, just possible country, America, to get land."

So the marquis, sitting in the French castle, with the Jura mountains standing far off as he lifted his eyes, with the summer wind blowing in at the window and the children's voices calling to each other outside, told at length a story of negotiations, of business arrangements, of a tract of land not yet seen which was to become one day of vital importance to those careless children who played. He told, what the general partly knew, how many followers of the Emporer, including his brother Jerome Bonaparte, had bought tracts of land under that new government, the United States, and how several of them had gone out to this land, taking many things with them and looking to live there as in France in seigneurial dignity. How, through one of the Bonapartist emigres and through his connections in America, Zappi had been offered a chance to buy 5,000 acres in the state of Virginia; how he had considered the condition of Italy—that it was torn and worn with wars, that the Austrians were gaining in power, that his house was a marked one on the side of Italian liberty, and sure to be among the first to be punished if Austrian power were triumphant, that if such a time came it might mean everything to him or to his son to have a home and domain beyond the reach of the tyrant's hand. For that reason he had thought it wise to cross the ocean and take possession of this land; and to do this quickly, because—the marquis stopped and looked at the general, and the general looked back fiercely.

"What then?" the latter demanded savagely "It is well, of course, to do things at once, when one decides But is there any hurry in particular for you, you hardened old veteran?"

The marquis smiled his gentle slow smile "A little hurry for me, Gaspard," he answered "The doctors tell me that my heart is not strong; a man dies suddenly of that trouble sometimes."

And the general, impatient, indignant threw his arm around his friend's shoulder "They know nothing, doctors," he growled. "You will outlive me It is all villainy, such talk. Come then, Alessandro, and see if Pietro can stick on Coq."

CHAPTER X

FOR ALWAYS

Claire listened with serious calm eyes as her son told his story when he came home on the day of the new arrival at the castle. It was strange to have her boy the playmate of the children of a noble marquis and of the seigneur himself. A pang came with the thought, for it seemed to separate the little lad from her. But the grandmother had said always and the mother believed it, that the child would not grow up and live and die placidly in Vicques as had his ancestors. There was a wider destiny before him; had not the hand of Napoleon himself laid that destiny on his baby shoulder? So, like plenty of other mothers, Claire put down the selfishness of a longing to keep her own child, and for the child's sake walked a little way with him on the road which was to lead him from her.

"The great gentleman has come who once saved our seigneur's life!" she repeated after Francois. "And the seigneur is glad. Of course he is glad, my Francois. And you ought to be glad, too, and grateful to that gentleman because of all the good things our seigneur has done for you and which would not have happened, assuredly, if Monsieur the Marquis had not saved him. You should do everything that is possible for Monsieur the Marquis to show your gratitude."

Francois looked doubtful and a little depressed. "But my mother, I can not do anything for the marquis that I can think of. He would not like me to bring him vegetables, I think. And Jean Phillippe or Pierre, or else the maids carry the water for him; I could not do that as I could for you. There are so many people to do things that he would not want me."

PEACE BALL TO BE STAGED IN LONDON

Striking Features Provided for Brilliant Social Event Next Week.

London. Special: An Anglo-American peace centenary ball, as a preliminary to the celebration of the 100th anniversary of peace between English speaking peoples, is proposed by the British committee for June 10 next. It will be held in Royal Albert hall, where, it is expected, several thousand British and American guests will present a gorgeous spectacle.

The arrangements are in the hands of a committe headed by the Duchess of Teck Mrs Walter Page, wife of the American ambassador, and Princess Arthur of Connaught. There are half a dozen duchesses, a long list of other titled ladies and many prominent Americans on the committee Among the Anglo-Americans women participating will be the Duchess of Marlborough, Countess Granard, Cora, Countess of Strafford, Lady Randolph Churchill, Viscountess Acheson, Lady Bateman, Lady Speyer Mrs Ridgeley Carter Mrs Victoria Woodhul Martin and Mrs. Griffiths, wife of the consul general

Part I--Processions illustrating the making of America

At 12 o'clock the lights will be lowered and Columbus, with his two captains, will be seen standing on the poop of the Santa Maria, the ship from which he first saw America. Below him on the floor will be seen a procession of the aboriginal inhabitants of America, then the Elizabethan settlers with Sir Walter Raleigh, followed by the Pilgrim Fathers, the Dutch, the French, William Penn and the Quakers and finally the signatories to the treaty of 1814.

Part II—Britannia, followed by representatives of all British countries, colonies and states. Britannia will stand on a raised platform and the British states will be immediately followed by Columbia and the representatives of the 48 United States of America. Columbia will take her place on the platform by the side of Britannia, and will receive congratulations from representatives of foreign countries on the attainment of 100 years of peace.

Mercantile Agency's Liability.

From the New York Sun.

The liability of a mercantile agency for making false statements to its patrons concerning a person or corporation is decided by the supreme court of Idaho in Pacific Packing company vs. Bradstreet company, in which the court said:

"The only safe and just rule either in law or morals is the one that exacts truthfulness in business as well as elsewhere and places a penalty upon falsehood, making it dangerous for a mercantile, commercial or any other agency to sell and traffic falsehood and misrepresentation about the standing and credit of men or corporations. The company that goes into the business of selling news or reports about others should assume the responsibility for its acts and must be sure that it is peddling the truth. There cannot be two standards of right nor two brands of truth, one for moralizing and one for business. The law ought to look with a stern, cold eye upon the liar, whether he be incorporated or just as everyday man. If merchantile agency can safely make false reports about the financial standing and credit of the citizen and destroy his business it can then take the next step with equal impunity and destroy his reputation, leaving him shorn and helpless

ELLIS ISLAND RULES AROUSE NORWEGIANS

Parliament Criticises Treatment of Subjects at American Port of Entry.

Christiania. Special: The treatment of Norwegians at the immigration station at Ellis Island, New York, has been receiving criticism in parliament. Several members of the storthing have made speeches in which they cited instances of illtreatment of Norwegian immigrants under detention there and the foreign minister was asked pointedly what he intended to do about it.

The discussion arose from the story recently published here of a 15-year-old boy, who was detained at Ellis Island for a whole month before he was sent back to Norway. It was asserted that he was kept prisoner and that only one of several letters which he wrote ever reached its destination.

The protestin members in parliament did not criticize the immigration laws of the United States, but they insisted that Norwegians detained under these laws should be properly treated.

M. Thlen in answer to the interpellations, quoted some of the most important of the American immigration acts and said that too often the Norwegian emigrant failed to comply with the regulations because of ignorance. He agreed that there were cases of exceptional severity and cited that of a Norwegian woman and her four children who were detained because the paper by which her fatherinlaw guaranteed that the family would not become a public charge was dated a year before their arrival. She was allowed to enter while her case was on appeal, after her relatives had raised $500 bail for each child, but in the meantime one of the children died in the hospital through careless treatment, according to charges to the Norwegian legation in Washington.

Simple Flexible Coupling.

From the Scientific American.

A very simple coupling has recently been invented which consists merely of two sprocket wheels held together by a roller chain. The sprocket wheels are keyed to the shafts that are to be connected, and then the coupling is readily effected by wrapping the roller chain about the two sprockets and clasping the chain with a master link. The shafts may as readily be disconnected. The coupling has great strength because all the teeth are in contact with the chain rollers at one time. A roller bearing, instead of sliding contact is thus provided. The chain adjusts itself automatically to all variations of alignment within wide limitations. The coupling has no prejecting parts, and hence it meets with all legal requirements for safety.

The Eternal Everyday.

O, one might be like Socrates
And lift the hemlock up
Pledge Death with philosophic ease
And drain the untrembling cup—
But to be barefoot and be great,
Most in desert, but least in state,
Servant of Truth and lord of Fate.
Who does not falter at the peak
Trod daily by the steadfast Greek?

O, one might nerve himself to climb
His cross and cruelly die,
Forgiving his betrayers' crime
With pity in his eye—
But day by day and week by week
To feel his power and yet be meek,
Endure the curse and turn the cheek.
Who is there of us all may be
As was the man of Galilee?

O, one might reach heroic heights
By one strong burst of power,
One might emblaze the whitest lights
Of heaven, for an hour—
But harder is the daily drag,
To smile at trials which fret and fag
And not to murmur, or to lag.
The test of greatness is the way
We meet the eternal Everyday.

—Edmund Vance Cooke.

WITH OLD TRUTH IN MERCY

Author's Opinion of Why Women Use "Tact" Instead of Being Too Plainly Outspoken.

"I call a woman sincere," Marlow began after giving me a cigar and lighting one himself. "I call a woman sincere when she volunteers a statement resembling remotely in form what she really thinks ought to be said if it were not for the necessity to spare the stupid sensitiveness of men. The woman's rougher, simpler, more upright judgment embraces the whole truth, which their tact, their mistrust of masculine idealism, ever prevents them from speaking in its entirety. And their tact is unerring. We could not stand women speaking the truth. We could not bear it. It would cause infinite misery and bring about most awful disturbances in this rather mediocre but still idealistic fool's paradise in which each of us lives his own little life—the unit in the great sum of existence. And they know it. They are merciful."—From "Chance," by Joseph Conrad.

ERUPTION DISFIGURED FACE

Lock Box 35, Maurice, Ia.—"In the spring of 1911 our little daughter, age five years, had a breaking out on her lip and part of her cheek that we took for ringworm. It resembled a large ringworm, only it differed in that it was covered with watery blisters that itched and burned terribly, made worse by her scratching it. Then the blisters would break through and let out a watery substance. She was very cross and fretful while she had it and had very little rest at night. When the eruption was at its worst the teacher of the school sent her home and would not allow her to attend until the disfigurement of her face was gone.

"I wrote and received a sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment, which we used according to directions, and they gave instant relief, so we bought some more. It gradually grew better. Take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and be Restored to Health.

Kansas City, Mo.—"The doctors told me I would never be a mother. Every month the pains were so bad that I could not bear my weight on one foot. I began taking Lydia E. I cannot praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly for what it has done for me. I always speak a word in favor of your medicine to other women who suffer when I have an opportunity."—Mrs. H. T. WINN, 1225 Freemont Ave., Kansas City, Mo.

I could not do my housework or walk any distance without suffering great pain. I tried doctors' medicines and different patent medicines but failed to get relief. My husband brought home your Vegetable Compound and in two weeks I could eat anything, could sleep like a healthy baby, and walk a long distance without feeling tired. Locals Lose Battle

Klemme lost a hard fought game at Sheffield, Friday, when they were defeated by the score of 5 to 4. Klemme had the game apparently won up until the 8th inning when a lucky batting streak coupled with errors gave Sheffield 2 scores and tied up the game. In the ninth some more "boneheads" gave them another score after two were out, and the game was lost.

Sheffield loaded up right and imported a proffesional pitcher from New Hartford but at that it looked like Klemme's game up to the last two innings. We cannot expect to win all of our games and losing this game may serve to brace up the team and get them to put up "the old fight." A return game will be played here before many moons when the locals expect to even up matters.

The following is the score by innings;

										r	h

gress when he had been in this country but little more than five years. While a member of congress he became a candidate for the position of brigadier general, in opposition to Gen. Lachlin McIntosh, but failed. This, together with other disappointments, so incensed him against his opponent that he challenged him to a duel. The interference of friends was of no avail, and they fought it out May 15 1777. They fought with pistols at a distance of 12 feet Both were wounded, McIntosh slightly, but Gwinnett so seriously that he died as a result 12 days later.

June.

I gazed upon the glorious sky
And the green mountains round,
And thought that when I came to lie
At rest within the ground,
'Twere pleasant that in flowery June,
When brooks send up a cheerful tune,
And groves a joyous sound,
A sexton's hand my grave to make,
The rich green mountain turf should break —Bryant.

A noise like of a hidden brook
In the leafy month of June,
That to the sleeping woods all night
Singeth a quiet tune. —Coleridge.

Oh, my love's like a red, red rose,
That's newly sprung in June,
Oh, my love's like the melody
That's sweetly played in tune.
—Burns.

And what is so rare as a day in June?
Then, if ever, come perfect days,
Then heaven tries the earth if it be in tune,
And over it softly her warm ear lays.

REBELS WILL NOT ACCEPT ARMISTICE

Washington, June 27.—The constitutionalists of Mexico are determined to carry their military campaign to a conclusion regardless of participation in informal mediation conferences. Their plan was indicated here today on the arrival of Fred O. Breceda, private secretary of General Carranza, first chief of the constitutionalists, who came to confer with Carranza's Washington agents.

Confirmatory of the military plans of the revolutionists, it was learned that General Villa plans to attack San Luis Potosi next week and expects later to fight the federals in their last stand at Queretaro.

Soon after the arrival of Mr. Breceda he received a telegram from General Carranza announcing the first chief had received assurance of the cooperation and support of all the leading generals of the revolution, including Villa, and he wished the people of the United States to know that the cause of the revolutionary movements was progressing without dissensions. As to the prospect of participation by constitutionalists in the informal conference over Mexico's internal affairs, Mr. Breceda frankly stated that he had no definite knowledge. But he asserted he had come to confer with his chief's representatives here and through them with the Washington administration to present General Caranza's ideas.

PILOT LIGHTING PLANTS

HOME MADE ACETYLENE for LIGHTING and COOKING

Free the Slaves of the Lamp

An up-to-date Pilot Acetylene lighting plant can be completely installed in the average country home—ready to light up—in two days time, without injury to ceilings, floors or walls.

Once installed it means—no more lamp cleaning, filling, chimney wiping, wick triming, breakages, soot or smell of kerosene.

Instead, brilliant Acetylene Light from permanent handsome polished brass brackets on the walls, and neat chandeliers from the ceilings—city-like, elegant, up-to-date and out of the way.

Can't tip over (like kerosene lamps) where there are children—and need no mantles, wicks or chimneys.

Acetylene is, too, an ideal cooking fuel—Thousands of country families will eat food cooked on Acetylene ranges today. These ranges are duplicates in shape of city gas ranges and they have done away entirely with the drudgery of handling fuel and ashes in all these homes.

Once a month the hired man drains and refills the Pilot Outdoor generator, which sets out doors in the back yard, far away from the buildings it supplies with gas. Takes him about 30 minutes to do this. He refills one compartment with the gas producing stone, Union Carbide, and another compartment with plain water.

Shall I give you more precise figures about this "Rural Gaslight"—called Acetylene, and the simple Pilot Automatic Light Plant which makes it.

Then write me today how many rooms you've got in your house, so I can answer intelligently and to the point.

MYSTERIOUS DISEASE AMONG IOWA COWS IS WORRYING OFFICIALS

"Hemorrhagic Septicemia" Is Official Diagnosis Given at State College.

Ames, Ia., June 27.—A mysterious infectious disease, which is causing heavy losses in farm herds in Mitchell, Cerro Gordo and Floyd counties, has just been diagnosed by Dr. Kurt Schern of the veterinary research laboratories at Iowa state college. Some local veterinarians called it rabies and quarantined the farms, some gave it other names. The cases in which investigation has been completed by Dr. Schern he declares to be hemorrhagic septicemia, a disease which causes numerous hemorrhages in the internal organs and tissues. Where the disease has a foothold, fine cows or choice steers which seemed healthy only a few hours before are found dead, or perhaps individual animals or whole herds are found in a semi-crazed condition or dying. A serum and vaccine have been worked out by Dr. Schern and are now being tested.

Dr. Schern visited five different infected herds in northern Iowa at the request of local veterinarians. He found the disease affecting cattle chiefly, although sheep, horses and other animals have been afflicted according to the reports of farmers. In one the herds the owner had lost 15 head of cattle; in another, 14 head and in another 11 head. Dr. Schern examined the infected herds and also made several post mortem examinations. In three herds he was able to say definitely that the disease was hemorrhagic septicemia, although the varying diagnoses given locally made the work difficult. In the case of another herd he is doing experimental work in the laboratories at Ames to make a diagnosis, which will take two or three weeks.

Dr. Schern is carrying on work at Ames to find a remedy for this destructive disease, none being well known to veterinarians up to this time. From several outbreaks of hemorrhagic speticemia in January and February, Dr. Schern was able to isolate the germ that causes it, in the first experiments in Iowa, in the cultivation of the germ. Then he undertook to produce a good serum and a good vaccine against the disease. The task was very difficult but he has had success thus far and good results With some of the serum produced at Ames, Dr. Schern and Dr. McLeod, of Charles City, vaccinated 13 calves and four cows on one of the worst infected farms. For vaccination on another farm, serum was shipped away from Ames yesterday. It will be some time before the results of the vaccination are known.

Several farms in the three counties are under quarantine for rabies. "It is possible that rabies is there," says Dr. Schern, "but up to the present that is not certain. If rabies should prove to be present, then the dogs in the infected sections should be quarantined or shot, because dogs spread the disease. It is my judgment that we need more effective measures against rabies in Iowa than we seem to have. I believe, also that hemorrhagic septicemia is more prevalent in Iowa than is generally known."

CORONER'S JURY REPORT GRILLS CITY PHYSICIAN

Council Bluffs, Ia., June 27.—Considerable feeling, which found explicit expression in the verdict of a coroner's jury, has existed over the death of James Livingston who had been arrested and thrown in jail. Livingston was found in a hallway unconscious Saturday night He had been robbed. The man, it is said, received no medical attention until Sunday forenoon. The coroner's jury rendered this verdict

That James Livingston came to his death by rupture of the carotid branch of the middle cerebral artery on the left side sufficient to cause death There was no trace of alcohol

The evidence further shows by competent witnesses that City Physician Moth made a statement in the presence of said witnesses that it was a case of plain drunk, when same was not the fact. We think this should be a lesson to the police department and the city physician to pay more attention to cases similar to this, and they should be given all attention necessary

IOWA CROP BULLETIN.

Des Moines, Ia., June 27.—Following is the regular weekly bulletin of the Iowa weather and crop service:

With the exception of light and widely scattered showers on Thursday, Friday and Saturday night the week was dry, and until Saturday cool. The conditions were, however, unusually favorable for field work and the growth of crops The average temperature was about five degrees below the normal, and two nights were quite cool. Corn has continued to make rapid growth and most fields are clean. Much of it in southern counties has been laid by and in many fields in all parts of the state it is knee high. The cooler weather has been beneficial to small grain and grass. Winter wheat and rye harvest has begun in southern districts and will be in full progress during the coming week. There has been some damage by drought and in some localities by Hessian fly, but there has been but little rust Oats are filling well, but the straw is short. In the northern part of the state all small grain is rank. The recent rains were also beneficial to fruits, but more moisture is needed in southern counties. Potatoes are promising and garden truck is generally in good condition.

They rushed out, fearing some accident, and found Cole lying on the ground dead. He had taken the barrel in his mouth and pulled the trigger with his foot

Cole was about 55 years old and is survived by a widow and a son, Arthur

SCORNED WIFE TO TAKE REVENGE ON LOOTERS OF BANK

Chicago, June 27.—A special grand jury to inquire into the affairs of the LaSalle Street Trust & Savings bank will be summond next week by State's Attorney Hoyne, it was announced today. Hoyne, who, yesterday, said that he would not attempt to present the case to the regular grand jury sitting, but expected to be ready next week to begin offering his evidence.

Besides questioning officers of the bank and others Hoyne has been in frequent consultation with Mrs. Mary Quinlan-Kuhns, who married James Brady, state auditor, in Michigan a short time after her divorce here from Kuhns, who is suing Brady to void her marriage in this state, gave him much information.

"Mrs. Brady has made specific charges concerning the methods and actions of several employes of the bank, as well as certain public officials," said Mr. Hoyne.

The state's attorney also declared Mrs. Brady had told him of padded pay rolls and abuses in the office of the state auditor.

United States District Attorney Wilkerson today made public a report of the Chicago Clearing House association in 1911 showing that the LaSalle Street National bank predecessor of the LaSalle Trust & Savings bank was in a shaky condition three years. The report was made by a committee named on the petition of the bank which is now controlled by Willian Lorimer and C. B. Munday, for admission to the Clearing House association The committee requested the directors of the bank to replace huge sums in doubtful collateral with quick assets and to cease the practice of loaning money to Lorimer and Munday enterprises

District Attorney Wilkerson said the directors did not take the action demanded by the Clearing House association and a year later the bank secured its national charter, and its old state charter became the LaSalle Street Trust & Savings bank.

James J. Wilkerson, federal district attorney, who is also investigating the bank affairs, intimated that approximately $500,000 had been loaned on practically worthless securities. Now the bank was under government supervision. Suit was filed by the state bank, one of the smaller banks closed by the auditor, to recover $1,000,000 in assets held by the LaSalle bank.

The federal inquiry is being conducted along the lines of the John R. Walsh case. Walsh was convicted of looting from his bank to one of his many enterprises.

The Lorimer-Munday bank, it is alleged, loaned on insufficient security large sums to the Lorimer-Gabel Construction company, the Little Mill & Elevator company and the Southern traction company, all enterprises controlled by one or the other of the then national bank.

The federal authorities are investigating an item on the books showing a loan of $40,000 to Thomas H. Paynter, former United States senator and a member of the first senatorial investigating committee which sat on the validity of the Lorimer election to the Senate.

Paynter voted that Lorimer was entitled to his seat.

EX-SENATOR PAYNTER SAYS MUNDAY LOANED HIM MONEY

Frankfort, Ky., June 27.—Former United States Senator Thomas H. Paynter, of Kentucky, has issued a statement explaining how his notes aggregating $40,000, found their way into the LaSalle Street bank, of Chicago, controlled by William Lorimer and C. B. Munday, which items, it is reported, as being investigated by federal authorities in connection with their inquiry into that institution.

Mr. Paynter as a senator was a member of the first senatorial committee that investigated Lorimer's election to the Senate, and he voted in favor of Lorimer's retaining his seat.

"After my connection with the Lorimer committee had ceased," said Mr. Paynter, 'I needed $40,000 to complete a business transaction, as I supposed for a few days. Mr. C. B. Munday told me he could take my four notes for $10,000 each and use them in his banks—banks in which Lorimer had an interest. Mr. Lorimer knew nothing whatever about this transaction. The deal was postponed and I was left to take care of the demand notes. Now it seems that Mr. Munday took up some of them through the LaSalle Street bank. However, every dollar of the notes has been paid excepting $10,000 which will be paid on demand."

RELIEF FOR IOWA WIDOW

Washington, D. C., June 27. The claim committee has made a favorable report on a bill which is intended to give relief to a poor German widow of Davenport. It is to allow $1,000 to Mrs. Mary A. Bell, whose son was killed at the Rock Island arsenal. Representative Vollmer got the bill through the House and Senator Kenyon introduced it in the Senate.

n who gathered together early 1776, to consider the question pendence represented many ns and ages. Of the 56 men stituted all of the signers of aration, 24 were lawyers, 14 ists, four physicians, one a one manufacturer, nine mer- nd three who had been edu- the ministry, but who later other professions. Although e of the signing the declara- majority of the men were be- and 60 years of age, several he early 30s, and two 27. The signer was Edward Rutledge, Carolina, who was not 27 un- four months after the sign- ing The other was Thomas Lynch, jr., who celebrated his 27th birthday three days after the signing Mr Lynch was accidentally drowned at sea before he was 30 On the other hand, Benjamin Franklin was 70 at the time of signing. Equally interesting are the ages of the men when they died. Three lived to be over 90, 10 over 80, 11 over 70, 14 over 60, 11 over 50, and the remainder, with the exception of Lynch, lived to be over 44

One of the most interesting figures of that time was Josiah Bartlett Although a native of Massachusetts he came to congress as a representative of New Hampshire. Upon the adoption of the declaration by the committee it was put to a vote in congress. Unlike the procedure of today in our legislature, the names were not read alphabetically, but according to the location of the colonies, beginning at the most northern For this reason, the first man called upon to vote on the adoption of the declaration was Josiah Bartlett, and, likewise, he was the first man, after President John Hancock, to inscribe his name on that fateful manuscript

Many families in the south could probably trace their ancestry to one of the signers of the declaration had it not been for a chance misfortune Georgia sent, among her other delegates John Houston and Rev J J. Zubly to the congress Mr Houston was forced to take sudden leave from the debate however, when it was discovered that Dr Zubly was on his way posthaste to inform the crown governor of Georgia of what was taking place in Philadelphia. Zubly had been giving away the secrets of the executive sessions He was accused on the floor of congress of so doing by Samuel Chase of Maryland, but denied the charges and challenged proof. The proof was given, and he perforce fled back to Georgia, closely pursued by Houston Fortunately, for the good of the country, by the time they reached Georgia the crown governor had already been deposed by the people, had escaped and taken refuge in an armed British vessel in Savannah harbor But had it not been for the necessity of following Dr Zubly the name of John Houston would have been added to those of the other signers.

The six men who were not members of congress at the time of the signing of the Declaration of Independence, but were elected later and allowed to sign were Benjamin Rush, George Taylor, James Wilson, George Ross, George Clymer and Matthew Thornton. Of the original 50 members, however, there were five who did not sign on the 2d of August George Wythe, Richard Henry Lee Elbridge Gerry, Oliver Wolcott and Thomas McKean. There were two other men, also, who were present during the discussion and adoption of the declaration, voting for it, but who never signed They were Henry Wisner of New York and John Dickinson.

Thomas McKean is interesting not only because he was the last to sign the declaration, but also because he was closely allied with two of the colonies at the same time. He was a native of Pennsylvania, having been born in New London, in 1734. Following an elementary education, he was placed in charge of the Rev. Francis Allison, at New Castle Del. Later he read law in Delaware and was admitted to the bar of that colony. But his native colony refused to give him up, and in 1765 he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania assembly In the same year he was also made a judge of the common pleas court for Newcastle county, Delaware He was elected to congress from Delaware, serving for nine consecutive terms and in 1781 was president of the congress All this time, however, he had been continuously re-elected to his office of assemblyman in Pennsylvania. Then, in addition to being president of Delaware, in 1777 he was made chief justice of Pennsylvania. This office he held until 1799, at which time he became governor of that colony, continuing to fill the latter office until 1808. He died in 1817

Despite the fact that two of the colonies thought enough of him to give him their highest office, Thomas McKean's life was not without its thorns. In 1778, shortly after he was made chief justice of Pennsylvania, an attempt was made to impeach him. This, however failed But again in 1807 and 1808 another attempt was made, and this time a committee, made up of members of the House of Repersentatives was appointed to consider and report on the matter This led to a resolution that Thomas McKean, governor of the commonwealth, be impeached of high crimes and misdemeanors." After considerable postponement and much discussion the resolution was carried in the House And then, on the same day it was indefinitely postponed, and never again brought up.

When on August 2, 1776, the signatures of the delegates were placed upon the declaration, with but one exception, merely the name of the man was written That exception was Charles Carroll, whose signature he wrote thus "Charles Carroll, of Carrolltown." He is interesting on another score, also, as he outlived all the other signers, attaining the age of 95 He died in November, 1832. Charles Carroll was not a delegate to congress during the discusion of Lee's resolution. Intensely interested in the movement, however, he visited Philadelphia early in 1776 in order to be present at the meetings. His feelings were so well known that congress appointed him a commissioner to accompany Franklin and Chase to Canada in February of that year.

Upon his return Richard Henry Lee's resolution had already been introduced and was being discussed. Realizing the importance of the occasion, Carroll hastened home to aid in turning the tide of Maryland's sentiments, which he succeeded in doing. New instructions were issued, and he himself appointed a delegate to congress. That was on July 4. He arrived in Philadelphia on the 8th, and was among the first to place his signature on the document.

Not all the men who signed the declaration were college graduates, large land owners and high officials. Some there were who reached the pinnacle of distinction from the bottom of the ladder. Such a man was Roger Sherman of Connecticut. Born in Massachusetts, he was the son of a small farmer. When 19 his father died, leaving him the only support of the family which was large. No other employment being open to young Sherman who had small educational opportunities he was apprenticed to a shoemaker. In 1743 it was thought expedient to move, and New Milford, Conn., was chosen. Roger made the entire journey on foot, carrying the tools of his trade with him.

In New Milford he continued at his trade for some time That, however, was not his only occupation, for it is said that while he was employed at his bench he always had a book so placed that he could read it whenever his eyes were not on his work. He was especially fond of mathematics, and his industry and desire were so great that by the time he was 27 he was making astronomical calculations that were published in an almanac printed in New York.

After a short time in New Milford he entered business as a merchant and also began to read law. So successful was he in his law work that friends finally persuaded him to apply for admission to the bar This he did, and he eventually became an eminent jurist In 1755 he was chosen a member of the general assembly of Connecticut, and still later was made a judge.

John Hart, of New Jersey, according to one authority, has nothing to wish for Happily married, the father of a a large and promising family, the owner of a comfortable farm which furnishes him all the financial support needed, he had nothing to ask for. Yet he did ask for liberty, a desire, it is claimed, inspired by no wish or need for gain, but only from an inborn sense that it was the right of every man This it is said, he inherited from his father, Edward Hart, who raised the volunteer crops known as "The Jersey Blues" With these he marched to Quebec, arriving there in time to share in the victory and witness the fall of General Wolfe in the "old French war"

Francis Lewis, who signed the Declaration of Independence as a delegate from New York, was an Englishman by birth, having been born in Wales in 1713 When he was but 4 he was left an orphan. He was the only child, and was taken care of by an unmarried aunt While still young he was sent to Scotland, where he learned Gaelic When old enough he went to an uncle in London and entered Westminister Upon becoming of age, he inherited considerable money, with which he purchased a supply of merchandise and set out for America Forming a partnership in New York he eventually became part owner of a large and profitable business. In the "old French war" of 1754 he served as purchaser for the British. He was captured, sent to Canada, later to France, and finally exchanged At the close of the war the British government gave him 5,000 acres of land as a compensation for his military services This did not mean, however, that Mr Lewis believed in the "encroachments" of England, and consequently, when the congress was held in New York in 1765, after the "stamp act" had been passed, Mr Lewis was one of the delegates He heartily indorsed the measures that were adopted at that time, and when in 1775 delegates were appointed to the continental congress, he was one of those chosen.

Robert Morris, although an Englishman by birth, might be called the "banker of the revolution," for it was he who on several occasions was called upon to find money for the army When congress fled from Philadelphia to Baltimore, Mr Morris was one of the committee that stayed behind. Washington had been forced to retreat before the enemy, and was camped on the opposite shores of the Delaware. The British were able to obtain accurate information as to his position, but he could not do likewise with regard to theirs through lack of funds. So he wrote Robert Morris, asking for money, and the letter was brought him by a confidential messenger, reaching him after practically all the inhabitants had left Philadelphia for some safer place. Depressed, he did not know what to do, until he casually met an acquaintance, a friend, who asked for the news.

Mr. Morris told him of needing money and added. "Your security is to be my note and my honor" "Robert, thou shalt have it," replied the man, and the money was secured and sent General Washington. In 1780 Robert Morris instituted a bank in Philadelphia with others, the object of which was to establish credit by means of which congress could be furnished with means for relieving the army He headed the list of subscriptions with 10,000 pounds, to which others added sufficient to total 350,000 pounds. By this means 3,000,000 rations of provisions and 300 hogsheads of rum were procured and forwarded to the needy army. Upon still another occasion Washington wrote him that the military stores were woefully depleted and asked for aid. There was no ammunition but that in the men's boxes, which was wet All the lead possible had been secured, even the spouts on the houses.

Under such circumstances it was but natural that Mr Morris should be hard put to find a way to supply the lead However, he was a guest at an entertainment given by the Spanish minister, and upon being pressed by his host for the cause of his apparent worry, showed him the letter from Washington. His host then told him that one of his ships had just arrived at the wharf with 90 tons of lead, which she brought as ballast. "You can have my half of this fortunate supply," he said, "and there are the owners of the other half!" He secured the lead, set 100 men to work that same night, and before morning had sent a supply of bullets to the depleted army.

George Taylor was born in Ireland in 1716. His father, a clergyman, educated him for a physician. At the age of 20, however, George decided that he preferred an adventurous life, and a vessel being about to set sail for Philadelphia, he embarked, penniless and friendless, a redemptioner. Upon arrival, he met a Mr. Savage, who wanted his services and who promised to pay for his passage over provided he would work for him a certain number of years. He accompanied Mr. Savage to Durham, Pa., where he was set to work "filling," or feeding the furnace in an iron works. Such work soon raised blisters, and these, noticed by the workmen, were brought to Mr. Savage's attention. Noticing signs of education, Mr. Savage put young Taylor to work as a clerk, in which position he proved so successful that he became a useful member of the firm in a short time. He gained the esteem of Mr. Savage and upon the death of that man married his widow and thus came into possession of the business, which he enlarged and made more successful than ever.

Later he moved to Northampton, where he opened a new and more up to date business. Here he became so well liked that in 1764 he was elected to the provincial assembly, and served continuously until 1770. His business proving unsuccessful at Northampton, he went back to Durham. There he became a member of the provincial assembly in 1775, and was placed on a committee to draw up instruction for delegates to the continental congress, which were against absolute separation Five of the Pennsylvania delegates refusing to vote for the resolution favoring independence, the provincial assembly revoked the instructions, in June, 1776, electing new delegates favorable to independence, of which Robert Taylor was one.

Button Gwinnett was born in England, coming to this country when he was 38, and locating in Charleston, S. C. Later he moved to Savannah. He was elected a representative in congress when he had been in this country but little more than five years. While a member of congress he became a candidate for the position of brigadier general, in opposition to Gen. Lachlin McIntosh, but failed. This, together with other disappointments, so incensed him against his opponent that he challenged him to a duel The interference of friends was of no avail, and they fought it out May 15, 1777. They fought with pistols at a distance of 12 feet Both were wounded, McIntosh slightly, but Gwinnett so seriously that he died as a result 12 days later.

June.

I gazed upon the glorious sky
And the green mountains round,
And thought that when I came to lie
At rest within the ground,
'Twere pleasant that in flowery June,
When brooks send up a cheerful tune,
And groves a joyous sound,
A sexton's hand my grave to make,
The rich green mountain turf should break.

A noise like of a hidden brook
In the leafy month of June,
That to the sleeping woods all night
Singeth a quiet tune. —Coleridge.

Oh, my love's like a red, red rose,
That's newly sprung in June,
Oh, my love's like the melody
That's sweetly played in tune.
—Burns.

And what is so rare as a day in June?
Then, if ever, come perfect days,
Then heaven tries the earth if it be in tune,
And over it softly her warm ear lays.
—Lowell.

Mine is the month of roses, yes, and mine
The month of marriages' All pleasant sights
And scents, the fragrance of the blossoming vine,
The foliage of the valleys and the heights.
Mine are the longest days and loveliest nights,
The mower's scythe makes music to my ear,
I am the mother of all dear delights;
I am the fairest daughter of the year.
—Longfellow.

When the skies are overarching,
In their blue of dazzling splendor
And the airs, through leafy forests
Call in whispers low and tender,
When each rosy morn is wakened
By the vows of some bird lover,
And the honey bee still linger
Mid the dewy blooms of clover,
When all melody and beauty,
Earth in sweetest calm reposes,
Then heaven's fairest gift is given—
She is crowned with sweet June roses

O, queenly month of indolent repose,
I drink thy breath in sips of rare perfume,
As in thy downy lap of clover bloom,
I nestle like a drowsy child and doze
The lazy hours away

Labor Unions and the Trust Laws.

From The Outlook.

The exemption of labor unions from the operation of the anti-trust law by the provision adopted in the House of Representatives recently has been criticized as being class legislation, contrary alike to the reason and to the constitution. Last week we stated why such exemption was not unreasonable It is gratifying for us this week to record the opinion of the United States supreme court that such exemption is not unconstitutional.

By a law of Missouri, the International Harvester company was ousted from the state and subjected to a fine. The company appealed to the United States supreme court. One of the grounds for this appeal was that the law discriminated against venders of commodities and in favor of labor unions by the provision under which the anti-trust statutes of the United States are limited "in their scope and operation to persons and corporations dealing in commodities, and do not include combinations of persons engaged in labor pursuits" The same provision likewise exempts organizations and consumers.

In his opinion, adverse to the harvester company, as reported in the daily press (we have not the full text of the opinion at hand), Justice McKenna declared: "It may be there is a restraint of competition in a combination of laborers and in a combination of producers, but that does not demonstrate that legislation which does not include either combination is illegal. . . . The foundation of our decision is that the power of classification which the legislature may exercise demonstrates that some latitude must be allowed to the legislative judgment."

The supreme court thus holds that the legislature, and therefore presumably congress, can put a combination of dealers or producers in a different category from a combination of laborers. We shall not undertake to repeat here the reasons which we gave last week for believing that congress ought to do so.

Sleeping on the Floor.

Sometimes when we've got company
Ma says to me and Ted
"I hope you boys won't care if I Give Uncle John your bed."
And we don't care a single mite.
We like it more and more,
Because we know she's make for us
A nice bed on the floor.

She puts it in the parlor, too,
And makes it warm and snug;
And if we beg, she lays it in
The center of the rug;
Then we can play that we are cast
Up on a desert isle,
And all the carpet round about
Is ocean—mile on mile!

And all the tables, chairs, and things,
No matter what they be,
Are other islands, reefs, and ships
That we can hardly see;
And in the corner is a lamp
Upon a little chair,
That we pretend's a big bonfire,
Wild animals to scare!

The dimlike pictures on the walls
Are pirates, big and bold,
A-trying hard to get to us
To steal our chests of gold;
And then we smuggle up quite close
And make our plans for fight!
How grand and shivery it is Down on the floor at night!

When I grow up and get so rich
I'll have a mansion built,
I won't have such a thing as beds
But I'll just take a quilt,
Or maybe comforts one or two,
And pillows three or four,
And spread them on the parlor rug,
And sleep upon the floor!
—Harvey Peake.

SUMATRA IS SHAKEN BY TERRIFIC QUAKE

Many Killed and Injured and Widespread Damage Is Reported.

Batavia, Java, June 27.—Many were killed or injured today in a violent earthquake which caused widespread damage in southern Sumatra.

The offices of the Dutch resident officials and many other buildings collapsed at Benkoelen, the capital, and telegraph and cable communication was interrupted

The British steamer Kintuck of the China Mutual Steam Navigation company, crowded with immigrants, was reported 10 hours overdue and it was feared that she had met with an accident in connection with the earthquake A steamer has been sent from here to search for her.

Sumatra is the largest island of the Malay archipelago except Borneo It has a number of volcanoes, some active and some believed extinct. The population is estimated at 3,500,000, among whom are about 5,000 whites.

REBELS WILL NOT ACCEPT ARMISTICE

Washington, June 27.—The constitutionalists of Mexico are determined to carry their military campaign to a conclusion regardless of participation in informal mediation conferences. Their plan was indicated here today on the arrival of Fred O Breceda, private secretary of General Carranza, first chief of the constitutionalists, who came to confer with Carranza's Washington agents.

Confirmatory of the military plans of the revolutionists, it was learned that General Villa plans to attack San Luis Potosi next week and expects later to fight the federals in their last stand at Queretaro.

Soon after the arrival of Mr. Breceda he received a telegram from General Carranza announcing the first chief had received assurance of the cooperation and support of all the leading generals of the revolution, including Villa, and he wished the people of the United States to know that the cause of the revolutionary movements was progressing without dissensions. As to the prospect of participation by constitutionalists in the informal conference over Mexico's internal affairs, Mr. Breceda frankly stated that he had no definite knowledge But he asserted he had come to confer with his chief's representatives here and through them with the Washington administration to present General Caranza's ideas.

Mr. Breceda conferred with Luis Cabrera, one of General Carranza's confidential agents here who is urging participation in the mediation and later with Rafael Zubaran, chief Washington agent of the constitutionalists. Later the three conferred again and then General Carranza at Monterey was in touch with them by telegraph. Breceda who does not speak English, said of his mission, through an intrepreter:

"I have no instructions personally to confer with your secretary of state or your president. Perhaps my colleagues here might do so."

Mr. Cabrera after his morning conference with Mr Breceda, was in an optimistic mood but when asked directly about the mediation plans said:

"I know nothing yet. We must confer later today with General Carranza"

MEDIATION AT STANDSTILL WAITING ON REBEL CHIEF

Washing. June 27—Final word was expected to reach here today from Carranza, constitutionalist chief, specifically outlining his attitude toward a proposed conference with his enemy's envoys on the establishment of a provisional government in Mexico. He had telegraphed his representatives in Washington that he would send them instructions on reaching Monterey where he was to arrive late yesterday Barring delays in transmission, the telegram should be received here late today.

Confidence was expressed that Carranza would consent to the conference. Villa's victory at Zacateas places more than half the republic's territory under constitutionalist control gave the revolutionary leader a vantage point it is said from which he could dictate reorganization of the government. If an agreement were reached at the proposed meeting it would bring the mediation proceedings at Niagara to a successful conclusion, both the Huerta and American delegates having reached terms for settlement of international differences.

Constitutionalist agents here are ready to proceed to Niagara or some point nearby immediately on receipt of instructions from their chief.

Alfredo Breceda, personal representative of General Carranza, reached Washington today from Saltillo bringing communications believed to have a bearing on the proposed informal negotiations for the pacification of Mexico. Breceda, with Luis Cabrera and Rafael Zubaran, went into conference with F. R. Villaircencio, another representative of the first conference.

Breceda, while declining to make any statement, declared that some announcement as to the purpose of General Carranza might be expected within a short time.

NOT KNOWN JUST WHERE PARLEYS WILL BE HELD

Niagara Falls, Ont., June 27.—Mediators and American and Huerta delegates were inactive today awaiting definite word from the constitutionalist agency in Washington as to the time and place for the informal conference between the opposing Mexican factions.

It is considered unlikely the parleys between the Huerta and constitutionalist representatives would take place here, nor is it probable any city in the United States will be chosen for the conference Ottawa and several resorts on Lake Ontario have been mentioned.

Chas. (Barney Oatsfield) Papousik is the owner of an Imperial auto which he purchased, Monday, from the Klemme Co-Operative Auto Co. Chas. worked up considerable reputation as a chauffeur recently when he attempted to climb a tree with Dr. Missman's car. Chas. enjoyed the sensation so much that our readers need not feel surprised if he pulls off a few more similar stunts. Chas. will learn fast and will soon be steering the durn thing with one hand--at least most of the young fellows practise up on that feature so they can put their left arm to better use.

A swarm of bees lit on one of Chas. Stiehl's horses, Tuesday, and the animal was stung so badly that it died a few minutes later. Chas. was changing the bee hives and the bees became so vicious that he ran into the barn in order to seek a dark place, thinking the bees would leave him. His team was tied a short distance away, and they made for them with the above result Mrs Stiehl was stung quite bad while attempting to chase the bees away from the horses and is nursing numerous sore spots. The horse that died is easily worth $200 and means quite a loss, especially at this time of year.

A Story On "Molly"

W. R. Bloom and family of Klemme, came down one evening last week to call on Belmond relatives. The trip was made in a fine new auto which Walt recently purchased while in Chicago. It is said that the new car—we forget the name—has it on any other car in Northern Iowa, in size, price, power, finish and every other detail. It made us think of the story Col. Diehl used to tell on "Molly." A good many years ago Diehl clerked in the general store conducted by Girlie Pritchard and Bloom was a farm laborer in that locality. "Molly" came into the store one cold winter morning; he was somewhat scantily clothed, his toes were sticking out of his boots and he was without money. He told Diehl that he wanted to be trusted for a pair of boots and some tobacco Hank said, no, Molly, I'll let you have one or the other on time, but not both, which will it be?" "Molly" hesitated. "Well Hank" he said, "I guess I can get along without boots until spring, give me the tobacco." The story' if true, happened many years ago, and since that time Walt has prospered and is doubtless entitled to the fine touring car in which he and his estimable family find much pleasure,—Belmond Herald-Press.

By an oversight we neglected to mention the red hot ball game between the local aggregation and that of Klemme at the latter place last week. It terminated in a scrap, the local club getting the small end of both affairs, the game and the fight It does not seem to us that such tactics are the best with which to win games. Nobody was killed and no arrests were made.—Belmond Herald-Press.

The above from the Herald-Press is misleading. Belmond's player started the fight and it's result did not have any effect on the score of the game. In fact, comparing the two teams, man for man, Klemme can easily defeat Belmond nine games out of ten and by a much larger score.

CHAPTER X—(Continued).

Claire considered; this view was true; yet she wished her son to feel his part of the obligation to the marquis and to discharge it "It is true, Francois. Yet there may be something which you can do for him, if it be only to bring him a book gladly. Moreover, it is this which makes one's life happy—doing things for others. Watch and be ready to serve him with a good will when you may because of the thing which he did for our seigneur. Also be a friend to the young monsieur, his son— you can do that, for you know well how to play and to help other boys in playing"

Francois nodded, and his exquisite smile, a smile whose sweetness and pathos and brillancy went straight to the hearts of people, lighted his small face "I will do that, mother. It will please me to do that."

Next morning the little brown figure which trudged through the beech wood was brightened by a large and vivid boquet held in his two hands, a point of color among the swinging shadows, blossoms from the new garden, growing now as only Claire knew how to make things grow

When the tap of Francois at the library door, where one heard men's voices talking, had brought the general's loud command of "Entrez," the little brown figure and the large bunch of flowers came in together and the boy marched straight to the stately Italian Snapping his heels together as his mother had taught him he made a stiff deep bow, and presented his nosegay The marquis, a little astonished at this attention, received it with grave courtesy but without much cordiality, it seemed to him rather an odd whim of Gourgaud's to have this peasant child about as one of his own family And the gift of the flowers appeared a bit presumptuous. So that Francois' first effort at showing his appreciation of the marquis' heroism was not altogether successful.

But Francois did not know that; to him all the world was kindly, with different manners of kindliness. The manner of the marquis was graver than other people's, perhaps—what then? The kindliness was undoubtedly there below the gravity And it was this monsieur who had saved the life of the seigneur that, after all, was the whole matter Francois wasted little time thinking of other people's feeling toward himself He was much too busy with a joyful world of his own at the ever new goodness of his world To the marquis who hardly noticed him, he proceeded to constitute himself a shadow

"We shall walk to the village together, Alessandro," the general decided, of a morning in his sudden way, and shouted forwith for 'Moison' Ho there, Moison' The cloak and hat of monsieur the marquis'"

But before Jean Phillippe had time to get to the door, the small person in homespun had fled like a rabbit and was back loaded with paraphernalia He worked as faithfully as ever with the general at the great book, what times the general could spare now to work away from his friend, he played with his might as always yet there were many times when he would squat at a distance behind the chair of the visitor motionless, while Alixe and Pietro tried vainly to lure him away At the first sign of a service to be done for the marquis he was up and at it always quicker, always more intelligent than the footman. The marquis could not help seeing these attentions and went through two or three stages of feeling about it—bored, irritated, amused flattered. The lad trotted at his heels as unobtrusively as a small dog and it was not in the marquis' nature—a gentle nature, if proud and reserved—to resist such determined devotion. So the little brown shadow made it way finally into his slow friendliness.

"You have thrown a charm over my boy Francois Alessandro," the general said, well pleased And the marquis answered thoughtfully

"It is a boy out of the common, I believe Gaspard. At first I thought it a mistake that you should raise a child of his class to the place you have given him but I see that you understand what you are about. He is worthy of a good fate"

"I believe he is worthy of any fate," the general said "and I believe he will make his fate if he has a chance, a good one; that's a great one. He has uncommon stuff in him. I mean to give him his chance" And with that there was a conversation as to boys between the two friends.

The day came, after two months of such renewals of friendship when, on the next morning, the Marquis Zappi was due to start on his long journey to America. Out on the lawn, in the shadow of the beech trees he sat and watched his son playing ball with little Alixe. Then he was aware of Francois standing before him. The boy held something in his closed hand, and with that he opened his fingers and stretched it to the marquis. The marquis looked inquiringly at the yellow metal

"What is this?" he asked; he was prepared now to be surprised by this boy about once in so often, so he simply suspended judgment at a thing unexpected.

"It is for you, Monsieur the Marquis." Francois smiled radiantly and continued to present the ten-franc piece.

The marquis, astounded, drew back with shock of indignation. Was this peasant child offering him money? Francois went on happily, convinced that he was doing something worth while.

"But you may take it, Monsieur the Marquis; it is indeed for you. It is my own; the seigneur gave it to me on my birthday, and my father did not put it with the savings, but said it was to be mine to do with as I chose. I choose to give it to you, Monsieur the Marquis. So that you may have plenty of money—I know well what it is not to have enough money It is a bad thing. And it is convenient when on a journey —money." He nodded his head, as man to man. "So, as it is mine, I give this to you."

The brown fist was outstretched, the gold piece glittering in it, and still the marquis stared speechless. Never in his life had any one presumed to offer him money. He looked up at the face of the little peasant; it shone with peace and good will; he put out his hand and took the gold piece and looked at it a long minute, and drew a leather case from his pocket and placed it within carefully, and put it away.

"Thank you, Francois," said the marquis. And then he considered again the shining little face. "Why have you done this, Francois?" he asked. "Why do you always—do so much for me?"

"Monsieur the Marquis," Francois spoke eagerly, "it is not much I have done before, only little things. This, I know it, is much, for it is a large sum of money and may be a great help to you. I am glad of that, Monsieur the Marquis." By now Francois was squatting cross legged at the feet of the marquis. "I do it because you did that thing."

Then the marquis was entirely bewildered. "Did that thing? What do you mean, Francois?"

"That thing in Russia, for my seigneur. When you saved the life of my seigneur."

"Oh," said the marquis and stared down at the boy anxiously explaining.

"I have been afraid that I could never show you how I thanked you for the life of my seigneur. I am sorry that my seigneur sabered you afterward, but that was a mistake. Monsieur the Marquis, you understand that it was a mistake?"

"Quite," said Monsieur the Marquis.

"You have forgiven my seigneur?" Francois demanded.

"There was nothing to forgive, Francois. It was, as you point out, a mistake."

"Yes, Monsieur the Marquis." The heels of Francois came down on the sod with a whack of satisfaction as he sprang to his feet. "So it is all arranged. Only that even the gold is not enough But I will do more. I will be a friend of Pietro. That will please you, will it not?"

The marquis was silent. "But I know that. It is a good thing to be friends—with me. Any boy in the village of Vicques would be glad to be my friend, you know, monsieur the marquis. So it will be a good thing for Pietro. He is six months younger than I; I can teach him how to climb and how to fight and how to take care of himself. And I will, because of that thing you did. Because, too, I think well of Pietro and besides because of your kindness to me."

"My kindness to you?"

"Yes, monsieur the marquis—because you have been so kind to me."

And the marquis, in the silence of his soul was ashamed.

The next day he went. As they stood, gathered in the big doorway, he told them all good-bye and lifted his boy without a word. As he set him down he turned toward the carriage, but in a flash he turned back as if by a sudden inspiration, and laid a hand on little Francois' shoulder.

"You will remember that you promised to be a friend to Pietro, Francois?"

"Yes, monsieur the marquis," the child answered gravely.

The marquis caught Pietro's hand and put it into Francois' and held the two little hands clasped so together in his own. "Always?" he demanded.

"Always," Francois repeated quietly, and those who heard the word spoken believed it.

CHAPTER XI.

THE CASTLE CHILDREN.

Imperceptibly to the child, the life of Francois swept into a changing channel. More and more he belonged to the general the castle, less and less, though he still lived with them and was faithful to them, did he belong to his father and mother and the village life. After a few months an event came which separated him from the old order sharply.

There was a farm in the Valley Delesmontes—five miles it was from Vicques—which was a dependence of the seigneury, for centuries the same family had held it, and it was considered the richest holding for a peasant in that part of the world. Just now the family all at once came to an end. It was necessary to find new tenants, and the general offered the place to Le Francois and La Claire. Even in their best days they had not been so prosperous as this would make them. It was a large farm of 400 acres, with a big house, with gardens and farm buildings and many horses and cattle—a rich, great place for them and for their children. There could be no question as to accepting the offer. They could have their family together once more and give them advantages beyond what had ever been planned; it was a new start in life. And Le Francois, having learned his lesson so bitterly, could be trusted now to make the most of it. It was almost a miracle to happen in old, quiet, little Vicques, where changes came mostly by slow years, not often by thunderclaps. Yet beautiful as it was, there were drawbacks. One must leave one's village where one's self and the grandfathers and the great-grandfathers and before that others, had been born and buried; one must leave one's old house down the street there, and the dream of buying it back, which had kept despair out of these months of poverty; moreover, what about Francois?

La Claire and Le Francois, sitting stiffly on the fine chairs in the general's library, where they had been brought to hear the great news, asked that question suddenly in a breath. The general glowered at them from deep eyes.

"There is the screw." He fired the words at them like hot shot and La Claire shrank a little.

"There's always a screw somewhere in every good thing. This time it's the boy."

There was a silence. Claire trembled. "The boy is your boy," the seigneur of of the castle went on, quietly enough, and then in a flash brought his fist down on the table with a roar. "But, by heaven, he's my boy, too, now. He's a miracle of a boy and I love him like a son and I want to give him such a chance in life as I would have given had he been born my son. Are you going to stand in the way of that?"

Like bullets the words struck La Claire; she saw the way they led, and she rebelled at fate. It was cruel, now when they were able again to do all for the child which they had planned, to take the child away; yet that very ability to do for him was the gift of the man who wanted him. What could she say?

"It will go hard with the lad to give us up," she brought out softly.

"He won't give you up; I should not respect him if he gave you up," the general thundered, and the two peasants breathed more freely. This great good fortune was not, after all, the price of their son.

By degrees the three came to an understanding. And the peasant parents, seeing how the general, as he had said, did indeed love their boy; seeing also that he had a power beyond theirs to develop him; seeing that advantages and a career were waiting for little Francois if their love for him should be unselfish; seeing these things, the father and mother agreed to the general's plan. A tutor was to be engaged for the three children; Francois was to live at the castle as if—it should be explained to him—he were going away to school, and every Friday he was to walk to the Ferme du Val—the Valley farm—and stay with his people until Sunday afternoon.

So, without realizing the change, the boy who had been the child of a peasant cabin became the child of the castle, and while entirely loyal to the home he still held to be his own, he learned ways of living and breathed in ideas which could not have come to him at the farm. The Fridays were eagerly looked forward to, and it was excitement and rapture to see and share in the new prosperity—the large stone house of a story and a half, roofed with immense oak shingles richly dark with age; the farm buildings clustered about it, connected with stone walls, forming a large court; the big granary, standing aside on a hill slope; and the mutitude of live stock—the 70 cows, the eight heavy work horses of the country, the six horses which pertained to the farmer for driving and riding, and the two pairs of mild-eyed oxen, used for breaking the earth. The father and mother reigned busily and happily over all this plenty, and all the brothers and sisters were together once more around them and the white-capped grandmother smiled a benediction from her big chintz chair. Such a greeting as Francois, her especial boy, got from the grandmother on a Friday evening, after his long walk!

This new order of things was well settled before six months had passed after the going of the Marquis Zappi. Francois was not now allowed to fill the place of secretary except in an incidental way. The new tutor, a serious young man whom the children astonished and worried, copied the pages of the history of the emperor. It was thought important now that Francois should work at his studies. There was a rumor already that he and Pietro might go together, perhaps, in a year more, to a military school—in fact, to Saint-Cyr itself, if the marquis thought well of the place when he came home. And then in three or four months more something happened.

Francois was alone with the general when the letter came; Marcelle, the younger footman, had been sent to the mayor's in the village for the mail, which came by post to Delesmontes and was brought on by foot messengers to Vicques, to the mayor, who distributed it. Francois' eyes were on his seigneur's face as he read the letter and the boy saw the blood rush through the weather-hardened skin in a brown-red flood, and then fade out, leaving it gray. The boy had never seen the general look so. With that, the big arms were thrown out on the table and the big grizzled head fell into them. That cut Francois' soul—his seigneur was in trouble. And before he knew it his childish arm was around the big neck and his cheek against the seigneur's. And the seigneur put up his hand and pressed the little face closer. For long minutes not a word was said and then the general's deep voice spoke, more gently than Francois had ever heard it.

"It is a good thing to have a son, my Francois," he said.

Then he lifted his head and told the boy how the friend who he had found lately, after so many years of separation, had gone away not to come back in this life, and how Pietro was fatherless. Francois, holding tightly with both fists to the general's hand, listened wide eyed, struck to the heart. It was the first time death had come near, and the face of it was grim Yet instantly he rallied, because he felt that his seigneur needed him.

"But he had a brave life, my seigneur—it is the best thing that there is. My mother said so. My mother told me that we shall smile later, when we are with the good God, to think that we ever feared death on this earth. For she says one spends a long time with the good God later, and all one's dear friends come, and it is pleasant and it is for a long, long time, while here it is, after all, quite short. Is not that true, my seigneur? My mother said it."

But all the general answered was to pat his head and say once more: "It is a good thing to have a son, my Francois."

He Was Hoping.

From the National Monthly.

A countryman named Street owned a runaway cow. As the season advanced Street was compelled to make several long pilgrimages into the country for the reprehensible animal. On one occasion the trail led on and on until Street had entered the environs of a town where a new trolley car system was installed. Just as the cow hunter turned a corner in the outskirts the car lumbered up and the conductor called out:

"Cedar street!"

The owner of the cow stopped in his tracks and bawled back at the man in blue and gold:

"No, darn her, I ain't seed her; an' when I do it won't be good fer her blamed old hide either!"

WESTERN CANADA'S NATURAL RESOURCES

PETROLEUM, NATURAL GAS, COAL AND FARM LANDS.

The developments that have taken place recently in the oil and gas fields of Western Canada have but added another to the many previous evidences that have been produced, showing the great wealth that has been an unknown asset for so many generations.

The latest reports from the oil-fields at Calgary show that there is a production there that would appear to equal the best paying fields on the continent. Experts have been on the ground for some time. It is said that one of the wells is able to produce 2,000 gallons an hour. If this is so there are but about a dozen wells in the world of greater production. During the past week discoveries of surface indications have been made which show that oil exists over a considerable portion of Alberta and Saskatchewan, while in Manitoba there have also been showings. At Battleford, Saskatchewan, a few days ago discoveries were made which led to the filing for leases on twenty thousand acres of land, all having strong surface indications. Companies were formed to carry on immediate work, and in a couple of months, or probably less, the story will be told whether oil exists in paying quantities.

But there are also the coal deposits and the natural gas deposits that are helping to make of Western Canada one of the wealthiest portions of the continent.

With the grain fields covering these hidden riches it is no wonder that a continued range of optimism is to be seen everywhere. Early reports of seeding of all grains being successfully completed all over the country are followed by reports of excellent and strong growth everywhere. During the first week in June most of the wheat had reached a growth of from twelve to twenty inches, with the most even appearance, almost universally, that has been seen for years. Oats appeared equally well, and covered the ground in a way that brought the broadest kind of a grin to overspread the farmer's countenance.

Barley, a favorite with the hog raisers, had taken good root, and was crowding oats for a first place, as to length of shoot. Cultivated fodder grasses are getting great attention, as a consequence of the inclination to go more largely into mixed farming, and the raising of hogs, cattle and horses. The weather is reported fine, just what is needed, and if present favorable conditions continue, the grain crop of Western Canada for 1914 will be the largest average in the history of the country.—Advertisement.

A Century Ago.

The trial of the editors of the Gazette Universal, which took place in Madrid 100 years ago, affords an illustration of the severity with which freedom of the press was restricted in practically all of the continental countries in those days Ferdinand VII, who but recently had been restored to the Spanish throne as a result of the consequences of the overthrow of Napoleon, had become involved in serious controversies with the cortes, the law-making body of the land, because of the latter's liberal views. A revolution appeared to be imminent. The Gazette Universal printed a statement to the effect that the officers of one of the Spanish armies had declared their determination to support the constitution and the cortes. For thus daring to take sides against the throne the editors of the newspaper were condemned by order of the king to labor six years in the galleys on the coast of Africa.

Peculiar Furnishing of Bird's Nest.

A golfer who was playing over the St. Neots (Huntingdonshire, England) links the other day hit his ball into a hedge, and after searching for it for some time without success, observed a bird's nest. From curiosity more than with any expectation of finding his ball there he looked into the nest and found not only his own ball, but three others as well.

Must Have Been.

Says Mr. Filson Young in the Pall Mall Gazette: "I began yesterday by swimming in a sunlit sea, continued by motoring through a hundred miles of lilac and gorse, and ended it by listening to the most perfect concert program at Queen's hall that I have ever heard. . . . Was it not a happy day?" The answer, Filson Young, in the affirmative, Mr. Punch remarks.

on many farms in Western Canada in 1913, some yields being reported as high as 50 bushels per acre. As high as 100 bushels were recorded in some districts for oats, 50 bushels for barley and from 10 to 20 bus. for flax.

J. Keys arrived in the country 5 years ago from Denmark with very little means. He homesteaded, worked hard, is now the owner of 320 acres of land, in 1913 had a crop of 200 acres, which will realize him about $4,000. His wheat weighed 68 lbs. to the bushel and averaged over 35 bushels to the acre.

Thousands of similar instances might be related of the homesteaders in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The crop of 1913 was an abundant one everywhere in Western Canada.

CANDLELIGHT CARRY.

By Catherine Coope.

(Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

The community in which Carry Reynolds had settled was sadly lacking in what the artistic world terms "atmosphere." Had she known of this deficiency before moving out into the country she would have stayed in town.

As it was, she had moved bag and baggage, into the house left her by an aunt, and all that was possible now remained to make the best of it.

Carry was not gifted in any of the arts, nor even unusually brilliant, yet her soul craved the beautiful, even as the drooping violet pines for the dews of heaven.

Her uncle's old house, with its still more ancient assortment of furniture and its appalling wallpaper and painted woodwork, shocked her entire senses, yet Carry's meager income would not permit of so great an expenditure as redecoration. "Everything is indescribably ugly," mused Carry. "Oh, well," she smiled a moment later. "Candlelight covers a multitude of sins, so when I got those hideous gas jets pulled out and my candles scattered about in nooks and crannies it won't be so bad."

Thus it was that, all unknowingly, Carry established for herself a reputation for eccentricity among the villagers.

"There's something queer about any one who has the perfectly good gas pipes pulled out and lights her house by them flickerin' candles," was the way in which Hiram Welch sized up the situation.

However, Carry went her way regardless of what people thought of her. Since she found no one congenial among the village people she withdrew as far as possible from them and lived according to her own schemes of existence.

When David Reaves came down from the city and took a room in the Renshaw boarding establishment he wondered how any community of people could be so totally void of all that made life vital and thrilling. He could conceive of nothing quite so drab and colorless as the people who came in during the hours of the day and called for their mail at the postoffice window.

"If I were to call my novel 'The Drab Village,' I could not find a more perfect atmosphere to study," he soliloquized, as he stood waiting for the mail to be distributed.

"Have you no village characters?" he inquired of Hiram Welch, who leaned against the long writing desk with his corncob pipe swinging from his tobacco-stained lips. "No freaks like misers or half witted people?" he elucidated

Hiram took the pipe from his lips, spat on the floor of the village postoffice and, his bony fingers down over his yellow-streaked beard and drawled an answer to Reaves.

"Wal, I don't know as we have any special odd ones except 'Candlelight Carry—her as tore out all the gas pipes and uses them pesky candles to light up with. She'll burn up the whole goldarned village with her fool notions."

David Reaves laughed. "Candlelight Carry!" The name promises interest. Tell me more of her. Perhaps I can use her."

"She ain't no use to no one and there ain't nothin' much to tell about her. She acts like any ordinary gal, but she runs about them candlesticks and goes out with a queer smile on her face, as if she was always seein' somethin' she can't see." Hiram shook his head hopelessly. "She's just kind o' cracked, I reckon."

Cracked! Well, the plot thickens. I like more than ever to meet your Candlelight Carry.' How to manage it? Do you know?"

Hiram took off his hat and scratched the place where his crowning beauty should have flourished. "Well, I reckon if you had some rusty old candlesticks and some patent candles to burn in 'em, she might welcome you, my boy."

David Reaves smiled and nodded comprehensively. "The very thing! I'll find those candlesticks in the village, maybe. Something antique that might interest her."

Hiram looked at the young stranger as he, too, might not be a little "cracked." "My old woman's got a pair o' old pewter candlesticks that har granny set a heap o' store by, but I guess she'd let you have 'em. They ain't no account to us now that we're a-burnin' this here electric [illegible], as they calls it."

"Do you suppose your wife would let me see those candlesticks if I walked home with you?" he asked, catching the long stride of Hiram and walking with him down the village street.

Hiram thought the arrangement could be made, and he was right. Mrs. Hiram Welch, a counterpart of her husband, could see no value in the candlesticks and was entirely willing to part with them.

Accordingly, with a pair of ancient pewter candlesticks under his arm and the smoldering thought in his brain that he was seeking "characters" and "color" for his writings, David Reaves sought "Candlelight Carry."

The girl met him on the tiny porch that the natives called the "front stoop." She saw the candlesticks under his arm and smiled. "You-you're an agent who has heard of my failing?" she asked.

David removed his hat and stood before her on the steps. "No—that is—I've heard of your fancy for candlesticks, but—" He became confused and stopped talking.

Carry laughed merrily. "But—what?"

"I—I was led to believe you were queer. I had pictured a native old maid whose upper story had more or less suddenly become vacant and well, you're not at all what I expected and I don't know how to apologize." David blurted out.

"Let me see the candlesticks, please," she said at last, enjoying his embarrassment.

"No—really I—"

"But I must see them. They're stunning! Come in and let me see how they look on my mantel. Do!"

And David Reaves stepped over the threshhold of the little room and knew that he had found some atmosphere for his work. He sat in the old horsehair armchair and listened while the girl told him why she was there and why the neighbors thought she was queer. "And oh, I do wish you could have seen the chandeliers that drove me to this," she laughed, throwing out her arms to embrace the room full of candlesticks.

"Don't wish that on me, I beg of you," David retorted.

"I won't if you'll peer about this old village from time to time and find me some more beauties like these two candlesticks," she said.

"I'll do it," David said firmly.

"And to reward you I'll ask my cousin, Corinne Arnold to come and spend the summer with me and you may call on—us. Do you want to risk being thought queer too?" she asked naively.

David's expression answered her.

"My cousin adores books and lives in town so you'll find her interesting, I'm sure," Carry added.

"You can well me by make it proper for me to call on you and look at you in the candlelight," David ventured as he rose to go. "Frankly I wish that."

But Carry held up her hand in protest. "Don't say it. Don't!" she interrupted. "I'm dreadfully lonely down here in this awful village, but I simply can't afford to live anywhere else and—oh, Corinne will think it a delightful change."

"Corinne will have my blessing. I'm sure for I begin to see what she'll be doing for me well for me," he added pointedly.

And for fear he would say more Carry closed the door to live in dreamland till he should come again.

Passing of the Barn.

From the Indianapolis News.

There is something to ruminate over in the passing of the barn. The disappearance of this ancient and honorable institution has been apparent to most of us for some time. It is not a fact that bursts upon us with the force of sudden discovery. We have seen the garage come and the barn go, but only now and then particularly when some old landmark associated with our own boyhood days fell before the march of progress, have we paused to reflect that there may be something in the change that is not entirely apparent on the surface.

To those of us who were boys in those benighted years we referred to a motor car as a "horseless carriage" and considered it an impracticable fancy to be classed with perpetual motion the barn holds a hallowed place in our memories. What matters it if it sheltered, more often than not, the winter's woodpile and was the scene of our painful struggle with the buck and saw. What care we—now that it is a matter of reflection—that here also was the scene of humiliating chastisement with the parental hand wielding a convenient harness strap?

When I play in our stable loft.

The good old hay's so dry and soft
An' feels so fine, an' smells so sweet,
I 'most forget to go an' eat.

And the barn was our haven and our refuge. Here, if the mood seized us, we found solitude, or, if we craved company, yet spurned for the moment the companionship of our own species, what was better than the comradeship of old Dobbin and the sympathetic friendliness of the spotted dog? The barn fitted our moods, it was the scene of our joys and sorrows, it was the repository of our secrets. And here, on more gala occasions, assembled the boys of the neighborhood. It was the meeting house, the social center of boydom. It was boydom's castle.

The garage, we know, is a necessity, and we know we lament the passing of the barn in vain. Time moves on and the motor car must be housed. But perhaps we may be pardoned if, with the new, we sigh for what used to be, and feel something in our hearts akin to sympathy for the barnless boy today. We do not envy him. The garage is a poor substitute. It lacks sentiment. As for ourselves, we feel no shame in dropping a tear on the wreckage that litters the barn site—where now, anon, the garage will rise in trim, cold mowless inhospitality.

MUST DRAW THE ATTENTION

In This Day of Expect Advertising Only Extraordinary Effects Are to Be Considered.

In order to make signs attractive nowadays they must not only be electrically illuminated, but must be spectacular or novel in construction or action. At an exhibition held recently in Chicago one of the lumber associations attracted attention to its booth by displaying an immense cypress log having a legend cut in relief in its side and illuminated from within. The sign, which was suspended aloft, had been quartered, hollowed out and fastened together again so that it had the appearance of a solid piece of timber. Electric lamps fastened in the interior made the legend stand out in bold relief and caused the spectators to wonder at the ingenuity with which the light sources were hidden.—Electrical World.

ECZEMA ITCHED AND BURNED

R F D No 2, Seymour, Mo.—"My scalp broke out with fine pimples at the start. They itched and burned so much that I was compelled to scratch them and they would fester and come to a head and break out again. The trouble was attended by such burning and itching I could not sleep, also when I sweat it burned the same. My hair fell out gradually and the scalp kept rough and dry with itching and burning. After about two years the pimples broke out between my shoulders. My clothing irritated them. I was troubled with that eczema five or six years.

Mystical Number on Coin.

No one seems unwilling to accept a 25-cent piece, even though there are on each coin the following hoodoo combination: Thirteen letters in the scroll held in the eagle's beak; 13 feathers in each wing; 13 tail feathers, 13 upright bars in the shield, 13 arrow-heads; 13 leaves on the branch; 13 letters in the word "quarter dollar."

All the mean acts of his life are quickly brought before a drowning man—or a candidate for office.

In the last year one aviator was killed for every 62,000 miles flown.

How It Began.

"Stephen," said Mrs. Masters across the supper table, "I almost had a quarrel with Mrs. Johnston today."

"About the cat?" he asked.

"No, sir. It was about a name. Our troops landed in Mexico, didn't they?"

"They did."

"At what place?"

"Why, at Very Kruz-e, of course."

"Mrs. Johnston calls it 'Wehary Crewsa.'"

"Then she's a fool!"

"That's what I almost told her. There is but one proper way of pronouncing the name.'

"Of course and that is the way I pronounced it."

"No, it is not, Stephen. It is pronounced as if spelled, 'Wa-har-ry Krouz'"

"You are as big a fool as Mrs. Johnston!"

"It's you who are the fool!"

At that moment their daughter, a high school pupil, came in, and being told the cause of the riot, she said:

"You are all wrong. The name is pronounced: 'Viehara Cruisah!'"

And then the American marines landed and took possession of the city!

A Constant Fear.

"Didn't you say Tewkesbury enjoyed a large income?"

"No. I said he had a large income."

"What's the difference?"

"In Tewkesbury's case there is a great deal of difference. He has germiphobia and is incapable of enjoying anything."

Gum Arabic and Plaster of Paris.

Into a thick solution of gum arabic stir plaster of paris until the mixture assumes the consistency of cream. Apply with a brush to the broken edges of china and join together. In three days the article cannot be broken in the same place. The whiteness of the cement adds to its value.

Effective Damper.

"When you get tired of entertaining guests with your phonograph, how do you contrive to end the concert?"

"That's simple enough. I merely put on a classic selection, and they don't want to hear any more."

Clocks and Time.

The punishment does sometimes fit the crime. An individual who for some months past specialized in thefts of clocks was last week given time.—Punch.

A Special One.

"That so? I didn't notice it."

How Mrs. Hurley Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Eldon, Mo. — "I was troubled with displacement, inflammation and female weakness. For two years I could not stand on my feet long at a time and I could not walk two blocks without suffering during cutting and drawing pains down my right side which increased every month. I have been at that time purple in the face and would walk the floor. I could not lie down or sit still sometimes for a day and a night at a time. I was nervous, and had very little appetite, no ambition, melancholy, and often felt as though I had not a friend in the world. After I had tried most every female remedy without success, my mother-in-law advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and gained in strength every day. I have now no trouble in any way and highly praise your medicine. It advertises itself."—Mrs. S. T. HURLEY, Eldon, Missouri.

Bank in Excellent Condition

The regular meeting of the Board of the State Savings Bank was held last Tuesday and after going through its securities, pronounced it in excellent condition and after completing this work and not knowing what else to do, declared the regular semi-annual dividend, which pleased every one of the board of directors and the stockholders as well and you could hear them chuckling to themselves as they deposited their dividend checks after which Mr. Bloom with the help of F. J Wenck trotted around the big Columbia-Knight car and took the boys out for a spin to the farm recently purchased by the bank after which the meeting adjourned and every one went on their way smiling.

Mr. F. J Wenck whom you all know and who was formerly with the State Savings has again made a contract to be with the bank and you will see his smiling face at the window as in former years and he will be pleased to greet you and give a hearty welcome. He need no introduction to the public as he is well and favorably known to all.

CARE OF BABIES.

In the last 20 years infant mortality has been reduced in this country 50 per cent, and it is probable that with the spread of our knowledge concerning babies the next 20 years will see the present mortality, which is still appallingly high, cut in two.

The lessened death rate has come about not so much from improved methods of treating diseases as from the successful endeavor to prevent disease It is by means of preventive measures that the fight against sickness is to be won. It is simpler safer, and more economical to keep the baby well than to cure the baby. Keep the baby well and you won't have to cure him. Our endeavors to prevent disease in babies should be directed along three lines hygiene, diet, and protection from infectious diseases.

The environment of the baby has much to do with preventing disease. A well ventilated room with an abundance of sunlight and protection against sudden changes in temperature should be provided. A daily bath with careful drying of the skin is no longer considered a luxury but a need. There is a superstition that daily baths are weakening, but the opposite is the fact

The baby's mouth should be left alone until the teeth have pierced the gums—there is danger of injuring the delicate mucous membrane of the baby's mouth—but when the teeth have appeared a small tooth brush is of the greatest service in preserving the teeth.

The eyes require no special attention after the first day of life, nor do the ears. The nose should be washed gently with a very moderate solution of table salt in the water.

Of the greatest importance is preventing disease in a rational diet for the baby. The infant has a restrictive tolerance for food and if the tolerance is exceeded it is with hazard to the baby. The one rational food for the infant is mother's milk and every effort should be made to obtain this food. Infants nursed at the breast have a lower death rate than artificially fed babies, and they resist sickness much better

Stated in figures, the bottle fed baby is in 10 times more danger than the breast fed baby. The baby should be nursed at regular intervals. The nursing should be continued for the greater part of the first year, though it is advisable to give the baby one bottle of artificial food about the fourth month, not so much as a welcome relief to the mother as getting the baby accustomed to this means of taking artificial food, which may be difficult to do at a later period.

Weaning should be accomplished gradually and according to the individual condition. If the baby cannot have human milk, the greatest care should be exercised in selecting artificial food. Cow's milk such as is sold in this country as certified milk should be selected and then modified so as to resemble as nearly as possible human milk and at the same time respect the restricted digestive power of the baby.

Lastly may be mentioned the prevention of infectious disease. Keep the baby away from every sick person; rigidly isolate every one suffering from a contagious disease; disinfect all the excreta from the sick and destroy all the effects which may have come in contact with the invalid.

It is not generally appreciated that the seed of tuberculosis is usually sown in infancy, but such is the case. Knowing that babies are especially sensitive to tuberculosis, they must be protected from every source of infection, both human and bovine. It is not possible within these limits to do more than to enumerate some of the measures of preventing disease in babies, but if our thoughts can be directed to the prevention of sickness, victory in our fight against infant mortality is assured.

Boycotting Newspapers.

From the Brooklyn Eagle.

Henry B. Joy, president of the Packard Motor company, believes in boycotting newspapers whose editorial policies are, in his opinion, inimical to business. In other words, Mr. Joy would withdraw his advertising patronage from publications which disagree with him as to the efficacy of pending proposals for business regulation

As to Mr. Joy's right to place his advertising where and how he pleases, there can be no doubt, but the wisdom of such a policy as he proposes may well be questioned. In the first place he would exclude himself from many of the country's best publicity mediums. No political policy of large importance ever finds the newspapers of the country unanimous in praise or condemnation. And those newspapers which disagreed with Mr. Joy might very properly resent the policy of a business man who withdrew his patronage because of an honest expression of opinion. The boycott is a two-edged sword.

Moreover the American public is quick to smell out the newspaper that can be bought. It doesn't think much of a newspaper whose editorial opinion can be had for the paying, and it has little confidence in the statements made by the advertisers who control its columns. The advertiser who whips a newspaper into line with his beliefs is winning a pyrrhic victory For the readers' confidence in everything the paper contains is destroyed in just the proportion that its honest opinion is repressed.

A Great Comfort.

FLYING BOAT MAKES BEAUTIFUL SHOWING IN HANDS OF PORTE

Wanamaker Hydroaeroplane Shows Perfection In Every Details—Carries 3,000 Pounds on First Flight.

(Copyright by Press Publishing Company.)

Hammondsport, N. Y. Special: With a sureness certainly that promised well for the discharge of its appointed task—the crossing of the Atlantic ocean—Rodman Wanamaker's flying boat, America, took the air late yesterday on the first of the trial flights at Lake Keuka. The first time she was driven by her builder, Glen Curtiss; the second effort, which was the more serious of the two, she was handled, and handled in faultless manner by the man chosen from the world to drive her, Lieutenant Porte, of the British navy. She answered every question in a way that delighted those concerned. She is to be given several more trial flights and then she will be boxed up and shipped to New Foundland, from where the flight is to begin about the middle of the coming month.

(By Lieut. Cyril Porte, R. N.)

Hammondsport, N. Y., June 24.—The America flew yesterday. Every expectation of her builder, Mr. Curtiss, and myself was equalled. She behaved as soberly as a woman of maturity, instead of a very fresh and shy young debutante. She showed none of the wild antics that usually go with the try out of a new craft.

She showed us speed, lifting power, buoyancy, rudder elevator and aileron control and absolutely perfect engine action. And in that last factor lies our greatest hope.

With the engines throttled down we got 50 miles an hour out of her. From the moment that she began going ahead under her own power we, getting the feel of her, knew that she would rise at our direction and when we tried her out she did.

It was as successful a first flight as ever I had a hand in and Mr. Curtiss tells me that he has never turned out a machine that has done better on her first attempt. Light as she is in her hull construction she did not make a dip of water even when traveling on surface at best speed.

The day's proceedings began when Mr. Vernon, of Syracuse, christened his flying boat which has been built alongside of the America, and then made a trial flight, after which he carried four passengers. This was an encouragement. It was just 2 o'clock in the afternoon that we got the petrol in her and starting the engines to see how they worked. We let them speed up to 1,300 revolutions per minute and their action was an earnest of their behaviour later when they were asked to do real work.

Worth of Two Motors.

The trials demonstrated clearly the worth of two motors, each hitched to a propeller. Two propellers, operated by separate motors, is rather an unusual method in this country and not often employed abroad, but it appears to the the construction of the future. Even when there was a slight variation in the number of revolutions per minute between the two blades it had absolutely no effect upon the steering controls. It was about 3 15 o'clock when the controls, having been adjusted, the work of sending her off the ways up which she had been hauled to complete the last few jobs, began. It was just 3.30 o'clock when Mr. Curtiss and I took our places in the cabin. On the top, in the engine section, stood George Ballett, my assistant pilot, and two of the Curtiss skilled workmen, George Robinson and James Lamont. Pushed out clear Hallet turned our engines over. The left was stiff and took a bit of cranking. The right started before its mate but even with that propeller going hard, we were able to keep her nose straight by warping the rudder.

When the left engine came in she seemed to gather up under us like a race horse at the starting post. When she shot forward, plowing through the water at first, until her speed made her rise to the surface. At the outset she seemed just a trifle tail-heavy, but that fault, more apparent than real, was conquered and we found ourselves traveling through the lake, or on it, at something like 40 miles an hour, Curtiss at the whel. He felt that it was his duty as the builder to see that at least she showed ability to perform the elementary part of the job for which she had been constructed. Both he and I were rather familiar with the type of control that is being used tin America. I have been used to steerting with my feet and working the ailerons with my hand. In this craft I steer with my hands and work the ailerons with foot power. We sped along for about three-quarters of a mile. Mr. Curtiss made no effort to rise although she strained under us as if anxious to get up in the air. We stopped and Robinson and Lamont got into the work boat that followed. Then we started again. We were more at home in her by now and Curtiss shot her ahead at a good pace and at 3:56 o'clock she left the surface of the water and flew.

Skips Along Like Rock.

Like the rock of legend, she climbed for 20 or 30 feet and then went on about her business on even keel. Then we came down again and she slid along the water as gently as a bird. We went about a mile further and then stopped. We turned slowly around and picked up quickly and flew back, making two jumps on the run home.

We found her elevators worked smoothly. Her engines were singing truly and in unison. The ailerons kept her balanced to a nicety. The wings lifted powerfully. In short, she was a success. Reaching the landing stage Curtiss alighted and I took the wheel with Hallett by my side. We put in a 100 pound bag of ballast and took on a 200 pound man who stood up on the engine section to observe the motors in action. Then we tried our second flight and this time she did even more than was asked of her, I wore a helmet and flying overalls and Hallett wore his overalls too. It was just 4:10 when we pushed off for the second trial. She got under way with amazing rapidity considering the stiffness of her new engines and in a few hundred yards she had left the water for the air. I let her down again and stopped the engines to test them out. They started easily, upon cranking and went ahead getting up to 50 miles an hour when she took the air She went straight and true answering her helm as easily as a toy balloon is pulled here and there by a string. We shot up about 100 feet and then continued at that elevation for about three miles, flying in a straight line Behind and over us the motors sung with a sureness of timing that delighted our ears. If Curtiss has done nothing else he has built two fine motors. I depressed her and we came down as easily as a leaf. In this flight I had taken her but little out of a straight coarse We tried no banking but we used our wing flaps or ailerons at sufficient angles to show us what she could do when it becomes necessary. It is a rule of Mr Curtiss and other good builders not to try sharp turns during the early flight The boat has to first find herself before the more difficult manuevers are gone through with.

Runs Easy As Liner.

We about faced nicely, the rudder working like a liner's and then started home. This time I put her through some of her paces. We flew through about 40 degrees of a cycle steering from side to side and climbing and descending with a precision that was good to realize.

On our back trip I saw over to one side of the lake a motor boat holding the Tribune correspondent and I laid my course toward him, passing about 40 feet over him and about 20 feet to one side. Flying around pylons takes less accuracy than that. I mention this to show the finesse with which her course can be laid. On the way out I made the jumps; in going back I made one sustained flight. She seemed to rejoice and was allowed to keep the air.

She acted quite as if that were her native element. Every foot of her wing surfaces was doing its duty splendidly and carrying the weight as if it were nothing. Certainly her lifting power left little to be asked for I shut off the motor and volplaned down to the water a quarter of a mile from the landing stage and she shot ahead under her own momentum for a considerable distance, showing how lightly she sits on the water. I opened the throttle again and she speeded on the surface behaving just as well as she had in the air. When we pulled her out again she was found to be quite shipshape. Not one thing was wrong, in fact her various parts were in better shaps after the tuning up than they had been before she was broken in.

Mr. Curtiss and I have agreed upon one change—one that we believe will aid her greatly in leaving the water when she carries her full load. That is to attach two water planes to either side of her hull about amidships. This will give her greater and smoother planing surface to make her rise to the water's top and skim along before she mounts. Her hull is built to carry a heavy load and offers great resistance to the water as she is driven through it.

The hydroplanes will reduce this resistance, thus easing the strain when she starts up. The machine weighed yesterday about 3,500 pounds. When she is fully equipped and has her tanks full of petrol she will go about 5,000 pounds. That increased weight holds no fear for us for we did not use all our power yesterday.

Today I shall make further flights. In fact I shall continue them clear through the week, at the end of which I hope to be able to leave for New Foundland, although it is quite sure that I shall not be able to get away for another seven days.

We plan to have the boat follow on July 4, reaching St. Johns on July 9. Then she will be reassembled and tried out under actual flying conditions. I do not look for this to take more than a week. I sincerely believe that we shall be off on our trans-Atlantic voyage by July 15 or 16. The outcome is in the lap of God. But if the ingenuity of Mr. Curtiss and the confidence of my assistant and myself play a part in shaping the result we shall go along way toward reaching England.

Devil Spots.

By Julius Muller in the Century.

The most important advice that I can give the northern stranger who visits the Carribean tropics is this: If you are walking along a West Indian road at night and step suddenly on a warm spot, leap away from it at once. A devil has been lying there asleep.

The devil spots are so warm that they can be felt by the bare feet of the natives, and a West Indian's soles are a bit tougher than ordinary boot soles. Even West Indian surgeons have a mild scare sometimes when they find how deep they have to cut into a bushman's foot to reach flesh.

Last year we lived near a road that was a regular dormitory of devils. When we sat on the veranda at night we could always tell where they were lying whenever a file of natives came paddling along with their swift glide. The leader suddenly would check himself, sidestep swiftly, and glide on. Without a word the rest would follow suit. There always is a file of natives at night in the West Indian islands. It is ever so much safer, if you are a bush dweller.

Frohman's Advice to a Playwright.

In the American Magazine, Marjorie Benton Cooke, writing a story entitled "Bamby," describes an interview between one of the characters in her story and Charles Frohman, the famous theatrical manager. Following is an extract from the interview:

"'How long have you been at this playwriting?'

"'Three years.'

"'How long do you suppose it took me to learn to be a manager?'

"'I don't know.'

"'Well, nearer three times 10 than three years, and I am still learning. You writing fellows never want to learn your trade, like other people. You talk about inspiration and uplifting the public, and all that, and you want to do it in six months. You go to work on this new idea, and come back here when you've finished it. Then it will be time enough to talk about my end of it.'"

The headmaster of Eton, at a meeting of the "duty and discipline movement," said that golf did a grave social harm, because the players insisted on having caddies at all hours and thus created a "blind alley occupation." He thought bridge a national danger, too, because it was using up too much of the time of the young people—particularly students! These warnings, it should be noted, do not come from a man identified with puritanism, but from the head of the richest and most aristocratic of England's schools.

A Romance of Extraordinary Distinction

CHAPTER XI.—(Continued).

Big little Pietro had to be told what had happened and how the general was now to be a brother to him as best he might, and Alixe and Francois would be his sister and brother. He took the blow dumbly and went about his work the next morning, but for many days he could not play and only Francois could make him speak. He clung to the other boy, and seemed to find his best comfort in the friendship which it had been his father's parting inspiration to assure for him. He was handsome, strikingly handsome—and a lovable good lad, but slow in initiative. Where Francois was ready, shy Alixe was friends with all the world, going where the peasant children played. Between the two of such contrasting types, was at first spoken hard from the first, and at this age it seemed to be the little peasant who had everything to give. Smaller physically, weaker in muscle than the big boned son of north Italy, he yet took quite naturally an attitude of protection and guidance, and Pietro accepted it without hesitation. There was no jealousy between them. Francois taught the other who had grown up petted but untrained in the lonely castle of his ancestors, all that he knew of boyish skill and strength, and was enchanted when his pupil went beyond him as happened where brute force counted. Yet Francois was the acknowledged leader.

"Father," Alixe complained, 'Pietro will not try to knock Francois down. Pietro is big, yet it is always Francois who comes up behind him and throws him on the grass, and Pietro only smiles and gets up. Make Pietro be brave and quick as Francois is, father."

'Either of my boys is brave enough for you, who are only a girl,' the general growled and put an arm around her and kissed her brown head.

And Alixe pushed away haughtily. "That is not a way to talk before boys. They might not understand how a girl is worth six boys, and it is you who said it. Besides I can ride, can I not, father? Nobody has jumped Coq over the hedge by the far field but just me—Alixe. And the boys nodded their dark heads and agreed, and Pietro added:

'She can run faster than I, though my legs are so long.' And he smiled at her in his sleepy fashion, honest, admiring, shy.

Things went on in this way for two years or more, and the three studied together under the tutor, and rode Coq in the park, and sometimes went together of a Friday afternoon to the Valley farm and spent a two days there never to be forgotten. They were royal guests to Le Francois and La Claire, and the wholesome simple things done to amuse them were endless. The farm was theirs to play with for that week-end. First on coming there was a fine lunch gigot—a leg of lamb—which one gate to grapes, with salad and bread and wine and much besides. The grandmother told them stories, the father took them driving on hay wagons, the notary showed them how to milk the sheep, peas and other occult accomplishments. The children were ready to drop everything and do anything with a moment's notice. It was like a glorious doll's house built for the little sisters. And according to the season they gathered fruits—raspberries, figs, wheat or grapes. The Fermé du Val was a fairy land of pleasure.

Also the chateau at Vicques with three children was no convent. The tutor's hours was forever in arrears. For instance there was the winter's day when he got the general into difficulty with the church by brutally snowballing the bishop.

I thought it was Marcelle,' Francois explained penitently. 'He pranced just as Marcelle prances. And I was hiding behind the door with my ammunition—15 snowballs my seigneur—big hard ones. It was twilight, so I could not see plainly. I fired straight, my seigneur. I gave him one in the neck. And I one on the head, and two in the back and one or two in the stomach when he turned. I only missed once. And also when he turned howling, with his hand out, I sent one into his mouth before I saw. It is too bad it was the bishop, my seigneur, but why didn't he fight back?"

And the seigneur, scolding ferociously, had a gleam in his eye which lessened Francois' sense of wrong-doing. There was also an occasion when hearing the general give a long order to Marcelle for the stable, Francois went out hurriedly with a stout cord and fastened it where Marcelle must go. And Marcelle, the prancer, caught his foot and entered the stable door like a comet and fell on Jules the groom in his orbit—on Jules carrying a bucket of water, and Jules and the water and Marcelle ricochetted in a thousand-legged tangle into Coq's stall, where Coq, being angry, let forth a neigh and a kick together, one of which broke the innocent Jules' arm. So that Francois, stating the case to the general was condemned to do the groom's work till the arm was cured. The days were not monotonous at the chateau of Vicques. They were not all work and no play to the three very human children living there.

So with work and play life rolled rapidly, and suddenly life was all changed. A governess was coming for Alixe, and Francois and Pietro were going away to the great military school of Saint-Cyr, near Paris.

CHAPTER XII.

THE STRANGE BOY.

Two years slid past noiselessly, unnoticed, and it was vacation time, it was August of the year 1824. The Valley of the Jura was all afloat on a sea of scarlet poppies. They grew higher than the corn, and the wind tossed the waves of them against the sunlight, and the sea of them glittered silver, pricked with a million gold-red points, then the wind tossed the thousand, thousand waves back toward the sun, and the land-sea was shadowy, streaked with flame unendingly. The little river—the Cheulte—rushed down between the fields of gold and scarlet in its immortal hurry, murmuring over the stones. The old chateau of Vicques—the ruin—lay back behind the corn fields and smiled in hot sunlight at the two thousandth ocean of color which had washed the land up to its crumbling walls, since the Roman governor piled the old gray stones.

A tall lad of 14, another boy, slighter, quicker, darker, and a little girl of 11 in a short white dress, wandered through the ruins, talking earnestly now, silent now, filling the grim place with easy laughter again. Alixe and Francois and Pietro were growing up, the general already grumbled words about kittens turning into cats, as he looked at them. Yet the general was satisfied in his soul with each one, at whatever age, and glad of each day more of this long unconscious childhood in which they held to one another as closely and frankly as if they were real sister and brothers.

Today was the first complete day of the vacation, for till now Francois had been at the farm, working hard with his father at the harvesting. This morning he had come over to spend a week at the chateau. And without arrangement, only because it was their oldest and most fascinating play ground, they had strolled along the steep hillside, into the road that led to the pasture at the foot of the mountain and then to the gate, barring out wagons and cattle, the gate of the fence which enclosed the old chateau.

The grass was green on the high mound under which lay heaped the stones of the Roman tower, it was long, and waved in the breeze, the ugliness of the barbarism and cruelty of those days lay so buried; on the right were the granaries where the wicked governor had stored the grain wrung from the country people; over the steep wall to the left was the opening to the corridor which led, as all the world of Vicques had known for centuries, to the treasure house; it was there that the phantom, the great dog, appeared. The children told the old story to one another; they rebuilt as they talked, in the peace of the summer afternoon, the old war castle; they raised its long walls and placed its narrow windows and machicolated its roofs—in the young minds a dream of the old place rose complete under the new chestnut trees of only two or three hundred years' standing.

"Just behind the great stone there," Alixe formulated, "was the dog's bedroom. Of course, a great monsieur like the dog had his own bedroom—yes, and office, too—and maybe his dining room."

And the joke was enough on that lazy day of vacation to set peals of light laughter ringing through the ruins. Alixe stopped laughing suddenly.

Who is that?" she demanded. Her eyes were lifted to the hill rising behind the green mound, and the glance of the others followed hers. A young man, a boy, was coming lightly down the slope, and something in his figure and movement made it impossible even at a distance that it should be any one of the village. Strangers were not common in quiet Vicques, and why should a stranger be coming over the mountain? The children were silent as they watched the figure drawing closer. It seemed as if an event of importance was about to happen. Rapidly the boy sprang down the mountainside, they could see him plainly now, he was two or three years older than the boys of the chateau; he was short, slender, compact, with a thin aquiline face, with something about him which the country bred children did not understand to be that subtle quality, presence. He saw them, and came forward, and his cap was off quickly as he glanced at Alixe. But with a keen look at the three, it was Francois to whom he spoke.

"Is this France?" he asked.

"But yes, Monsieur," Francois answered wondering—and in a moment he wondered more. The strange boy, his cap flung from him, dropped on his knees and kissed the grass that grew over the Roman governor's foundations. With that he was standing again, looking at them unashamed from his quiet gray eyes.

"It is the first time I have touched the soil of France since I was 7 years old," he stated, not as if to excuse his act, but as if explaining something historical. And was silent.

The children, going over this day's event many times after, could never remember how it happened that they had talked so much. The strange boy talked very little; they could not recollect that he asked questions after his startling question; yet here was Alixe, the very spirited and proud little Alixe, anxious to make him understand everything of their own affairs.

"I am Alixe," she began—and stopped short, seized with shyness. Was it courtesy to explain to the young monsieur about her distinguished father? Or was it bragging? She found herself suddenly in an agony of confusion, for all of them were laughing their quick young laughter at her brief statement. Then the stranger made a low bow and spoke in the gentlest friendly tones.

"It is enough. It is a charming name, Mademoiselle Alixe. I belive I shall now think it the most charming name in France."

And Alixe, blushing furiously, yet felt a satisfactory conviction that she had not been at all stupid.

"She has more of a name than that, however, Monsieur," and Francois stepped across the grass and stood by the little girl, her knight, unconscious of the part he played. "It is a very grand name the other one. For our seigneur, the father of Alixe, is Monsieur the Baron Gaspard Gourgaud, a general of Napoleon himself, he was indeed with the Emperor at St. Helena."

Francois had no false modesty, no self consciousness; he felt that he had placed Alixe's standing now in the best light possible. The strange boy felt it, too, it seemed, for he started as Francois spoke of Napoleon; his reserved face brightened and his cap was off and sweeping low as he bowed again to Alixe more deeply. Francois was delighted. It was in him to enjoy dramatic effect, as if is in most Frenchmen. He faced about to Pietro.

"This one, Monsieur," he went on, much taken with himself as master of ceremonies, "is Monsieur the Marquis Zappi of Italy. His father also fought for the great captain."

The quiet strange boy interrupted swiftly. "I know," he said. "Of the Italian corps under Prince Eugene, also on the staff of Lannes. I know the name well," and he had Pietro's hand in a firm grasp and was looking into the lad's embarrassed face with his dreamy keen eyes.

The children, surprised, were yet too young to wonder much that a boy scarcely older than themselves should have the army of Napoleon at his fingers' ends, he gave them no time to think about it.

"One sees, without the names, that you are of the noblesse," he said simply, embracing the three in his sleepy glance. He turned to Francois. "And you, Monsieur the spokesman? You are also of a great Bonapartist house?"

Francois stood straight and slim, his well knit young body in his military dress was carried with all the assurance of an aristocrat. He smiled his brilliant exquisit smile into the older boy's face.

"Me—I am a peasant," he said cheerfully. "I have no house." Then into the silence that fell he spoke simply. "There are no officers of my family, no battles where my name was known." The controlled glance of the stranger rested on him attentively. With that the look of Francois changed in a flash, his eyes blazed as he threw out both hands in a strong gesture. "It makes no difference," he cried. "My life was consecrated from its start to the service of the house of Bonaparte. It will count I live because I believe that I know surely that I shall yet do a thing worth while for a Bonaparte."

A curious vivid glance shot at the excited boy from under the drooping lids of the newcomer. "Monsieur," he said quietly. "I" But no one had time to hear the rest, Because Alixe had suddenly thrown her arm about Francois' neck, and was crying out impetuous words.

"He is a peasant—yes. But he is also our brother, Pietro's and mine, and no prince is better than Francois—not one."

"Or half so good," Pietro put in with his slow tones.

And then without questions asked, in rapid eager sentences, the three had told him how it was, how Francois, refusing to leave the cottage, was yet the son of the castle; how Pietro had come and had stayed, how the boys were at school together; how in the vacations they were still sister and brothers, whether at the castle or the farm, all this and much more the three poured out to the silent lad who listened, who seemed to say almost nothing, yet managed to make them feel at every moment that he cared to hear what they said. With that they were talking about the village of Vicques, and its antiquity, and then of the old chateau; and one told the legend of the treasure and of the guardian dog.

"Just over the wall there is the opening where he appeared to old Pierre Tremblay," Francois pointed out. "And Pierre was half witted ever after. I know, for I have seen him myself. He mumbled."

"That is interesting." The stranger spoke with more animation than he had shown before—he was, after all, for all of his reserve, a boy. "I should like an interview with that dog. I must at least see his kennel. Over that wall? I will climb the wall."

"But no," Francois put in quickly. "It is unsafe these last five years. I have climbed it, but not in these last years. You can go around and get in by another way and see the hole of the dog."

The older boy's eyes narrowed. "I think I should prefer to climb the wall," he said.

Alixe spoke. 'If Francois can not go it is impossible. He is the best climber of all the country, are you not then, Francois?"

"Yes," said Francois.

And Pietro echoed. "But yes. All the world knows it."

"I think I should like to climb the wall," the stranger repeated gently.

And he did. The others watching anxiously, he crawled out on the uncertain pile 10 feet in air. A big stone crashed behind him; he crawled on. Then, "I see it," he cried, and waved a triumphant hand, and with that there was a hoarse rumble of lossened masonry, and doyn came the great blocks close to his hands—he was slipping—he had jumped. And as he jumped a heavy square of stone tumbled with him and caught him, felled him pinned into the tumbling wall by his coat. And, above, the wall swayed. Then, in the instant of time before the catastrophe, Francois had sprung like a cat into the center of danger and lossened the coat and pushed the other boy, violently reeling, across the grass out of harm's way.

Alixe screamed once sharply. Francois lay motionless on his face and the great stones rained around him. It was all over in a moment; in a moment more a shout of joy rose from Pietro, for Francois lifted his head and began crawling difficulty, with Pietro's help, out of the debris. There was a cut on his cheek, a deep one, bleeding badly, on the back of his hand, and bruises were distributed over him, but by a maricale he had come off with his life and only so much the worse. No sooner was Francois on his feet than Alixe startled them by turning on the innocent and surprised Pietro in a perfect fury of scorn.

"He is not dead—but that is not your fault," she threw at him. You who love him so much! You let him go into that danger."

"But—but I didn't know he was going, Alixe," stammered Pietro. "It was—so quick."

"Quick? Yes, Francois was quick. Why weren't you quick, too? It is always Francois. Why don't you do something brave once in a while? Why don't you make people admire you, not always Francois?"

Pigs Driving Out Moslems.

The Moslem population of Macedonia is leaving the country in thousands, not because they are ill-treated by their conquerors, but because their religious susceptibilities are offended by the sight of pigs in the open places. These animals hitherto have been kept in seclusion by their Christian owners, as any straying porkers met with short shrift from sons of the prophet. But, with the entrance of the allied troops into the province, the native pigs gained their freedom, and now they may be seen running about the streets in great numbers. Hence life has become impossible in Macedonia for the followers of Mahomet.

Even some lazy men may get busy, but the trouble is that they don't keep busy.

Lose Two Games

Owing to limited space we will not dwell much on the two ball games of the past week. Klemme lost to Forest City the 4th by the score of 5 to 1. It was Klemme's game up to the 7th inning 1 to 0, when a little batting streak and some errors gave Forest City 3 scores and they secured 2 more in the 8th. In the game at Corwith, Wednesday, Klemme lost again 10 to 5. Corwith received 4 of their scores on a fluke home run, a little outfield hit became lost in the weeds when the bases were full and 4 scores came in. Previous to leaving here, Scherf, our star pitcher received a badly injured ankle when one of the Yahnke autos crowded him against the wall in the garage. Just how the accident happened cannot be explained. The car had just been cranked up and the driver had taken his position and before Eddie could get out of the way it lunged forward and caught him. He was lucky to escape as easily as he did but it will likely be some time before he will be able to take part in the game. The accident took the "pep" out of the boys but they went over to play anyway. Eddie's many friends wish him a speedy recovery.

THE KLEMME TIMES

KLEMME, IOWA

Colored beards (for men) are reported to be coming into fashion in Paris. The green wig was a means of feminine adornment. It is not supposed to have made a lasting impression, but it attracted attention. Now men are coming into their share of the color in hirsute decoration. A dark blue mustache on a young poet at a recent soiree was the sensation of the evening. One proprietor of a dressmaking establishment announces that he is going to dye his close-cropped beard bottle green, after the fashion of the Assyrian kings.

One of the latest substitutes for the ordinary life preserver is a curious device which, when extended for use, has a shape resembling that of a bowling pin. It is intended to be entered by a single person, and in that case keeps the user entirely dry, but it is said that its buoyancy is so great that, in case of a catastrophe, as many as 20 persons can be supported for an indefinite period by hanging to the loops around the lower part of the hood.

An egg, which cannot be said to be fresh, is one which dates from 1,800 years back. It was found during recent excavations made at Nikopolis, in the tomb of an 11-months-old child, Sextius Rufus. Already more than 80 tombs have been explored by the archaeological service, in this ancient city, which was built to commemorate the battle of Actium.

A statement just issued by the bureau of labor statistics at Washington reports that the average wage a week in 40 of the leading cities of the United States for more than 60 of the principal industries was higher on May 15, 1913, than on May 15, 1914, with the single exception of the mill work carpenters, which showed no change.

When the hod carriers went on strike at a new house in South Norwalk, Conn., leaving the chimney unfinished, the owner of the house, General Russell Frost, a dignified millionaire, shouldered a hod with the contractor and kept the masons supplied with brick and the chimney was finished.

There are no native industries in the Belgian Congo. In every community there is the village blacksmith, who can fashion knives and spears of a certain quality and there are also village experts (always women) in weaving, pottery and kindred occupations.

Although unable to leave her bed, Mrs. W. J. Packer, at her home in Meriden, Conn., heard every word of the ceremony of her son's marriage in New London. A telephone wire with a megaphone attachment was arranged between the two houses.

For the fifth time since its erection the Eiffel tower is receiving a new dress of orange yellow. Sixty thousand pounds of paint is needed to adorn the great tower and 50 painters will be employed daily for three months. The new robe costs $20,000.

At the age of 94 William Zingsheim ran away from his home in the suburbs to Milwaukee Wis., to see the sights of the city. He complained that had always wished to see the city and never had had a chance until he took it.

Philadelphia employs one school nurse to about 5,000 children. Boston makes the number of pupils under each nurse about 2,500. Some express the idea that the best number of pupils for one nurse is 1,000.

Investigation by the geological survey of the erosion of numerous drainage basins of the United States show that the surface of the country is being worn away at a rate of about an inch in 760 years.

Geologists are trying to estimate the ages of the oceans by comparing the amount of sodium they contain with the amount they receive annually by washings from its continents.

BUMPER IOWA CROPS MAKE SERIOUS DRAW ON SOIL FERTILITY

Measures Must Be Taken to Put Back Nitrogen, Phosphorus and Potassium.

Ames, Ia., July 6.—Iowa's bumper crops take enormous amounts of fertility out of the soil every year. Consequently, Iowa lands are losing their riches more rapidly than is generally understood and how to put back the fertility taken out is an important problem that demands the best thought and effort of the farmer.

Those facts are emphasized in an important farmers' bulletin on "The Fertility in Iowa Soils," just issued by the agricultural experiment station at Iowa State college. It was written by P. E. Brown of the soil's section and is based on a preliminary survey of the state in which hundreds of soil samples were taken from the different soil areas. It deals with the whole problem of fertility and discusses various farming systems that will help solve the problem.

"It must not be understood," says the author, "that Iowa soils are infertile, but they are losing fertility much more rapidly than is generally understood." Tables that are presented show that in such a year as 1912 the 10 leading crops of the state take out fertility worth $143,000,000, considering only the three most important plant foods, phosphorous, nitrogen and potassium. The total fertility taken out exceeds $150,000,000. A hundred-bushel crop of corn takes fertility out of the soil that is worth $30.70 an acre; a bumper 50-bushel crop of wheat will take out plant food worth $20.76 per acre.

The nitrogen taken out of the soil annually is the most important item, because its value is about $113,000,000. That is why the growing of legumes like clover and alfalfa are so important to agriculture. They take nitrogen from the air and put it into the soil through the small nodules that grow on their roots. When legumes are turned under for green manures, the supply of nitrogen in Iowa soil may be maintained indefinitely.

The other two important elements, phosphorous and potassium, are taken out in amounts of about $14,000,000 each annually. Much of this is returned every year through manures when they are properly taken care of and through corn stalks and stubble that are plowed under, but even then there is a large net loss. Mr. Brown says that generally the phosphorous content is low in Iowa soils and sooner or later will have to be supplied; as for potassium, the supply seems to be larger.

LAST MAN TO SUE UNITED STATES EXPRESS

Iowa City, Ia., July 6.—Probably the last man in the United States to bring suit against the United States Express company is J. J. Lorack, of this city. A few hours before midnight of June 30, when the company went out of business, papers were served upon them, suing for the loss of goods in transit. Thus, although the company will not be in business when the court convenes in September, yet they must answer the suit here.

IOWA INCOME TAX SET NEW RECORD FOR RECEIPTS

Dubuque, Ia., July 6.—The close of the fiscal year set a record day for receipts in the office of Internal Revenue Collector Murphy. The amount of business done the last few days shall not be made public save as it is given out at Washington, but it is known no other period in the history of the Iowa office compares with the showing of the closing days.

The collections for the month of June looked approximately $66,000 of equaling the collection for the entire fiscal year of 1912. This it is explained is not due to the increase in taxes and the institution of the income tax only, but to the fact that the two Iowa districts were consolidated on August 1 last.

Corporations and individuals who did not pay their taxes on June 30 have ten days' grace, dating from July 1. If the taxes are not then paid, penalty attaches. Special taxpayers—liquor and oleo dealers—and others have until July 31 in which to pay their licenses.

NEWLYWED GETS RIDE IN RICKETY OLD CART

Shenandoah, Ia., July 6.—A rickety cart profusely tabled with sentimental signs was the vehicle in which three newly married Shenandoah couples were induced to ride through the business streets.

All three young men are well known in Shenandoah business and professional circles, and a charivari party here never before included so many of the elite of the town. Young business and professional men, clerks, and college students pulled the cart and its grinning occupants up and down the business streets, while a large crowd of spectators followed behind with an orchestra of discordant horns.

The young couples who took the ride were Dr. and Mrs. M. O'Brush, Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Goff and Mr. and Mrs. Lee Roscoe. All had been married within a few days.

CONTRACTS AWARDED FOR TWO NEW STATE BUILDINGS

Des Moines, Ia., July 6.—Contracts were let this week for two more state buildings for Iowa, the home for nurses at the state university and the greenhouse and plant demonstration building at Ames.

The contract for the former, which is to be a fine two-story brick fireproof structure, was let by the building committee of the state board of education, to W. F. Kucharo & Co., Des Moines, for $39,380.

The contract for the building at Ames went to the Foley Manufacturing company, Chicago, for $12,395. This is for the glass part of the structure, also with privilege of making additions at a fixed price according to bid.

M'KINLEY SYNDICATE INVADES IOWA TOWNS FOR POWER SYSTEMS

Extensive Purchase in Southern Iowa Seems to Indicate an Interurban Deal.

Council Bluffs, Ia., July 4.—Purchase of eight electric light and power plants and systems in Mills, Pottawattamie and other nearby Iowa counties by the Omaha and Lincoln Light and Power company, the McKinley syndicate is now being completed in Omaha. The systems being taken over have been owned by local Iowa companies and are valued at a total of over $125,000.

This is only the beginning of a consolidation of Iowa and Nebraska electric light and power systems under the McKinley corporation control, representatives of the buying company assert. Extensive improvements and additions will be made, which will bring the total outlay on the project up into hundreds of thousands of dollars.

There is also a strong probability that these purchases involve an interurban project in southwestern Iowa.

Plants included in the present purchase are those at Glenwood, Macedonia, Henderson, Hastings, Carson, Emerson, Silver City and probably one other Iowa town. The deals take in everything in electric light and power systems between the eight towns, with 48 miles of high tension electric transmission lines and all plants, power stations and equipment.

COLLEGES GO TO COURT ON QUESTION OF NAME

Dubuque, Ia., July 4.—Original notice in a novel suit, involving the right of St. Joseph's college to use the name of "Dubuque college," has been served upon the officers of the institution by the officers of the Dubuque German college. It is claimed by the officers of the latter institution that St. Joseph's college will receive the benefit of nation-wide advertising that has been acquired at large expense by the Dubuque German college and that injury will accrue to the German institution.

St. Joseph's college, one of the oldest institutions in the state, recently reincorporated and changed the name to Dubuque college. Both institutions represent hundreds of thousands of dollars' investment and improvements now going forward by each will approximate more than $100,000.

An injunction is sought by the German college of which Dr. C. M. Steffens is president, and it is expected the case will be tried at the October term of the district court.

"PRINCE" NATHOO AGAIN FACING SERIOUS CHARGE

Muscatine, Ia., July 4.—"Prince" Nathoo, a Hindoo clairvoyant and medicine man, has been arrested here, charged with the seduction of Alice K. Cornish, a 20-year-old French girl, who arrived in Iowa City six months ago from France.

Nathoo pleaded not guilty and his hearing was set for July 10. Sensational revelations are promised at the trial.

Nathoo, on coming to Muscatine from Des Moines was granted a license without charge by the local municipal authorities on the pretext that he was a manufacturer of medical preparations.

Iowa City, Ia., July 3.—Twice before Nathoo has been tried in Des Moines on a seduction charge, once acquitted, once found guilty. While police were scouring this city for him Nathoo and the girl were locked in a room on Washington street from Saturday noon until Monday morning.

TRIED TO SCARE HUSBAND: MADE POISON TOO STRONG

Iowa City, Ia., July 4.—Mrs. Byrl Smith, formerly Miss Byrl Kelly of Blaine county, Nebraska, drank poison and is dead in her new home in Davenport, Ia. She told her mother before she took the poison that she intended to frighten her husband, with whom she had quarreled mildly over a trip to the circus by drinking poison. The young woman, who was but 20, declared, after taking the fatal draught, however, that she had not diluted the stuff sufficiently with water, and that she did not intend to commit suicide. Surgeons could not save her, and she died in an hour. The young woman had brooded during the past month over the accidental death of her 2-year-old daughter, who fell from a window and was killed on Memorial day.

RAILROAD SETTLES SUIT FOR DEATHS OF THE ZWILLINGS

Nevada, Ia., July 4.—Attorneys representing the estate of the late Mr. and Mrs. Zwilling and the Northwestern Railway company have made an adjustment of the claims of the estate against the company for damages resulting from the accident in which both Mr. and Mrs. Zwilling met their deaths while crossing the company's lines in an automobile at the Vine street crossing in this city on the evening of August 27 of last year.

By the terms of the settlement the company pays $4,000 to the estate of Mr. Zwilling and $3,500 to the estate of Mrs. Zwilling. Mr. and Mrs. Zwilling left no children and the estate has been divided among their relatives.

GLIDDEN FARMER'S AUTO DOES ACROBATIC STUNT

Glidden, Ia., July 4.—Charles Garner, a prominent farmer living near here, was driving home from town yesterday with several people in his car and in ing down a long hill the car swerved and then described a complete somersault, and when it stopped was headed uphill. Mr. Garner was the only one injured. He was brought to the home of friends in Glidden and will recover. The car was not damaged greatly.

Ottumwa, Ia., July 3.—Charles Springer, of near Russell, was killed when the automobile he had purchased a few days ago turned turtle and pinned him beneath the car. Mrs. Springer, who was with her husband, escaped unhurt.

Muscatine, Ia., July 3.—Mrs. George Rand, of this city, was seriously injured when she was struck by an automobile just after alighting from a street car.

ROCKWELL CITY PAYS $5,800 ON CONTRACT AND MAN IS MISSING

Company Says Man Who Got Cash Was Not Duly Authorized As Collector.

Rockwell City, Ia., July 4.—Unless the man who made a collection of $5,800 from the school district here is caught and made to disgorge, either the district or a Chicago contracting firm will be loser in this amount. It is probable that a court issue will result to fix the responsibility.

The firm of Newton & Holt company of Chicago, had the contract for furnishing the new court house, and according to the terms of the agreement 80 per cent of the price was to be paid upon delivery of the furniture. About a week ago the furniture arrived and H. W. Sherman, representing the company, began installing it. In the meantime the company filed a claim for $5,800, which the board of supervisors allowed. The warrant was issued in the company's name and delivered to Mr. Sherman. He presented it to the county treasurer, who issued checks payable to Sherman for the amount. Sherman immediately went to the bank and secured $5,800 in currency and a draft for $300. This was last Friday. That evening he left town, cashing the draft in Chicago the day following.

The county auditor received a telephone message from the Chicago firm making inquiry as to why the warrant or draft had not reached them. Upon being appraised of the conditions existing they notified the auditor they would look to Calhoun county for the full payment.

The Chicago officials were put upon Sherman's trail and found that he had stopped at the Clifton house Saturday and Sunday, had displayed large sums of money and announced his intention of going to Colorado.

IOWA CORN CONDITION BEST EVER RECORDED

Des Moines, Ia., July 4.—Following is the regular weekly bulletin of the Iowa weather and crop service:

"High temperature prevailed until Saturday, and over the northern two-thirds of the state showers were frequent, and in some localities heavy to excessive. The rainfall, however, was not well distributed. While there was little or no rain over the southern two tiers of counties, west of Monroe and Appanoose, the next two tiers of counties received heavy to excessive showers. Over the northern half of the state the rainfall was about normal, although heavy showers occurred in some localities. In many sections the showers were accompanied by high winds, and in a few instances by hail, which did considerable damage to small grain. Probably half of the corn has been laid by in southern districts, and in northern counties some of it is getting too large to cultivate. The crop probably was never in better condition or further advanced at the end of June than it is now. Much winter wheat, rye and some early oats are in shock in the southern part of the state. Most reports indicate that although the straw is short the yield will be good but not up to last year's crop. In northern sections all small grain is in head and filling well, but dry weather is needed to prevent further damage by lodging and the possibility of rust. Haying is well advanced in southern and will become general in central and northern districts during the coming week. Pastures, potatoes and garden truck are generally in excellent condition, except in southwestern counties where dry weather continues."

RECRUITING OFFICER HAS MYSTERIOUSLY DISAPPEARED

Des Moines, Ia., July 4.—Mystery surrounds the disappearance of Sergeant John Lijedal, 27 years old, who has been in charge of the local marine corps recruiting station on the second floor of the federal building. Lijedal was last seen two weeks ago.

The fact that Lijedal had disappeared became known yesterday when Sergeant A. M. Fell of St. Paul came to Des Moines in search of him. He is of the opinion that Lijedal may have deserted the marine corps knowing that the office was to be abolished today and that he would be stripped of his title as sergeant.

Upon his arrival here, Sergeant Fell made inquiry as to the whereabouts of Lijedal at his boarding house, 542 Third street. He was told there that Lijedal had left two weeks ago, stating that he intended to return to his home in Fargo where he has a wife and child.

ARM CAUGHT IN GIRDER AND WHISKED FROM AUTO

Burlington, Ia., July 4.—Clifford Johnson, aged 25, met death in an unusual automobile accident early today. He was riding with two girl companions, both of whom, it is said, were asleep. As the car passed over a bridge Johnson stood up, raised his arm in the air and it caught in the bridge girders, whisking him from the car. When his absence was discovered a few minutes later the car was backed up and Johnson was found dead. His arm had been pulled out at the socket and he had died to death.

LeMars, Ia., July 4.—Five persons had a miraculous escape from death Tuesday night, when a car, driven by Ronald Brodie went off a bridge about nine miles west of here. The breaking of the steering gear was responsible for the accident. The car was suspended from the bridge by the hind wheels. Brodie, his sister, Mrs. Mae Erickson, and her baby boy, and Miss Anna Ericksen were thrown clear of the car and were badly hurt. Miss Ericksen was unconscious for several hours. Miss Ruth Nicholson, who was riding in the front seat, was caught in the windshield of the car and her hand was badly cut and she suffered painful cuts on her body and legs, but will recover.

Pomeroy, Ia., July 4.—Fred Vanhoven, a farmer 30 years old and living a mile and a half east of Palmer, was instantly killed, when an auto, in which he was riding, turned a somersault and threw him out. He was riding with his brotherinlaw, G. Hobben, and Mr. Hobben's father. The latter escaped without serious injury. The accident occurred at the foot of a steep and winding hill, two miles out of Fort Dodge.

NO RESPONSIBILITY FOR MINISTER WILLIAMS

State Department Not Willing to Share Blame for His Statements.

Washington, July 6.—The action of the state department in disclaiming responsibility for published statements criticising conditions in Albania credited to George Fred Williams, American minister to Greece, attracted wide spread attention in official and diplomatic circles here today.

Secretary Bryan in a formal statement repudiated the alleged utterances of Mr. Williams, declaring that they were made solely on the minister's own authority. This step, which is said to have been suggested by President Wilson himself, was regarded as highly significant in official circles.

Coming at this time after officials of the government had heretofore declined to comment on press dispatches quoting Minister Williams as having attacked Prince of Wied and his government in Albania, the action occasioned considerable comment. Although press dispatches reported that the minister had tendered his resignation, it had not, so far as could be learned, reached the department early today.

Secretary Bryan announced that Mr. Williams was authorized by the department to visit Epirus and observe conditions and report. This report had not reached Washington when the department closed late yesterday. Whether it would arrive today could not be foretold.

PLANS TO EXPOSE HAND OF MYSTERY THAT SHOT WOMAN

Freeport, N. Y., July 6.—The name of Dr. Edwin Carman's wife did not appear on the list of witnesses summoned for the inquest, this afternoon, into the death of Mrs. Louise Bailey, who was murdered in Dr. Carman's office last Tuesday night.

Since almost every one else in and about the physician's house that night had been notified to appear at the inquest, the omission of Mrs. Carman's name caused much comment. The district attorney explained he had excellent reasons for not calling Mrs. Carman. It was understood he desired to reserve her testimony for the grand jury, unimpaired by any premature revelations at the inquest.

Among the witnesses called were Archie Post, Joseph Golder and Miss Hazel Combs, patients, who were waiting in Dr. Carman's outer office when Mrs. Bailey was murdered. A man, named Burke, resident of a neighboring village, had been summoned. It was said, to repeat a story he had told a detective about having seen a woman dressed in white running away from the window of the doctor's office immediately after the shot was fired.

Talking over the telephone today Mrs. Carman declared that she wanted to testify at the inquest and was ready to tell all she knew. "I realize fully that in a measure I am under suspicion," she said, "and that at the present moment I am restrained as to my movements."

Mrs. Carman denied a story that several weeks ago she had attended a woman patient in her husband's office. She repeated her declaration that she had never seen Mrs. Bailey until she looked on her dead body at the morgue yesterday.

"Were you jealous of Mrs. Bailey?" she was asked.

"No, indeed," she answered.

Mrs. Carman Views Body.

The body of the murdered woman was taken from her home in Hempstead to an undertaking morgue for an autopsy, which had been ordered by the district attorney. William D. Bailey at first refused to allow his wife's body to be moved from the house, but after the authorities had threatened to go to a supreme court justice and secure an order permitting the autopsy, he gave his consent.

Mrs. Carman, wife of the doctor in whose office the woman was shot, and her attorney were waiting at the morgue. Mrs. Carman was taken into a rear room and asked to look at the dead woman's features.

"Poor woman," exclaimed the physician's wife, "I am so sorry for her."

"Have you ever seen this woman before?" her attorney asked.

Mrs. Carman, perfectly calm, replied: "No, I have never seen that woman in my whole life."

The physicians who performed the autopsy traced the course of the bullet, but nothing else having a bearing on the tragedy was revealed.

Detectives late yesterday interviewed Miss Helen Combs, a lawyer's stenographer, who told them she was in the physician's house at the time of the shooting, having gone there for treatment. She said she was admitted to the house by Mrs. Carman. Dr. Carman was eating dinner and Miss Combs said she was told to wait.

Miss Combs' Story.

"While I was there," Miss Combs is said to have told the detectives, "a woman whom I now know was Mrs. Bailey, arrived. She did not knock or announce herself. She walked right in and a few moments later went into the doctor's office. While she was there Mrs. Carman passed through the room and went into the kitchen at the rear of the house. Later she went out on the porch and while she was there I heard her tell one of her children not to play the piano as the doctor had a patient in the office. That was about 10 minutes before I heard a shot."

In telling her story to the detectives and the district attorney yesterday, Mrs. Carman declared she returned from New York about 7 o'clock the night of the murder and went immediately to her room on the second floor of the house where she prepared to retire. She denied going to the ground floor even when the shot was fired.

Miss Combs, the detectives also say, told them it was a woman and not Dr. Carman who folded Mrs. Bailey's hands across her breast after the body had been raised from the floor and placed upon the office couch. Joseph Golder another patient who was waiting to consult Dr. Carman, also told the police it was a woman who did this and he added that it was a woman who admitted him to the physician's residence. Dr. Carman told the police it was he who folded Mrs. Bailey's hands.

HALLENGE CUP COMES TO AMERICANS

rvard and Union Boat Club Crews Win the Henley Heats.

Henley on Thames, July 6.—The ted grand challenge cup comes to erica.

Two American eight-oared crews—e Union Boat club of Boston, and e Harvard university second crew, re left to fight tomorrow for its pos-sion by victories today in the semi-al heats over Winnipeg and Mayence pectively. Both were most exciting ces rowed in almost record time and on only after a hard struggle near the ishing line in each instance.

Wet weather and a strong wind did t cause either of the American crews vary their almost perfect waterman-ip, which has called for the admira-n of English experts.

The race between Harvard and Win-peg which came first, was a hard one d resulted in the best time recorded this year's regatta, seven minutes t. This has been beaten only on three casions in the grand challenge cup ce official time records have been pt. In 1891 Leander rowed the final six minutes 51 seconds, and this was ualled by New college, Oxford, in the nal in 1897. Leander in 1905 did the urse in six minutes 58 seconds.

Winnipeg went away to 21 strokes to e first half minute and 42 to the first inute, while Harvard struck 20 to the lf minute and 38 to the minute. At e half mile the boats were even but fore the half way mark was reached arvard had pushed a little ahead The me was 3:24. The Canadians then urted and Harvard replied Harvard en went in front and at the mile ere leading by three quarters of a ngth. They were rowing 36 to the inute and retained their advantage to e end, although the Canadians made last great effort to overhaul them. On crossing the line, Harvard seemed rfectly fresh. Winnipeg showed signs faltering after passing the half mile st and was rowed out at the finish

The Union Boat club, of Boston, won e second semi-final in the Grand hallenge cup from the Mayence Row-g club of Germany, by a small mar-in in seven minutes flat.

When the second semi-final started xcitement was tense. The shells got ff to a good start. The Germans be-an with 41 strokes to the first minute ainst Boston's 40. Boston took the ad at once, and were leading by a ood quarter of a length at the quarter ile.

At the half mile Boston was leading y half a length, but lost a little of eir advantage before the half way ark was reached.

A significant effort by the Germans passing the grandstand brought em closer together, but the Boston-ns passed the line with only part of e oiled silk covering the nose of their oat in front. Their times was seven inutes flat, the same as made by their llow countrymen.

The grand challenge cup has left ngland only on four other occasions was captured by the Royal Nautical ub, of Ghent, Belgium, in 1906, 1907 nd 1909 and by the Sidney Rowing ub, New South Wales, in 1912.

Many other Americans and other for-gn crews have tried for it in previous ars. In 1895 Cornell was defeated in e fifth heat by Trinity. In 1896 Yale ll before Leander in the first heat. 1897 Utrecht university succumbed Leander in the third heat; in 1899 rgonaut Rowing club, of Toronto, anada, was beaten by London in the xth heat. In 1900 the Royal Nauti-l club of Ghent, Belgium, lost to Le-nder in the third heat, in 1901, the niversity of Pennsylvania went down fore Leander in the fifth heat and e Royal Nautical club of Ghent to e same club in the third heat in 02 the Argonaut Rowing club of To-onto was beaten by Third Trinity in e fifth heat; in 1905 the Royal Nau-cal club of Ghent lost to Leander in e final, after the Vesper Boat club Philadelphia had been defeated by e same club in the fourth heat and 1906, the Argonaut Rowing club of oronto was defeated by Trinity Hall the seventh heat.

The Italian won by five lengths in ight minutes, 33 seconds.

NIONS ARE GROWING STRONGER IN ENGLAND

London, July 6.—The amalgamation the trades unions goes steadily for-ard. Following closely upon the orking agreement between the miners, ransport workers and railway men, ith a total membership of 1,350,000, hich has now been finally settled, the eneral Laborers' union, which has an mmense organization spreading all ver the country, has been admitted to e amalgamation. Thus practically ll the unions, whose members mine oal or handle the freight of the coun-y, are in one organization.

This is the reply of the workers to e combination of the employers of e country, but it is only part of what e trades unionists aim at. They are orking for a general amalgamation of e lesser skilled or general labor. ASQUITH IS SETTING RECORD FOR SERVICE

Only Two Former Premiers Have Held Office for Longer Term.

London July 6. Premier Asquith has now held office for just six years, thus exceeding in length the administration of Disraeli who occupied the office from 1874 to 1880. Since the days of Lord Liverpool who was prime minister for 15 years there have been only three statesmen who have held the office for a longer period, without a break, than Mr Asquith Two of these, Lord Melbourne and Lord Palmerston, both were prime ministers for about two years longer than Mr Asquith has been. The third case is that of Lord Salisbury who was prime minister for exactly seven years, from 1895 to 1902. Lord Palmerston during his long term of power was like Mr. Asquith leader of the house of commons, as well as prime minister. CLABBY VICTOR OVER McGOORTY ON A FOUL

Sydney N S W July 6—Jimmy Clabby of Hammond Ind won tonight on a foul from Eddie McGoorty, of Oshkosh Wis the title of world's middleweight champion The foul occurred in the eighth round The battle was hard fought from the beginning

Clabby's work was regarded by the crowd as a remarkable exhibition Both men fought furiously and mixed it up continually McGoorty could accomplish little however against his adversary's cleverness He tried repeatedly to land left hooks but each time was blocked He was desperate when he committed the foul

Nothing of note was shown in the fight and a great crowd attended The contest was scheduled to go 20 rounds.

WE HAVEN'T VERY MUCH ON ANCIENT EGYPTIANS

London July 6.—While the ancient Egyptians possessed no newspapers, an interesting chronicle of the small happenings of their daily life is exposed in the papyrogram writings soon to be exhibited here by the London Society of Antiquaries

That human nature has not changed very much with passing ages is shown by an order for an inquest into the death of a slave killed by a fall from a roof on which he had crawled out to obtain a close view of some dancing girls. Announcements of horse racing and other athletic sports, and a complaint by a wife against a surly husband who refused to give her the house keys are other items in the papyri. One notice tells of a certain platonic philosopher who was privileged to receive meals free at the Alexandria library

The purpose of the exhibition is to raise funds for further explorations in the upper reaches of the Nile.

HANGING UP RECORD AT PEORIA BOAT RACE

Peoria, Ill., July 6—Interest in the last day's events of the seventh annual regatta of the Mississippi Valley Power Boat association centered today in the time trials and the Webb championship free for all events.

The sensational work of the Kitty Hawk VI, which yesterday smashed all records for motor-boat time in trial heats, by making a mile at the rate of 54 54 miles an hour, was expected to be eclipsed today. With the America of Chicago and the Baby Speed Demon of Algonac, Mich., in the same event with the Kitty Hawk VI, the most thrilling event of the week's program is predicted

Charles P Hanley, of Muscatine, Ia., was elected admiral of the Mississippi Valley Power Boat association at its annual meeting here today. Other officers elected were E. H. Van Patten, Davenport, Ia. vice admiral, Dr. F. C. Smith, Keokuk, Ia., rear admiral; W. V. Kidder, La Crosse, Wis., secretary, and R. A. Maples, Clinton, Ia., treasurer.

Philadelphia, July 6.—Newspaper reports that President Wilson and J. P. Morgan discussed Mexico and the payment of debts due American bankers out of customs receipts at Vera Cruz during their conference Thursday were denied emphatically today by members of the president's party.

GREAT FLYING BOAT CARRIES FULL LOAD

"America" Gets Away With Over 5,000 Pounds—About Ready for Flight.

(By Lieut. John Cyril Porte, R. N.)
(Copyright, by Press Publishing Co.)

New York, July 4.—My holiday in New York was cheered by excellent news telephoned last night by Mr. Curtiss at Hammondsport. The Rodman Wanamaker trans-Atlantic flying boat America again demonstrated her splendid qualities by getting off the surface of Lake Keuka, with a useful load computed by Mr. Curtiss at 2,107 pounds. This made her total weight in the air a little over 5,000 pounds.

Before leaving Hammondsport Mr. Curtiss and I had agreed to try another experiment to help determine the effect of increasing still further the America's hydroplaning surface. This was to attach under the wings the pair of pontoons made by Mr. Curtiss for launching the Langley aeroplane, for its recent experiments. I deferred announcing this plan because I did not wish to raise any unwarranted expectations. Needless to say I am pleased by the result as it demonstrates again what I have said before, that the America is a wonderful machine in the air and that getting her out of the water into the air with her full trans-Atlantic load is only the problem of a few more days of experimentation.

The speed at which the America flew yesterday under this heavy load is very gratifying especially in view of the fact that the propellers were making only 1,150 revolutions per minute. Mr. Curtiss tells me that "Doc" Wildman the flying professor, in the speedy Curtiss boat of the standard type, was unable to keep pace with the America.

The object of attaching the Langley machine pontoons under the America was to help determine the correct proportions of the permanent planes that are to be built to take the place of the experimental planing surfaces. Those who may be impatient of these delays, as I confess I am myself, should bear in mind that the construction of this large type of a boat is experimental. There has been no data worth speaking of from which to work. Although I am chafing to be off I realize that the period of experimentation allowed Mr. Curtiss for perfecting a new and extraordinary type of machine is indeed very limited. In fact, he has achieved a remarkable result in getting the America so nearly right in so short a time.

NOTED STATESMAN OF ENGLAND DIES

London, July 4—Joseph Chamberlain died here Tuesday night.

The death of Joseph Chamberlain, which removes one of the most striking figures of British politics in the past generation, came as a surprise, as the condition of his health was not publicly known to be any worse than at any time in the last two or three years. He was 78 years old.

Mrs. Chamberlain, who never left her husband's side since he was stricken with paralysis seven years ago, and his son, Austen Chamberlain, were with Mr Chamberlain when death occurred, at 10 30 o'clock last night, at his London residence. The event cast a gloom over the London season, which was at its height.

Mr Chamberlain's last public appearance was at a garden party on the grounds of his Birmingham home on May 6, last, when, with his wife and son, he received several hundred constituents. Mr. Chamberlain was wheeled out on the lawn in a chair and appeared very emaciated and feeble when he lifted his hat to friends and neighbors in acknowledgement of their salutes.

Tariff reforms which, with imperialism, were the chief policies for which Joseph Chamberlain was spokesman when his enforced retirement through paralysis occurred, have suffered an almost complete relapse, his son, Austen, being almost the only British statesman who advocates them on all occasions.

Foe of Gladstone.

While his greatest claim to fame was his determined and brilliant advocacy for years of a protective policy for Great Britain, the citadel of free trade, he will also be remembered as the bitterest and most forceful opponent of Gladstone in that statesman's efforts for home rule for Ireland; as one of the founders of the liberal-unionist party, and as the minister whose policy in South Africa involved his country in the greatest war it had experienced since the Crimean conflict, but blotted out the two Boer republics and made South Africa "all red."

From the day he left University college, London, to enter his father's screw factory at Birmingham, Joseph Chamberlain devoted his best energies to "the principle of constructive reform." It was in 1868, just 32 years after his birth in London, that he received his baptism of public life, as town councillor of Birmingham, later serving as mayor for successive terms. He gave his whole time to the cause of municipal reform, and what had been previously one of the worst governed cities in England, became a model for municipal reformers.

In 1876 he entered parliament, being elected without opposition as a liberal from Birmingham. In his early years in the commons he sat among the home rule liberals with whose aspirations he was supposed to sympathize, but a few years later he emphatically disabused his associates in the house of any notion they may have had of his belief in separate government for Ireland.

In less than four years he was a cabinet minister, entering Gladstone's government in 1880 as president of the board of trade, and in less than a decade his hold on popular opinion was almost as great as Gladstone's.

After the general election of 1885 he became president of the local government board, but by the spring of 1886 his and Gladstone's relations on the latter's Irish policy had become so strained that he broke with the great premier, resigned his place in the cabinet and left the liberal party never to return to it.

He, Lord Hartington (afterwards the Duke of Devonshire), G. J. Goschen and others high in the liberal party who saw in their former leader's home rule proposals and propaganda a menace to the integrity of the empire, formed a new party to resist them. They called themselves liberal unionists and anti-home rule was, in the beginning, their main tenet. Lord Hartington was the first leader but when he was elevated to the peerage through the death of his father, Mr. Chamberlain was chosen the party's chief.

Married American Girl.

Meanwhile Mr. Chamberlain had visited the United States, November 1887, to February, 1888, as the head of the British representatives upon the American-British joint high commission which was to negotiate a treaty for the settlement of the long standing fisheries dispute.

A treaty was signed by the United States Senate refused to ratify it.

Late in 1888 Mr. Chamberlain returned to the United States, this time to be married. Having been twice a widower he took as his third wife Miss Mary Endicott, daughter of William C. Endicott, President Cleveland's secretary of war.

During the campaign of 1892 Mr. Chamberlain worked with great effect, and subsequently in the commons he was to the forefront in all the assaults on the Irish government bill, and clashed frequently with Mr. Gladstone. The home rulers considered him a renegade and this rankling he aggravated by his rasping tactics. During debate on the bill, one night in July 1893, Mr. Gladstone tartly compared him with "the Devil's advocate." The next night, in debate Mr. Chamberlain retorted so caustically that T. P. O'Connor yelled at him "Judas! Judas!" followed presently by a free fight on the floor between several members—a rare outbreak in probably the most staid legislative body in the world—accompanied by vigorous hissing by the galleries.

The Birmingham man with the monocle and long acquiline nose (both the delight of the English caricaturists), the keen head and the forceful tongue, the faultlessly fashionable attire topped off invariably with a white orchid in the coat lapel was now a commanding figure at Westminster. On the formation of the coalition (Conservative and Unionist) ministry in 1895 he took office under Lord Salisbury as colonial secretary. In the position his remarkable powers were severely tested by South Africa—the chain of strenuous events beginning with Jameson's hare-brained raid, and ending, when Lord Kitchener had worn down the stubborn Boer resistence, with the treaty of Vereeniging—but he stood the test. His enemies, too, savagely assailed him as being the adroit tool of the Rand gold mine owners and his course toward the Afrikanders was a leading issue in the campaign of 1900 and during 1901. But he was the object of great popular demonstrations before his visit to South Africa late in 1902 on a mission of conciliation and observation and also on his return early in 1903.

The war and the elections over, he set himself the task of fostering the relations between the mother country and the colonies. The constitution for the Australian commonwealth was one of his productions

Just before his 67th birthday Chamberlain launched his scheme of fiscal reform, which partly succeeded in splitting the unionist party. It was in May and at Birmingham that he announced his new policy, and finding in September that his party was not ready for so radical a change, he resigned to devote himself to popularizing his doctrines. He fought the cause with a genius, eloquence, energy and organization, never equalled in any previous moment in his career, but his party wavered and went down to defeat in the election of 1906. The one bright spot for the unionist party during those dark days, was Birmingham and vicinity, where Chamberlain carried his candidates to victory.

IN TEARS, PROMOTER EXPLAINS MINE DEAL

Newman Denies Senators Knew of Use of Their Official Letter Paper.

Washington, July 4.—W E. Newman, promoter of a North Carolina gold mine, told a Senate investigating committee a tearful story today about the use of official letter paper of the census and rules committee for circulation of a letter from a mining engineer, praising the property. He testified he asked Senator Overman's stenographer to make copies of the letter and that a clerk in the census committee made others. Senators Overman and Chilton, chairman of those committees knew nothing of it, he said.

While Newman was telling the story of his struggles to promote the property he wept. He said about 35 or 40 copies of the letter on Senate paper were sent to his personal friends among the Gold Hill stockholders. None was used to "boost" the stock, he protested.

Director George E. Roberts, of the mint bureau, testified that he sent F. G. Dewey, a government assayer, to examine the property after talks with Newman and John Skelton Williams, then assistant secretary of the treasury, to determine if the production was sufficient to reopen the assay office at Charlotte, N. C.

Mr. Williams, now comptroller of the currency, gave the same explanation. He testified he had no stock in the mine, nor did any one in his family. He testified his brother, W. Berkley Williams, looked at the mine after Dewey reported. Newman, recalled, testified that John Skelton Williams had arranged a conference for him with Cleveland Perkins, who wanted to buy control of the property. He said he had some correspondence with Williams and his brother Berkley about the mine, but preferred that it be given out by the other parties.

nvestigator Does Not Say That Public Is Made to Pay Extortionate Prices, But Suggests Inquiry.

Chicago, July 4.—By means of interlocking directorates control of public utilities in Chicago and the surrounding states has become centralized in the hands of half a dozen men, according to a report made public today by Montague Ferry, Chicago, commissioner of public service.

In his report Mr. Ferry indicated the close relationship shown among public service corporations may constitute a grave menace to the public and urged further investigation of the public service to determine whether the city suffers by reason of the centralized control.

Named in particular in the report are Samuel Insull, John J. Mitchell, James A. Patten, Henry Blair and Ira M. Cobe, who, said Mr Ferry, exercise control over the Commonwealth Edison company, the People's Gas Light & Coke company, the Chicago Elevated railways, the Chicago surface lines and numerous utility companies in surrounding towns.

A chart which accompanied the report was said by Mr. Ferry to show the three men, Samuel Insull, John J. Mitchell and James A. Patten, constitute a majority of the executive committee of five which directs the business of the Commonwealth Edison company; that the same three constitute a majority of the board of directors of the gas company that Mr. Insull and Mr Blair, who is also a director in the Commonwealth, a majority of the executive committee of three which controls the elevated lines; that Mr. Blair as chairman of the board is the controlling factor in the Chicago Railways company, which operates most of the surface lines; that "Samuel Insull, with men holding salaried executive positions in the Commonwealth Edison company, controls the Public Service company, of northern Illinois, and the Middle West Utilities company."

By showing that B. E. Sunny, president of the Chicago Telephone company, is director in the surface line companies, Mr. Ferry indicated a relationship between the telephone corporation and these other utility companies, while other directors of the telephone company were shown to be directors of the Commonwealth and the gas company

Commenting on the facts shown, Mr. Ferry said:

"No facts are in the possession of the department of public service which would justify the statement that the price paid for current by the several transportation companies is excessive. But the circumstances under which these contracts were made, with substantially the same men as buyers and sellers suggest inquiry. * * * The New Haven Railroad company, H. B. Claflin & Company, the St. Louis & San Francisco and enterprises nearer home are fresh in the minds of the public."

The report was ordered by the city council and will be considered by the committee on gas, oil and electric light.

Silliman to Use Pressure on Carranza—Envoys Prepare for Wait.

Washington, July 4—The American delegates to the Niagara mediation conference—Justice Lamar and Frederick W. Lehmann—returned to the capital today and conferred with President Wilson and Secretary Bryan. While the Niagara conference is in recess awaiting Carranza's canvass of his generals under the plan of Guadalupe as to sending delegates to treat with Huerta's emissaries, the American delegates will remain in Washington and the three South American mediators will return here and keep in touch with the situation awaiting the next move. Iglesias Calderon, one of the constitutionalists expected to represent Carranza if he sends delegates, declared today he did not believe the canvass of the constitutionalists chiefs would authorize sending delegates to treat with Huerta unless they went to discuss terms of surrender.

SILLIMAN TAKES MESSAGE FROM WILSON TO CARRANZA

Washington, July 4.—A long period of waiting for the constitutionalists to say whether they would meet Huerta's delegates to discuss Mexico's internal disturbances confronted President Wilson and his advisers today. Some time would elapse, representatives of Carranza said, before the revolutionary leader would be able to obtain a vote of his military chiefs on the proposed conference.

With next moves in mediation depending on that decision administration officials continued exerting their influence to bring about a meeting between envoys of the fighting factions.

Primed with instructions on the American government's attitude toward all phases of the problem, John R. Silliman, planned to leave here today for Carranza's provisional capital. He was to help in settling the breach between Villa and Carranza and to impress on the revolutionary leaders the need for early restoration of peace through establishment of a provisional government such as has been suggested at the Niagara mediation proceedings.

Only a few weeks ago Silliman, as American vice counsul in Saltillo had been in custody of the federals, accused of having helped their enemies. It was understood that on his mission he was to go virtually as President Wilson's special agent.

Valentine Josten, Sr., Dies Sunday. Funeral Held Tuesday

Last Sunday night our citizens and surrounding neighbors were shocked by the sad news of the death of one of her oldest settlers, Valentine Josten, Sr.

Valentine Josten was born March 10, 1835 near Flensburg, Schleswig-Holstein, Germany. He was a son of religious parents, who had him educated in the parochial schools of the Evangelical Lutheran Church. June 1st, 1861, he entered into holy matrimony with Miss Anna Katharine nee Nissen. They were blessed with seven children, six sons and one daughter. Hans, the oldest of the family preceded his father in death, in 1904.

Mr Josten, though a German, had the distinction of having been a Danish soldier. His native province, Schleswig-Holstein, belonged at that time to Denmark, and when Prussia in 1863 decided to retake the province, Mr. Josten enlisted in the Danish army. And so he took part in the famous decisive battle, at Dueppel (Dueppeler-Schanzen). Having now become a German citizen he was again called upon and enlisted in the German-French War, 1870-71.

In the year 1875, he emigrated with his family to America and settled on a farm in Ell township, Hancock county, Iowa. He proved himself an industrious farmer, and soon found himself in good circumstances. In 1903 he and his wife, both well advanced in age, retired and made their home with their son, Valentine, Jr.

Mr. Josten was a man of noble character, respected and loved by everyone that knew him. Being one of the oldest settlers he was widely and well known. He was kind and entertaining and everyone considered him their friend.

Until last summer he enjoyed good health in body and spirit; but since August last was afflicted with heart disease and failing strength. Last Wednesday, he and his wife were taken to their daughter, Mrs. Havercamp in Germantown, for a few weeks visit, and while they were out driving in an automobile Sunday, he received a stroke of appoplexy to which he succumbed.

His death his deeply mourned by his surviving widow: by six children, five sons and one daughter and by sixteen grandchildren.

He reached an age of 79 years, 4 months and 2 days.

The funeral took place Tuesday, July 14th, conducted by Rev. Wm. P. Thiel of the Reformed Church of Klemme and interment was made in the Klemme cemetery. The funeral was largely attended, by friends and acquaintances, who thereby proved their sympathy to the bereaved,

He was one of the founders of the Ed Town church but at the time of his death was a member of the German Reformed church of Klemme and a man of strong Christian character who always believed in the direction of the Almighty and we firmly believe that this sincere man has gone to his heavenly home where there is no more death nor sorrow and where God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

May his memory be blessed.

The seal design for 1914 has been selected and orders for the printing of 100,000,000 seals have been placed. Plans for the organization of a larger sale this year than ever before have been perfected

New York led the country last year with a sale of over 10,500,000 seals, or one for each man, woman and child in the state Of this number more than 6,825,000 were sold outside of New York city. Pennsylvana came next with a sale of 3,125,000. Ohio was third with 2,800,000, Wisconsin fourth, 2,700,000, and Illinois fifth with 2,500,000. Hawaii sold the most seals per capita, the total sale being somewhat over two to each inhabitant. Rhode Island came second with a sale of two per person.

Beginning with a sale of 13,500 000 in 1908, in six seasons the revenue which these little holiday seals have brought to the anti-tuberculosis campaign has more than tripled, an aggregate for the period of over $1,800,000 or 180,000,000 seals

Art for Art's Sake.

Our friend Reginald was telling about an artist of his acquaintance. "Why," said he, "the fellow painted cobwebs in all the corners of his studio and made the things so natural that the servant girl worked for all of two hours trying to get rid of them."

"Ridiculous," said Ermyntrude. "perfectly ridiculous I'm quite willing to believe the artist is as clever as you say. But I know there was never a servant girl so industrious."

Mrs. Baker So Weak—Could Not Do Her Work—Found Relief In Novel Way.

Adrian, Mich.—"I suffered terribly with female weakness and backache and got so weak that I could hardly do my work. When I washed my dishes I had to sit down and when I would sweep the floor I would get so weak that I would have to get a drink every few minutes, and before I did my dusting I would have to lie down. I got so poorly that my folks thought I was going into consumption. One day I found a piece of paper blowing around the yard and I picked it up and read it. It said 'Saved from the Grave,' and told what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for women. I showed it to my husband and he said, 'Why don't you try it?' So I did, and after I had taken two bottles I felt better and I said to my husband, 'I don't need any more,' and he said 'You had better take it a little longer anyway.' So I took it for three months and got well and strong."—Mrs. ALONZO E. BAKER, 9 Tecumseh St., Adrian, Mich.

WRONG BREAKFAST.
Change Gave Rugged Health.

Many persons think that for strength, they must begin the day with a breakfast of meat and other heavy foods. This is a mistake as anyone can easily discover for himself.

A W. Va. carpenter's experience may benefit others. He writes:

"I used to be a very heavy breakfast eater but finally indigestion caused me such distress, I became afraid to eat anything.

"My wife suggested a trial of Grape-Nuts and as I had to eat something or starve, I concluded to take her advice. She fixed me up a dish and I remarked at the time that the quality was all right, but the quantity was too small—I wanted a saucerful.

"But she said a small amount of Grape-Nuts went a long way and that I must eat it according to directions. So I started in with Grape-Nuts and cream, two soft boiled eggs and some crisp toast for breakfast.

"I cut out meats and a lot of other stuff I had been used to eating all my life and was gratified to see that I was getting better right along. I concluded I had struck the right thing and stuck to it. I had not only been eating improper food, but too much.

"I was working at the carpenter's trade at that time and thought that unless I had a hearty breakfast with plenty of meat, I would play out before dinner. But after a few days of my "new breakfast" I found I could do more work, felt better in every way, and now I am not bothered with indigestion."

lack.

"He is entirely wrong," Polly retorted with a smile into Lord Henry's eyes, "I can cook so that even an epicure would demand a second dose" She turned to the interested men and highly displeased women "If you will all stay out of the kitchen I will have dinner on the table in two hours."

"Oh I say" protested the men, "we cannot allow you——"

Polly smiled a smile that dulled the mockery of her retort "But I am really bored sitting her trying to make small talk in which I am not one whit interested I will be far happier trying to redeem my sex in Lord Henry's skeptical eyes" She was in the kitchen before another word reached her ears

And while Polly was tripping about among the pots and pans incased in Rigaud's great apron the feeling grew in the hearts of the women that not one of the six men had remained true in his allegiance to one woman Each had swerved suddenly toward Polly Prue

From the kitchen there came from time to time a little soft melody It was Lord Henry who listened most eagerly for the sound and watched for a sight of the tawney, sun-kissed head that arose above the white of Rigaud's apron She flitted about and the English peer found himself speculating idly about his estate, should some one with grey eyes and tawny hair be fitting about even as Polly True flitted about these club rooms

It was he who was commanded to carry in the great tray with its odorous roast of beef

As he lifted the silver tray from Polly's hands he laughed frankly into her eyes.

"I am going to send you roses that must strive in vain to rival the beauties in your cheeks. Also, I am going to take you to dinner and the theater for standing in the hot kitchen" He turned and went into the dining room Polly felt suddenly giddy Surely her heart was not going to give her trouble.

As for the young lord, he experienced his first thrill since first love days when he realized that he was carving the roast that Polly had cooked

Toward the end of a most perfectly served dinner it became more than evident that if Polly were to remain in the aristocratic circle for more than a few days, six masculine hearts would be flung down for her to trample on She had proven herself worthy in a hundred little ways that homage of the very finest was her due.

It was a scant three weeks before Lord Henry sailed back to his native land

"I could not have lived without you, my own," he said to some one who stood within the circle of his arm as the ship plowed her way over a moonlit sea.

A tawney head pressed against his shoulder and, stooping, Lord Henry brushed his lips across Polly's eyes

Just Between Friends.

Doubtless your pay isn't highly luxurious,
Surely your job isn't easy or light,
Doubtless your life is a trifle penurious,
Still—are you doing your labor all right?
Have you been fair to the man who is paying you—
Have you been honest and square with the boss?
Isn't your laziness often delaying you—
Hasn't your carelessness caused him a loss?

No one denies that your task is laborious,
No one denies that you're often oppressed,
Still we would ask—though in no wise censorous,
Have you been faithfully doing your best?
Haven't you wasted a lot of coal needlessly—
Haven't you tried to get credit for slate?
Haven't you monkeyed with peril quite heedlessly—
Dallied with danger and frivoled with fate?
While you are thinking of grievances various,
Maybe the boss has a grievance or two,
Maybe his business is mighty precarious,
Simply because of the things that you do;
Bosses there are who are wrong in their attitude,
Greedy and selfish and crazy for pelf,
But—have you really shown fairness and gratitude—
Have you been doing the square thing yourself?

"I like people to admire Francois," Pietro answered sturdily. "I admire him, too." Then, his shyness lost in eagerness to set the case right with Alixe, he went on. "Francois always has a thing done before I think of it. That is not my fault. I believe I should not have been afraid to do that—but—Francois did it."

"It is always so," said Alixe in deep disgust. "Francois always does it. If you would only prove once that you have—courage."

And at that the stranger broke in, smiling his faint smile. "Mademoiselle Alixe is severe," he said gently. "No one can doubt the courage of a Marquis Zappi." He faced with a quick movement to Francois, and his look changed. One would not have thought that the controlled cold features could so show warmth. "I have to thank you for my life, Monsieur the peasant," he said, and held out his hand. "Moreover, it is seldom that a prophecy is so quickly fulfilled." They gazed at him, fascinated by a dignity in him which seemed new.

He went on. "You said a few minutes ago that you should one day do a thing worth while for a Bonaparte. You have done it. You have saved my life."

Bewildered, the children stared, reluctant to comprehend something which seemed out of possibility; Francois' hand crept to his cap and he pulled it off and stood bareheaded.

"Monsieur, who are you?" he brought out.

The strange boy's vanishing smile brightened his face a second. "I am Louis Bonaparte," he said quietly.

The little court of three stood about the young prince, silent. And in a moment, in a few sentences, he had told them how, the day before, he had been seized with a hunger for the air of France, which he had not breathed since, as a boy of 7, his mother had escaped with him from Paris during the Hundred Days. He told them how the desire to stand on French soil had possessed him, till at last he had run away from his tutor and had found the path from his exiled home, the castle of Arenenberg, in the canton of Thurgovie, in Switzerland, over the mountains into the Jura valley.

"It is imprudent," he finished the tale calmly. "The government would turn on all its big engines in an uproar to catch one schoolboy, if it was known. But I had to do it." He threw back his head and filled his lungs with a great breath. "The air of France," he whispered in an ecstasy. The romantic spirit of this boy always flashed out as a surprise from beneath his calm self-contained exterior Then, in his usual quiet tones "I am fortunate," he said. "I have fallen into the hands of friends. Mademoiselle Alixe—the pretty name"—and he smiled his evanescent smile—"is almost of my family because of her father; Monsieur the peasant has proved his loyalty with his life, and"—he turned to the tall Pietro—"a Bonaparte is safe with Monsieur the Marquis Zappi"

"I am Pietro," stated the boy shyly.

The prince looked at him, narrowing his eyes again. Then "And I am Louis," he flashed back. "It is a good thought. Why not leave out the titles for this afternoon? We are all young—it is summer—it is a holiday. We have an ancient castle and an adventure to play with; what use have we for titles? We shall never see one another again, it is likely. So, shall we not be Alixe and Pietro and Francois and Louis, four children together for this one day of our friendship?" And the others laughed and agreed.

For two hours more they told stories and played games through the soft old ruins of the savage old stronghold, as light-heartedly, as carelessly as if there were no wars or intrigues or politics or plots which had been and were to be close to the lives of all of them. Till, as the red round sun went down behind the mountain of the Rose, Francois' quick eye caught sight of a figure swinging rapidly down the mountain road where the prince had come.

"But look, Louis," he called from behind the rock where he was preparing, as a robber baron, to swoop down on Prince Louis convoying Alixe as an escaped nun to Pietro's monastery in another corner. "Look, Louis! Some one is coming whom I do not know. Is it a danger for you?"

And the boy prince, suddenly grave, shaded his eyes with his hand and gazed up the mountain. Then his hand fell and he sighed. "The adventure is over," he said. "I must go back to the prince business. It is Monsieur Lebas."

Monsieur Lebas, the tutor, arrived shortly in anything but a playful humor. The boy's mother, Queen Hortense, was in Rome, and he was responsible; he had been frightened to the verge of madness by the prince's escapade. It was, in fact, as serious an escapade as one my think, or it might have been. The movements of the Bonapartes were watched at that time by the authorities of France and all other countries as well with a closeness and a jealousy out of proportion. Europe having been turned upside down lately by that name, that name was hedged out by barriers as if the combination of letters in itself was a peril to a government. Louis Napoleon at 16 was twice removed from the headship of his house, the Duke of Reichstadt, son of Napoleon I, was still living in Austria, and Louis' own brother, the older son of King Louis and Hortense, was with his father in Rome; so that this runaway lad was not the heir to anything, even to the pretensions of a dethroned and exiled family. Yet he was a prince of the Bonapartes, and the magic of the name and of the legend was about him. It was a danger to France to have his footsteps on her soil, so the laws decreed: it would mean for him prison and perhaps death if he were captured in France. No wonder poor Monsieur Lebas was frightened almost to extinction

The playmates were separated swiftly. Monsieur Lebas refused with something like horror the eager suggestion of the children that he and his charge should spend the night at the chateau. The prince must be gotten off French ground without a moment's delay; Fritz Rickenbach, the steward of Arenenberg, was waiting for them with a carriage over the mountain, to race them back to Switzerland; it was through Fritz indeed, and a discussion of the prince with him as to distances and directions, that the distracted tutor had known how to follow his quarry.

So the three hours' friends were mercilessly torn apart, and the children of the chateau came home in the twilight stirred, excited, awed, with a story for the seigneur of a wandering prince and a crumbling wall; of a midsummer afternoon's dream; of a frightened tutor and a quick sharp parting; a story which the seigneur found it hard to believe. He made each one of them tell the tale. Francois finished the last.

"And Louis would have come back with us to the chateau, for he wanted to see the general who had been one of his uncle's family—he said that, Monsieur the Seigneur. But Monsieur Lebas would not hear of it, and Louis must do as he said, he told us. But at the end Louis took each of our hands—and he kissed Alixe's hand—and he said that he would never forget us or this afternoon in the old chateau of Vicques. And I believe it, my Seigneur, for there is something about him which makes one believe he will remember—that Louis."

"Louis, Louis!" the general growled in repetition, staring sternly at the slim figure which faced him. "You speak that name very glibly. Do you happen to remember, Francois, that the lad whom you call Louis so easily may one day be emperor of France?"

CHAPTER XIII.

THE PROMISE.

'Mon dieu'" said the general.

It was six years later. At the new chateau not a blade of grass seemed changed. The general stood in the midst of close-cropped millions of blades of grass as he stopped short on the sloping lawn which led down to the white stone steps which led to the sunken garden. At each side of the highest step lifted a carved stone vase, blazing in the September afternoon with scarlet geraniums, and garlanded with vines. At the foot of the steps stood two more vases, and at each side of the graveled path, ribboned with a long flower bed, at even intervals of 30 feet, another stately pair of them—the gray stiff vases spilling intoxicating brightness of red flowers. They led the eye down a line till, 100 yards away, the line broke into a circle where a sun-dial set on a fantastic stone figure of a satyr marked the center of a grass plot Massive stone seats held up by carved crouching griffins faced each other across the sun-dial; on one of these, in the sunny stillness of the garden, sat a girl and a young man. Alixe, in her riding habit, with a feather in her hat, and gauntleted gloves on her hands, was so lovely as to be startling. She looked at the ground, half shy, half laughing, and beat the grass with her riding whip. Francois was leaning toward her and talking, and the general, coming slowly down the lawn, felt a flood of pride rise in him as he looked at this successful picture of a boy which he had done so much to fashion. The two had been riding together, and Francois appeared, as most men do, at his best in his riding clothes. With that, as the general marched slowly down the velvet slope, unseen by them, regarding them—his girl and his boy, this happy sister and brother—with that the brother lifted the sister's hand and, bending over it, kissed it slowly, in a manner unmistakably unbrotherly.

"Mon Dieu!" gasped the general, and turned on his heel and marched back to his library

All that afternoon he stayed shut up in the library. At dinner he was taciturn.

"Well then, father," Alixe said at last, after the two had tried every subject in vain to make him talk. "It will be necessary now to buy all the berries that are grown for 10 miles around."

"Berries?" growled the general, bewildered.

"Surely."

"Why berries?" ferociously.

Alixe looked up at him innocently. "Isn't it berries which big bears live on? Or will you eat us, my father, when you have bitten our heads off and torn us to pieces?"

And the general, when he had been betrayed into a laugh, sighed deeply and got up from his chair, dinner not being over, and stalked back to his library. Never had such a thing happened.

"What is it?" Alixe asked of Francois. "He is not ill—he told us that. Have you done something, you wicked sinful boy, to trouble him?"

Francois shook his head thoughtfully. "I cannot think of anything," he said, and his eyes met hers truthfully. "But we shall know soon. He is as frank as a child; he cannot keep a grievance from the people he loves."

Which was a true judgment, for the next morning the general sent for Francois to come to him in the library. A letter had been brought a short time before and was lying open on the table by his hand.

"Francois," began the general in his deep abrupt tones, "I am in trouble. Will you help me?"

"Yes, my Seigneur," said Francois quickly.

"If it means a sacrifice to yourself?"

"Yes, my Seigneur," Francois answered.

"We shall see." The general's strong lips were set and he said nothing more for a moment, but gazed thoughtfully at the letter which lay under his big outspread fingers. At length, "You remember Pietro's father, the Marq[illegible] Zappi?" he demanded.

"Surely, my Seigneur."

"You remember the story I once to[illegible] you, how he saved my life in Russia?"

"I have never forgotten it"

"You realize that he was dearer [illegible] me than any man on earth?"

"I have always believed it so," said Francois.

"Good," growled the general. "You will bear that in mind. I wish to t[illegible] you now of an arrangement—a bo[illegible] which the Marquis Zappi and I h[illegible] formed together. It was to be t[illegible] crown of our friendship and its pe[illegible] petuation; it was to have been o[illegible] happiness together—it would be—it w[illegible] be, if all goes well, the happiest thi[illegible] which could come to my life, now th[illegible] he is gone. Would you break th[illegible] hope and take that happiness fr[illegible] me?"

Francois, startled, caught a qui[illegible] breath. "My Seigneur' You shoul[illegible] not ask. You know I would give m[illegible] own happiness for yours'

The general glared at him, frowni[illegible] "We shall see," he said again, and th[illegible] —suddenly as a shot from a cannon "Does Alixe love you, Francois?"

There was no mistaking what [illegible] meant, and Francois did not evade [illegible] A flame of scarlet crept in a swift [illegible] agonal across the warm brown of [illegible] boyish cheeks, but his clear eyes m[illegible] the general's searching look frank[illegible] He hesitated a moment.

"I—I think not, my seigneur," [illegible] answered in a low voice.

The general drew in an enormou[illegible] sigh of relief. "Thank God" he s[illegible] devoutly, and then put out his ha[illegible] and laid hold of Francois strong le[illegible] fingers. "My Francois, you are dear [illegible] my own son; you know it. You [illegible] next to Alixe—before Pietro—ah, y[illegible] much before Pietro. You will unde[illegible] stand it is not from nay lack of a[illegible] fection that I put him before you [illegible] this."

Francois, high strung, deeply stirre[illegible] felt his hand throb suddenly in th[illegible] general's and the general felt it, too.

"I am hurting you," the deep voi[illegible] said—and only one or two people i[illegible] the world had heard that voice so fu[illegible] of tenderness. "I am hurting you so[illegible] But listen, Francois. It was the dear[illegible] est wish of Pietro's father—it has bee[illegible] my dearest wish for years—that Alix[illegible] and Pietro should one day be marrie[illegible] It is that which would be the crow[illegible] of a friendship forged in the fires [illegible] battle fields, tempered in the freezin[illegible] starving snow fields of Russia, finish[illegible] —I hope never finished in all eternity."

The general's great frame w[illegible] shaking; a silence cut across h[illegible] speech. He went on.

"Such a marriage would carry [illegible] ourselves, our friendship, and keep [illegible] a living thing on the earth long aft[illegible] we had left. That thought is thrillin[illegible] to me; it is my greatest wish. Do yo[illegible] see now why I was troubled wh[illegible] yesterday I saw you, in the garde[illegible] kiss Alixe's hand? I was afraid th[illegible] child had given her heart to you, a[illegible] that my dream, Alessandro's and min[illegible] —he spoke this as if to himself—"migh[illegible] never be realized."

Francois, his head bent his eyes o[illegible] the general's hand which held hi[illegible] answered very quietly "I see" he sa[illegible]

"I forgot," the general went on, a[illegible] most as if he were alone and w[illegible] talking aloud to himself. "I forg[illegible] they were not real brother and sist[illegible] It was mad of me. Such a beauty a[illegible] my Alixe—such a wonderful lad as [illegible] Francois! Yet I did not dream of [illegible] change till yesterday. I have gr[illegible] through much since then, but, tha[illegible] God, thank the good God, it is not [illegible] late. She does not love him It h[illegible] not gone further than what I s[illegible] Francois?" He fired the words at t[illegible] young fellow in his natural manne[illegible] again. "You have not put ideas in[illegible] her head more than what I saw?"

"No, my seigneur." The voice w[illegible] without inflection; the look was still [illegible] the big hand which held his own fa[illegible]

"You would not take her from Pie[illegible] who, I am sure, loves her?"

Francois looked up sharply, but t[illegible] general did not notice. He spoke slo[illegible] ly. "I promised Pietro's father—" t[illegible] boy seemed to be out of breath—"to [illegible] Pietro's friend—always," he said.

The general smiled then and let t[illegible] fingers go, and turned to the letter [illegible] the table before him. "Good!" he sa[illegible] "You are always what I wish, Fra[illegible] cois," and it was quite evident that t[illegible] load was off his mind. "I am conten[illegible] that no harm has been done to eit[illegible] of my children. As for you, howeve[illegible] you are 20. You are full of amoli[illegible] and soldier-craft and politics and fig[illegible] ing—there is small place left for lo[illegible] in such a boiling kettle of fish as y[illegible] If my girl has touched your heart [illegible] bit, as it looked yesterday,"—and t[illegible] general chuckled gently—"well, you [illegible] 20—the wound will heal." He slap[illegible] the letter on the table. "I must h[illegible] have a long talk with you on an in[illegible] esting subject—yourself"

The general was by this in high [illegible] humor. A spasm caught the face [illegible] the boy and left it pale, but the gen[illegible] busy at putting on his spectacles, [illegible] not see. When he turned to look [illegible] him, Francois was as usual.

CHAPTER XIV.

WITH ALL MY SOUL

The general swung around to the [illegible] "Francois, this letter is about you." "It is [illegible] tapped the rustling paper. "It is [illegible] opening, I believe, into the sort of [illegible] you have desired, a life of action [illegible] of danger."

"It is what I wish," broke in Fra[illegible] cois, eagerly.

"I know it," the general spoke [illegible] provingly. "But before we discuss [illegible] want to tell you, my Francois, th[illegible] am not only glad for your sake, [illegible] proud for my own sake, to send [illegible] my adopted son, where you will h[illegible] an opening for distinction. You k[illegible] that I am satisfied with you—you [illegible] not know how deeply. Ten years [illegible] Francois, I found you a little poo[illegible] lad in the village; it did not take [illegible] to see that you had a character a[illegible] the common. If I had left you w[illegible] you belonged you would still have [illegible] out of the common; you would still [illegible] lifted yourself. But circumstances [illegible] not have allowed you very full [illegible] and it seemed to me you deserved [illegible] play. I loved you the more for r[illegible] ing to come to me: that showed [illegible] stuff in you—loyalty—self-sacri[illegible] But I have managed to outwit [illegible] about that fairly well, eh, mon [illegible] I have given you your chance in [illegible] of yourself. And you have taken [illegible] mon Dieu! You have made the m[illegible] your chance!

When you graduated two years ago the top of the school, when Pietro us and went off to his castle in y and you came back to me here as a young gentleman as any duke's I said to myself that I had done Somewhere, from that remark- mother of yours, I believe, you—a heart—have got the simplicity and unconsciousness that are the finest ches of the finest breeding. I am very of you, Francois. I was proud just after you graduated, the ers of the Bonapartist faction in ce came to this chateau for a se- convention and I could present you them as my adopted child, as my laborator in the new book, our mili- y history of the Austerlitz campaign that had a good sound for a lad of 18 name-of-a-dog! you held up your —you could talk to them like a sol- and a statesman. Mon Dieu, yes' And then, when they wrote and sug- ted sending you as ambassador on secret mission to the Duke of ichstadt last year, I almost burst h pride to think how well you were ed for it; fitted to talk with princes, pped with the knowledge and the aftcraft to handle a delicate politi- situation. It is no easy thing to such an ambassador, for such a sion—a man not marked or known, with the subtle and strong quali- which make a man marked. You, h your youth and peasant name and of a young noble, filled the difficult t. You did it well and won laurels critical old diplomatists.

I have been worrying a bit since to e kept you here chained to me and writing of a history, when you ht to be at the job of making his- y. Yet you are only 20. Time has pressed, so far. And moreover, I it a revolution when men such as will be needed; the Bonapartist t is working under the surface of the country; the time will come n a single crashing blow perhaps shake France and place one of the peror's name on the emperor's one. And at that time you, mon- ur, must be ready to put your ngth into that blow. You and I have h, my son, in that accolade of the peror of your infancy, you and I eve that, as he said, you may be one 'a marshal of France under anoth- Bonaparte.' It is for you to fulfil prophecy."

he general, his big hands on his big es, stared at the boy with burn- eyes, stirred by his own words in- true French access of enthusiasm. the boy's eyes did not meet his as l with the flame of whole-hearted ponse which he loved; yet the gen- l carried away by his own generous ings, was not dissatisfied. Box Butte County Boy Led Class In Four Year Veterinary Course.

Thomas S. Leith, son of James B. Leith, was raised in Box Butte county and has many acquaintances in and near Alliance, who will be pleased to learn that he recently graduated from a course in the veterinary department of the Iowa State University, leading his class during the four years.

Young Dr. Leith could no doubt find a good location for the practise of his profession in western Nebraska, and he would receive a hearty welcome should he decide to locate here; but he seems to be enamored with the Hawkeye state and has selected one of it's towns as the place to open his office.—Alliance Herald (Neb).

Dedication Well Attended

A large crowd was here last Thursday evening, to attend the Park and Stand Dedication and all seemed to enjoy themselves. The band played exceptionally well that evening and those who like ice cream and cake, ate to their heart's content. The weather was fine and a large number of people from the surrounding towns were here: Garner, Belmond and Goodell were especially well represented. Among the notable out of town visitors present was Mr Klemme of Belmond, who made it possible at the first place for Klemme to to have such a fine park. Klemme can justly feel proud of her little park and fine band stand—the latter being second to none in Northern Iowa.

M. E. Colleges Consolidate

It will likely be of interest to a number of our readers to know that the Charles City College and Morningside College at Sioux City are to be united. Morningside College to absorb the Charles City institution. Five of the present Charles City faculty are to be transfered to Morningside and all of the equipment. The consolidation will certainly work for the better and mean an exceedingly strong institution. The enrollment at Charles City the past year has been over 200 and at Morningside 638. It is hoped to have the total reach 1,000 mark the coming school year.

Defeats Sheffield Easily In Pretty Contest Last Friday

In one of the fastest games played on the local diamond this season, both from a stand point of fielding and the time of the game occured last Friday when Klemme defeated Sheffield, 5 to 1. Emery who did the twirling for Sheffield was in fine form but hits at the opportune time, coupled with errors let the local team win easily. Thaves, who pitched for Klemme had the Sheffield batters eating out of his hand at all times and three different innings struck out three batters in a row. The locals would have scored a shutout only for one little bobble and a questionable hit which followed. Fern Schnalle of Garner umpired the game and his work was very much appreciated by both teams and the small crowd that had assembled. The next game scheduled for the home grounds is with the fast Woden team, on Tuesday, July 28th, but the locals play at Rockwell, Friday, July 24th.

KILLED IN GRAVEL PIT

Corwith Man Dies Accidentally, Being Crushed by Cave-In.

Corwith, July 13.—Arthur R. Sutcliff was fatally injured here Saturday night by the caving in of a sand pit. He was a brother of the Sutcliff Bros., contracting carpenters. About 5 o'clock he took a team and drove in to the pit for a load of sand. He had got his load nearly on and sat down to rest under the dirt bank, which caved on him. He was able to dig himself out, but could go no farther, as he was crushed about the chest. He was missed, but was supposed to be at his brother's where his team was kept. Later it was discovered he was missing and a search was instituted and he was found unconscious where he had fallen with the patient team nearby. It was 10 o'clock and he had lain there about five hours. He died adout 2 o'clock Sunday morning, but regained consciousness before he died and gave his friends the particulars of the accident. He was the oldest of the brothers and was the mainstay of a blind widowed mother and a sister.—Marshantown Times-Republican.

Mineral Wealth of Iowa Is Also Road To Success

Many Iowa successes have been built up through its mineral wealth which is chiefly in its rich fields of bituminous coal deposits.

During 1912 the coal mines of Iowa produced 7,289,529 short tons of coal valued at $13,152,088 as against 7,331,648 tons in 1911 valued at $12,663,507. These are the figures compiled by Edward W. Parker of the United States Geological survey.

There was a decrease in 1912 of 42,119 short tons due to labor and car shortage but the value increased $488,581. The average price per ton advanced from $1.72 in 1911 to $1.80 in 1912. The number of men employed in the mines in 1912 was 16,730 who worked an average of 188 days and the average production of each man was 445 tons for the year or 2.31 tons per day. There were over fifty per cent fewer deaths in the coal mines of Iowa in 1912 than 1911, there being nineteen men killed in 1912 as compared to forty the previous year. The coal fields of Iowa are to be found in the central and southern portions of the state. They have a total area of about 20,000 square miles of which 13,000 square miles is considered workable under present conditions.

PILOT LIGHTING PLANTS

HOME MADE ACETYLENE LIGHTING and COOKING

Acetylene Gives Double Value

Acetylene not only supplies good light for the farm home, but cooking fuel as well—the hundred and one "systems" that Acetylene has crowded out, all furnish light only. Acetylene gives the Country home owner double value for his money. As a result Pilot Lighting systems now outsell all others. We are today the largest manufacturers of light plants in the world. We have a big Eastern factory in Newark, N. J., and a big Western factory in Chicago.

The new Pilot-Out-door Light Plant—the latest model—is built to set out doors on top of the ground—far away from the buildings it supplies with gas.

This Out-door Pilot looks like a miniature silo—just seven and a half feet high. You simply feed it the gas producing stone Union Carbide, about once a month—the Pilot does the rest. Automatically it makes gas just as you use it—just enough to supply you with brilliant white light in your home and barns—cooking fuel for your kitchen range. Pilot plants have brought the greatest of City conveniences to the Country. The city of Turin is occupied with the task of reorganizing the public lighting on a modern basis, and no less than $400,000 will be employed for this purpose, the work to be carried out from 1914 to 1916. According to the plans, arc lamps will be used in all the main streets and avenues, also the public squares, while smaller streets are to be lighted by incandescent lamps. Flaming arcs in closed globes will be used. About 3,000 lamps of 2,000-candle power each will be installed. In some place incandescent lamps are used, some being of the 5,000 candle power type, and the rest of 100 or 200-candle power. These are much better than the present gas lamps, which give only 50-candle power. Current for the whole system comes from the municipal electric station.

The enormous increase in the purchasing power of the people of Germany that has taken place since the present emperor began his reign in 1888 is strikingly depicted by Dr. Karl Helfferich in a monograph just published. Dr. Helfferich sketches in outline the development in Germany since 1888 of the three chief elements of productive capacity—population, economic technique, and economic organization; the resulting expansion in production itself and the concommitant phenomena of traffic and consumption. He places the present gross income of the nation at $10,000,000,000, as compared with $5,500,000,000 to $6,000,000,000 about 1895. Germany's national wealth is put at $75,000,000,000.

Are there too many books? The weeding out and destroying of old books nds advocates in Edmund Gosse and Mr. Birrell, both of whom have publicly affirmed that libraries, public and private, would be the better for drastic periodical clearances. Walter Bagehot, too, approved of burning useless books. "The barbarians burned books," he wrote, "and though all the historians abuse them for it, it is quite evident that in their hearts they greatly rejoice. If the books had existed they would have had to read them."

Some musical experts came out badly in a test which was tried on them recently in a Paris studio. A number of violins of all ages and values, including a Stradivarius that had been sold for $15,000, were played on, in a darkened room, to an audience that included many people of sound musical judgment. The instrument which they thought the nest turned out to be a Belgian violin made this year, the second piece went to a French instrument of 1911, and the Stradivarius came third.

Had Failed to Get Pardon for Her Son, College Athlete, Now at Anamosa.

Des Moines, Ia., July 11.—The dead body of Mrs. Cordelia Fisk, of Newton, was found this morning beneath her bedroom, which was located on the third floor of a hotel at Colfax. The general belief is that she jumped from the window deliberately, but some claim is being made that her death was due to an accidental fall.

Mrs. Fisk was the mother of "Tuffy" Fisk, a former well known college athlete and baseball player. Young Fisk was sent to Anamosa prison a few weeks ago for embezzlement of funds from the municipal water plant at Newton of which he was clerk. The mother made a heroic effort to save her son from prison and was almost frantic over her failure. This condition is the motive of those who hold the suicide theory.

Although Fisk has been at the Anamosa prison but a short time the records of the institution show that he has been reduced to a second grade prisoner because of an infraction of the rules.

An unconfirmed report is that Mrs. Fisk was just on her way home from Des Moines, where she had been making a personal plea to the governor and other state house officials in an effort to secure a pardon for her son.

AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENTS.

Bedford, Ia., July 11.—George Bosch, of this city, died Wednesday from injuries sustained in an automobile accident near Creston. Bosch and his brother were riding home with George Reed, who had just bought the car in Des Moines. Reed tried to pass another car on a hill and the machine went into the ditch, George Bosch being caught under the car. All were injured.

Alta, Ia., July 11—While driving to Sioux Rapids with a car which he had recently bought, Andrew Rogne, of Linn Grove, hit the railing of a cement bridge while going at a high rate of speed. The car was smashed. Rogne was hurt internally, and his son, who was in the front seat, was thrown through the windshield and badly cut about the head by broken glass.

Olin, Ia., July 11—Fay Burwell, 8-year-old son of Charles Burwell, of this place, was killed yesterday when an automobile, driven by Julius Lorenzen, struck him. It is claimed that the lad ran in front of the machine as it rounded a corner. A fender of the machine knocked the boy to the ground and a wheel passed over him.

FIVE FINED FOR SELLING CIGARETS AT MARSHALLTOWN

Marshalltown, Ia, July 11—Five of the seven tobacco dealers before Justice Burritt, charged with the illegal sale of cigarets on informations signed by George E. Bidwell, special agent of the Iowa department of justice, and filed by County Attorney E. N. Farber, entered pleas of guilty, and paid fines of $25 and costs, amounting to $17.55, a total of $42 53

The cigaret cases disposed of were John Kelly, Robert W Westlake, Bliss Anderson Fred Dieterich and C P. Cook. The other two, against Walter Wilson and Fred W. Gates, were continued because the defendants were not in the city. Wilson is in Monmouth, Ill on business, and Gates in Chicago.

The state agreed to the assessment of the minimum fine of $25 in each case, and costs of $17 55 providing pleas of guilty were entered. If the defendants wanted to stand trial they could take their chances of the maximum fine of $50 and costs.

WOULD BAR MUTUALS FROM COMPENSATION INSURANCE

Cedar Rapids, Ia, July 11—Can an Iowa city take out liability insurance in a mutual company?

This is the question which has been put up to Attorney General George O. Cosson and the new industrial commissioner of insurance, Emory English because of a ruling made by F. F. Dawley, city attorney for the city of Cedar Rapids, against mutuals.

The question is an extremely important one because upon its decision hinges a vast amount of business for the Iowa mutuals which are authorized to write insurance under the new workmen's compensation act. If the state authorities give an adverse ruling and decide as Mr Dawley did, mutuals will not get a "look in" on the liability business of such corporations as municipalities, counties and school districts.

TAXATION QUESTION ONE PROBLEM FOR REPUBLICANS

Des Moines, Ia, July 11—The contest for state auditor the temperance issue and the taxation question are three of the most important problems to come before the republican state convention July 15 Just what will be done with the taxation question is a problem. Another important issue will be the resolution passed by the national commission last December favoring a change in the representation in the national convention. The stand the convention takes will be determined largely by the attitude of Senator Cummins, who was partly responsible for the action taken by the national committee last winter. The convention is expected to indorse the plan to cut down the representation of the democratic states.

FIRST DEATH AWARD UNDER NEW LIABILITY LAW

Des Moines, Ia., July 11.—The parents of Lyman Westcott, 17-year-old boy, of Cedar Rapids, who was the first person to lose his life in an industrial accident since the workmen's compensation act went into effect July 1, will receive $3,000, the maximum amount permitted under the law.

Westcott was employed by the National Oats company. He fell into a vat and was smothered.

PROGRESSIVES ADOPT PLANK CITING EVILS OF LIQUOR BUSINESS

Resolutions Committee Report for Submission Only Not Allowed to Stand.

Des Moines, Ia., July 11.—After several hours of spirited contest, both in the meeting of the resolutions committee and on the floor of the convention, the progressive party convention yesterday afternoon voiced a specific criticism against the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. This position was recorded by a vote of 358 to 283. Nine of the 11 members of the resolutions committee stood behind a plank declaring merely for submission of a constitutional amendment to the people, without taking further position on the general merits of the question. T. A. Kingland, of Lake Mills, the Eleventh district member of the committee, and Frank M. Beatty, of Sigourney, submitted a minority report which included a declaration denouncing the liquor traffic as an evil, and this was adopted. The plank thus accepted by the convention reads as follows:

We believe that the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor for a beverage is a social and economic evil both state and national. Therefore, believing in the rule of the people, we favor the submission of an amendment to both our state and national constitutions prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for a beverage.

When the minority resolution was offered, a motion was promptly made to table it, but this motion lost by 20 votes. Debate was checked by a call for the previous question and the minority proposition was adopted on a roll call vote, thus becoming part of the platform.

About 10 different measures dealing with the liquor question were submitted to the resolutions committee and an active contest took place in the session of this body, with a very strong majority of the committee finally adopting what they thought would be accepted as a compromise position. As the committee had come so close to unanimity, there was little expectation that its findings would be overruled by the convention. Carle Franke, national committeeman, and J. B. Wertz, Eleventh district committeeman, were among those who sought to prevent specific criticism of the liquor business.

One minister, Rev. Everett Dean Martin, denounced prohibition and argued in favor of the progressive party holding to the idea of extended personal liberty. Rev. A. B. Adams, of Council Bluffs, Frank Beatty, of Sigourney; T. A. Kingland and Clarence Bogan, of Clarinda, and J. P Steele, of Winterset, were among the hardest fighters for an anti-liquor plank.

In addition to the prohibition plank the progressives reaffirmed their allegiance to the national platform and declared for changes in the primary law, for rural credits, against the present state tax laws, for organization of working men in unions, for a government employment bureau, against payment of balm money to Colombia, for equal suffrage, and for the national progressive attitude on the tariff

Seventy-six of the 99 counties were represented in the convention.

At a meeting of the state central committee late last night J H Wyllie, of Sigourney, was re-elected chairman, H J Lamb, of Cedar Rapids, treasurer, and J B Wertz, of Spencer, secretary

EMMETSBURG TEACHER CENSURED BY BOARD

Emmetsburg, Ia., July 11.—A long drawn fight here over the moral fitness of T. M. Prall, superintendent of the Emmetsburg schools, has terminated in the five members of the board voting to find him guilty of immoral conduct. On a previous test three members of the board had voted to sustain the superintendent. Following this action, Attorney Dan Kelly visited a number of towns where Mr. Prall formerly taught and assembled quite a mass of evidence When the attorney returned Mr. Prall attempted to resign without having his case reopened, but the board reconsidered its former vote of confidence and held unanimously against him. The complaints here had been made by three young women, high school pupils.

Other points at which complaints had been made against Mr. Prall, during his services as a teacher, were Atalissa, Des Moines, Linden and Avoca, Ia., and Chamberlain and Alpena, S. D. When trouble was started at these various points he had managed to still activities by resigning.

STATE BOARD WILL APPROVE ELECTION OF EMLIN McCLAIN

Iowa City, Ia., July 11.—Approval of the election of Emlin McClain as dean of the college of law, the probable election of a successor to Prof. Barry Gilbert, of the law school, and some action on the situation in the college of medicine are the chief things which will be acted on by the state board of education at its meeting at Ames on July 14. The approval of the election of Judge McClain is certain, while the others are not so sure.

Among the possible candidates for the position left vacant by the resignation of Barry Gilbert are Merton L. Ferson and Henry G. Walker, both of Iowa City, and both strongly urged for it. Mr. Ferson was a former instructor in law at George Washington university, and Mr. Walker once held a similar position with the state university law school before entering practice at Iowa City.

"HIGH-BROW" CAMPERS ARE RAIDED BY COPS

Incident Near Des Moines Has Caused Feeling—Officers Are Standing Pat.

Des Moines, Ia., July 11.—Des Moines residents who are spending the summer camping at Waukonsa park, located five miles north of the city on the Des Moines river, are incensed over the alleged actions of Officers O'Donnell and Erickson of the local police force who "raided" the camp Tuesday night in search of reported law violators.

According to Jack Haviland, employed in the department of accounts and finances at the city hall, the officers conducted themselves in a near disgraceful manner and as a result, Mr. Haviland is alleged to have struck Officer O'Donnell in the face with his fist when ordered out of his tent in which he was sleeping with his wife.

Other members of the camping party including an assistant county attorney, declares that the police drew their guns and forced nearly all the women in the camp to arise and dress before they were satisfied that "everything was all right."

It was reported at police headquarters yesterday that the two officers had been discharged by Chief Crawford, although O'Donnell emphatically denied the report.

"If there has been any firing done I have heard nothing of it," he said. "We went to camp Waukonsa last night under orders from the chief who told us to take a machine and investigate a certain tent which had been reported as housing a couple who had no right to be there."

The officer declared that when Erickson and himself reached the camp they went directly to the tent in question and forced the man to come out. The police asked who was in there with him, they say, and allege that he said "he and his girl."

"This fellow then told us that there were plenty more tents just as bad as his own," continued O'Donnell, "and we visited a couple more. I went to one and threw my flashlight into it. I instructed the man to come out. He told me to get away from the door of his tent or he would land on me. The next minute he leaped through the door and struck me in the face. He said he was Haviland and that his wife was in the tent with him"

In the other tent the officer said they found a man who said he was an assistant prosecuting attorney and was camping with his wife at the park.

For some reason the man whose tent was first visited and who admitted, according to O'Donnell, that he was with his "girl," was not arrested. Strenuous efforts on the part of the police were made to keep the matter hushed yesterday

MEAT WILL SOAR TO EVEN HIGHER PRICES

Scarcity of Cattle Will Cause Further Advance, the Packers Declare.

Chicago, July 11.—Meat prices will rise above the record figures of recent years despite the huge grain crop according to packing house representatives who today asserted that the present scarcity of cattle and the effect of dry weather on grazing lands will more than offset the enormous grain yield.

A price of 16 cents to the butcher was predicted as an early possibility and it was pointed out by one of the packing house men that cattle are now higher than for some time. Scarcity of grass fed cattle was referred to as a factor in the predicted advance

The dry summer in the west last year, one of the representatives of the packers said, was one of the chief causes of the scanty supply on hand and another declared that the demand for meat exceeded the supply and naturally caused prices to advance. All agreed that meat prices showed signs of rising.

CLAIM FILIPINOS PLAN REVOLUTION AGAINST AMERICA

Washington, D. C., July 11—Reports of insurrection threatened in the Philippines are regarded as serious by Representative Towner, who is ranking member of the Philippines committee in the House and in close touch with insular affairs.

Judge Towner said today there could be no question of the deep dissatisfaction of the Filipinos with the failure of the American government assure them independence. He is convinced there is plotting under the surface to put Aguinaldo at the head of the independence movement and crush Osmeno and Quezon, more conservative leaders.

Story Is Credited.

According to the story which has gained circulation and which is given considerable credence in Washington, the Filipinos are planning a general uprising and a simultaneous attack on all Americans and American officials throughout the provinces. The alleged plan is said to involve these points:

The landing of arms imported principally from Japan at points in Luzon remote from the American army garrisons.

The assassination of Americans in Manila and throughout the islands.

Army officers who have seen service in the Philippines profess to believe there is such an insurrectionary plot on foot. Secretary of War Garrison and Gen. Frank McIntyre, chief of the bureau of insular affairs, denied having any knowledge of the alleged plot.

It is known, however, that steps have been taken to have these reports investigated by Governor General Harrison.

Views of Leaders.

Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska, chairman of the Senate committee on the Philippines, said he favored granting the islands independence as soon as they are ready for it.

"I am not prepared at this time, however," said Senator Hitchcock, "to propose legislation which will fix a definite date for the granting of independence. I think the process will be a long and a slow one before the islands are made ready."

Representative Jones, of Virginia, thinks the islands can be made ready in a few years, eight at the most. On the other hand Congressman Towner, ranking republican member of the House insular affairs committee, says it will be many years before they are ready for self-government. Mr. Towner is opposed to any legislation which may serve to provoke trouble. He believes the Jones bill will accomplish no good, while it may precipitate trouble.

PENNSYLVANIA LINE BUYING EQUIPMENT

Orders 1,000 Cars and 81 Engines—Shops Swamped —Labor Scarce.

Altoona, Pa., July 11.—With every department of the Altoona shops, the industrial center of the Pennsylvania Railroad company working full time and many departments working overtime, this city is enjoying an unsurpassed era of prosperity.

Within the last few days additional orders for engines and cars have been placed with the shops here and enough work is now on hand to keep all departments working for at least a year.

An order for 81 freight engines the largest ever used by the Pennsylvania, has been placed at the Juniata shops, while an order has just been placed with the car shops for 1,000 all steel box cars the most costly equipment of its kind ever ordered by the railroad.

Some months ago there was a slight suspension in the Altoona shops and about 1,200 men were laid off. Within the last 10 days practically all of these men have returned to work, while additional mechanics have been employed from other cities.

In fact the conditions of Altoona have improved to such an extent that contractors who are carrying on large operations about Altoona are experiencing a great shortage in the labor market.

NATION NOW WITH HIM, SAYS WILSON

Washington, D. C., July 11.—President Wilson believes that business men are coming around to the administration's view of anti-trust legislation and are willing and ready that the program laid out be put through during the present session of congress. He made this plain to callers following his talk yesterday with Henry Ford, the millionaire automobile manufacturer and other representatives of business.

Mr. Wilson said business men have been uneasy over the possibility that an attempt will be made to be too explicit in definitions of illegal trade practices. He gave it as his opinion, however, that the fifth section of the Newlands trade commission bill, which makes illegal unfair practices in trade covers the desired ground very well. He indicated opposition to empowering the commission to give opinions on the illegality of certain practices remarking that business men wanted immediate basis to work on.

As a result of his recent conferences, the president told callers he knows more about the attitude of business than he did before and he believes that their attitude is not hostile to anti-trust legislation. The average business man he declares, is in favor of having things put on a definite plan.

TRUST PROGRAM WILL BE PUT UP TO SENATE MONDAY

Washington, D. C., July 11.—Consideration of the trade commission bill, initial measure of the administration anti-trust program was abruptly halted last night and the Senate adjourned until Monday when consideration of the remainder of the trust legislation will be resumed. Majority Leader Kern announced that the entire program of the administration would be laid before the Senate Monday.

Meanwhile the judiciary committee will endeavor to complete its perfecting of the Clayton bill amending the anti-trust law and the interstate commerce committee will prepare its report on the Rayburn bill authorizing the Interstate Commerce commission to regulate issues of railroad securities. Numerous amendments to both measures are under discussion, the committees are endeavoring to reconcile conflicting contentions in the Senate and at the same time keep the bills within the lines approved by President Wilson.

The decision to interrupt the consideration of the trade commission bill came at the end of a day of parliamentary and legislative gymnastics in the Senate. Once the entire democratic side was forced to vote down a proposal to continue consideration of the trade commission bill. By a vote of 35 to 16 the Senate displaced the anti-trust measure and took up the harbors and rivers bill in the face of a well organized filibuster conducted by Senators Kenyon, Burton and others.

CALLS WILSON THEORIST; TOWNSEND WAXES BITTER

Washington, July 11.—President Wilson and his trust program were roundly criticised by Senators Townsend and Clapp. Both attacked the general conditions in the Senate surrounding the trust bills, and Senator Clapp declared that a "power outside of the chamber" was responsible for the failure of the Senate to attend to business.

Senator Townsend said the people wanted congress to quit and go home.

"Business is sick and all the psychological mental healers cannot cure it," he said, "and especially will it not recover as long as it is made the shuttlecock of political weavers.

"Much of the legislation already written into law and now in the process of enactment is an impeachment of the intelligence and independence of congress, for it never would have been enacted if the national legislature had followed the dictates of its own judgment as to what was best and necessary for the good of the people.

"I will not charge the president with being unpatriotic or insincere. I do assert, however, that he is a theorist who, without constructive business experience of his own, nevertheless flies into the face of all experience and insists on driving his docile congressional adherents on to dangerous and untenable grounds."

Senator Clapp declared that trust legislation was in no way the outcome of collective judgment and integrity of congress, but was "handed to this body, a cut and dried proposition, for approval."

WILSON GOING TO MAT WITH SENATE

Washington, July 11.—President Wilson will make no nomination for the federal reserve board in place of Paul Warburg, of New York, until the Senate takes definite action on his name. Mr. Wilson proposes thus to place the responsibility on the Senate for leaving the board incomplete. That is the president's position in his fight with the Senate over Mr. Warburg's nomination as expressed today by officials in his confidence. Mr. Warburg has finally decided that he will not appear personally before the banking committee to be crossexamined and the president is backing him in that stand.

The nomination of Thomas D. Jones, which the banking committe has voted to report adversely, is in a different position. A fight for his confirmation may be conducted in a minority report.

Opposition to Jones.

Opposition to Mr. Jones was based upon the fact that he is a director of the International Harvester company, now being sued by the government as a combination in restraint of trade and illegal under the Sherman anti-trust act.

Senators Lee of Maryland, Hollis, Pomerence and Shafroth, all democrats, voted to make a favorable report on this nomination, while Senators Hitchcock and Reed, democrats, and Bristow, Nelson, Crawford, Weeks and McLean, republicans, voted for an unfavorable report. The vote came after a long discussion of the testimony given by Mr. Jones when he appeared before the committee early in the week. There was little criticism of Mr. Jones other than that he was a director of the harvester company, buf several members are said to have declared they could not conscientiously approve a man connected with a concern now being prosecuted.

Stress was laid on the fact that some of the acts of the harvester company complained of in the government's bill asking for its dissolution were committed since April, 1900, when Mr. Jones became a director.

Objection to Warburg.

Objection to Mr. Warburg so far is based upon an entirely different reason. The committee has asked him to appear and submit to questions about his business connections. He has refused, and the question as now viewed by the Senate is whether it should confirm any man who will not accept such an invitation.

The first test of strength on the Warburg nomination may come Monday, when a resolution will be reported from the Senate rules committee increasing the membership of the banking committee. This resolution did not receive the approval of the rules committee, but will be brought to the floor anyhow and its appearance may lead to the debate which will disclose some of the feeling in the Senate toward the nomination.

The president made it clear that he did not take the same view of Mr. Jones' testimony before the banking committee as some of its members took and said the committee's statement about what Jones said made him distrust its accuracy. Acting Chairman Hitchcock made this answer:

"The Jones testimony has been printed confidentially, and I am sure the president can have a copy of it if he asks the executive clerk of the Senate for it."

Carry Fight to Senate.

After receipt of a telegram from Mr. Warburg, it was said by officials close to the president that an active fight would be made for the confirmation. It was declared that should the banking committee fail to report the nomination favorably the president expects the Senate as a whole to act.

The committee's action on these two nominations was taken in the face of a determined effort on the part of the president to obtain approval of them. In his conference with the newspaper men yesterday the president made it clear that he would continue the fight.

It was pointed out that in insisting on confirmation of Warburg the president was running into the question of Senate prerogatives and might find many votes against him which would otherwise be on his side. The Senate has grumbled for years about the invasion of its prerogatives by presidents, and in this case many senators feel they have found an issue on which they can stand together.

Senator Lewis, of Illinois, is conducting the fight for the confirmation of Jones. It was understood that he counts upon a majority of two to put the nomination through, but it is conceded that even a half dozen senators might delay confirmation for many weeks, if not defeat it entirely. A real campaign to put the Jones nomination through might cause the Senate to abandon its work on anti-trust legislation and keep in executive session most of the time.

POLICE ASKED TO UNRAVEL MYSTERY

Atlanta, Ga., July 11.—Local postal and police officials, whose aid has been enlisted by Mrs. J. W. Nelms in an effort to unravel the mystery surrounding the disappearance of her two daughters, Mrs. Eloise Dennis and Miss Beatrice Nelms, today admitted the problem still is baffling.

Mrs. Nelms stated the note from San Francisco, in which Mrs. Dennis is said to have asserted that she had killed her sister in New Orleans and intended to kill her brother, Marshall Nelms, was typewritten, but bore the written signature "Eloise Nelms Dennis." She added that she was convinced her daughter signed it.

A new element of confusion was injected into the case by press dispatches today which stated that Victor Innes, a Nevada lawyer, said to have assisted Mrs. Dennis in obtaining her divorce, was married and had moved to Seattle with his family. Mrs. Nelms after reading these dispatches said she and her daughters had believed Innes unmarried and that Mrs. Dennis was engaged to marry him when she left Atlanta.

Local police are endeavoring to trace an express package shipped to Miss Beatrice Nelms in care of Mrs. Margaret Mims at San Antonio, Tex.

LITTLE ROCK BANKERS TO LIQUIDATE AFFAIRS

Little Rock, Ark., July 11.—Stockholders of the State National bank which recently closed its doors, last night decided to liquidate the bank's affairs through a committee of their members. H. M. Johnson, of St Louis, former cashier of the bank, was elected liquidator.

National Bank Examiner W. W. Smith recently reported to comptroller of the currency, Williams that the bank was solvent.

COUNTRY BOY HAS ADVANTAGES OVER HIS CITY COUSIN

St. Paul, Minn., July 10.—David Starr Jordan, of Leland Stanford university, was elected president of the National Education association at the annual business meeting today. He was unopposed. President Swain automatically became first vice president.

Oakland, Cal., was chosen as the meeting place next year.

St. Paul, Minn., July 10.—City boys with useless experiences become convicts while country boys, educated in a natural invironment by family responsibility become doctors, lawyers, merchants and teachers according to Rufus Stanley, Elmira, N. Y., who spoke before the state national club leaders of the National Educational associatin today.

Timorous mothers who are afraid to allow their children out of their sight and are continually suggesting things to frighten them into obeying, are responsible for the great number of adult neurotics in this country. Dr. T. A. Williams, of Washington, D. C., told a meeting of the department of special education.

P. P. Claxton, United States commissioner of education, speaking before he department of music, said that if he were to make up a curriculum for a public school, he "would put in a little physical culture, a little reading and writing, a little arithematic and a big dab of music."

Value of Hygiene.

Speaking before the department of child hygiene Dr. Louis W. Rapeer, of the New York training school for teachers advocated education as a means of eliminating "enormous national financial loss, due to ill health."

"The average working man's family has an economic loss of between 5 and 15 per cent of the annual income due to ill health," Dr. Rapeer said.

"The principal method of eliminating this waste is thorough education. As a preparation for industrial efficiency no phase of general or of direct vocational training ranks higher in importance than health education."

Sex instructions placed on the same basis as spelling and arithmetic will become so common that it will lose its sacredness asserted Dr. Charles H. Keene of Minneapolis, supervisor of hygiene and physical training.

"We should have but the strongest condemnation for the wealthy, club going woman who has not the time to teach her child the fundamental truths of life, but who would throw the responsibility upon a teacher or a football coach," he continued.

Oppose Sex Instruction.

As speaker after speaker expressed similar views, it became apparent that the added duty of teaching sex hygiene would not be placed upon the American teacher if it could be prevented by the association.

Principals and aims of education formed the topic of discussion at the general session tonight. Election of officers and reports of various committees is the principal work on tomorrow's program.

"Outrageous," is the way Dr. Kenne expressed himself when he spoke of how "shiftless" mothers are sliding their responsibility upon the teachers.

"We talk about the inability of the poorer mothers to teach their children regarding personal hygiene, but it is not for these children that we need to have all the fear," he said.

"The only thing now done in the home is the feeding and clothing of the children.

"Knowledge will never compel purity," he added; that sex instruction in schools by teachers lowered the standard of morality, and concluded:

"If we put sex hygiene instructions in our schools the homes of America will continue to lose ground, and will give up the few privileges they now have to train the children."

To Elect Jordan.

For the purpose of receiving the reports of the various committees and electing a president to succeed Joseph Swain, of Swarthmore, Pa., the National Educational association held its annual business meeting today. Harmony was the watchword of the meeting and the unanimous election of Dr. David Starr Jordan, of Leland Stanford university, was expected.

The resolutions committee embodied in its report a resolution indorsing woman suffrage. The resolution does not specifically mention man or woman suffrage, but states that the educators of the country believe "political equality" for both sexes necessary for the best interest of the nation.

While the business meeting was in session, various problems pertaining to the welfare of the nation's children were being discussed by delegates in different departments and plans outlined for the solution of questions vital to the educational world.

The report of the committee on resolutions approving woman suffrage and equal pay for teachers regardless of sex, was adopted without a fight.

Regarding woman suffrage, the resolution says:

"The association regards efficiency and merit, rather than sex, as the principle on which appointments and selections should be made and therefore declares itself in favor of the political equality of the sexes and equal pay for public services."

Woman delegates were elated at the adoption of the report and declared they had won a notable victory.

Another report stating that the salaries of teachers should be "increased and adjusted to the standards of living required by the American teacher," was adopted.

Physical inspection of school children was approved by the committee, which recommended also dental inspection. The report was adopted.

Regarding sex hygiene the committee directed attention to the grave dangers, ethical and social, "arising out of a sex consciousness stimulated by undue emphasis on sex problems and relations" and urged parental care and instruction on the subject. If taken up in schools the subject should be handled delicately and by persons qualified by scientific training and teaching experience in order to assure a safe moral point of view, the resolution said. It was adopted.

Another resolution adopted said:

"The association commends the moral self restraint on the part of the president of the United States in dealing with the Mexican situation and indorses heartily his policy that the United States does not aim at territorial aggrandizement."

SEEKS TO PROSECUTE SIR THOMAS LIPTON

Sir Arthur Markham Would Bring Suit as Result of Canteen Scandal.

London, July 10.—Criminal prosecution of Sir Thomas Lipton, the chairman, and his codirectors in Lipton's, limited, was suggested by Sir Arthur Markham, a liberal member, in a question addressed to the attorney general appearing in today's parliamentary papers. The question, the putting of which was postponed by arrangement, asks whether in view of Justice Darling's statement that the defendants in the army canteen scandal case were acting on a system which was encouraged by the directorate of the company, the attorney general has laid the papers in the case before the public prosecutor with a view to criminal proceedings for fraud and bribery against Sir Thomas Lipton and his codirectors.

The question arose out of the recent conviction of nine army officers and eight civilian employes of Lipton's, limited, on charges of receiving and giving bribes to influence the allotment of supply contracts for the army canteens.

HUGE PASS GRAFT IS UNEARTHED BY COMMERCE BOARD

Washington, July 10.—Characterizing the distribution of free transportation by railroads as a menace to the institutions of a free people, the Interstate Commerce commission today reported to the Senate the results of its investigations under Senator Lea's resolution directed against the Louisville & Nashville and the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis railroads.

The report says that during 1913 the two roads distributed free passes representing more than 11,000,000 miles of travel, valued at $340,260.61, to more than 34,000 individuals in every walk of life. The report says the Louisville & Nashville gave in the following numbers: United States senator, 1; representatives, 2; other United States officials, 139; state senators, 1,556; state representatives, 2,183, other state officials, 1,769; judges, 89.

The Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis to United States officials other than members of congress, 151; state senators, 5,814; state representatives, 8,439; other state officials, 1,086; judges, 170.

The commission informed the Senate that while it could issue no order in the special investigation pursued under the resolution, it was making a general investigation in which it intends to issue an order dealing with the practice.

Commission's Findings.

Discussing its findings, the commission said:

"In order properly to compile the required information lists of pass holders in the various classes were prepared. Such lists reveal the manner in which these carriers have dipped into practically every domain of public and private life, through the instrumentality of the free pass. There is scarcely a walk of life which is not represented in this proceeding of recipients of passes, from the federal bench to the local politician and the sheriff who summons the jury."

"The threads represented by these passes tie thousands of citizens to the carrier through improper relations. The lack of morality reflected by the facts here compiled is a menace to the institutions of a free people.

"These citizens, who sell their influence quite as much as though they accepted money bribes, seem to be as willing to be tied as the carriers are ready to tie them. Men pledge their influence quietly in the home, or school, or club, in the professions, in business, in city councils and administrative boards, in courts of justice, in executive halls and at the polls."

WARBURG TO MAKE FIGHT FOR PLACE

Washington, July 10.—Paul Warburg, the New York banker, has reconsidered his request that President Wilson withdraw his nomination as a member of the federal reserve board on the condition that he will not consent to appear before the banking committee to be cross-examined.

After receipt of a telegram from Mr. Warburg today, it was said by officials close to the president that an active fight would be made for the confirmation. It was declared that should the banking committee fail to report the nomination favorably, the president expects the Senate as a whole to act.

Mr. Warburg's telegram to the president was not given out, but after its receipt officials at the White House said the name would not be withdrawn. The telegram followed a visit by Senators Thomas and Shafroth to the White House. They are understood to have told the president that very few democrats would oppose Mr. Warburg's confirmation.

The situation as to the nomination of Thomas D. Jones, of Chicago, remained unchanged and it was said at the White House that the president would continue to press for his confirmation.

A letter from the Chicago delegation of business men received yesterday by the president, indorsing Mr. Wilson's statement in support of Mr. Warburg and Mr. Jones was made public at the White House.

"No more hopeful, helpful, finer words ever have come from the White House and we believe they will meet with the nation's hearty approval," said the letter.

The Warburg nomination was discussed only informally today by the committee. It took up in detail the nomination of Thomas D. Jones, of Chicago.

RACE POSTPONED.

Newport, R. I., July 10.—The three American cup yachts, Resolute, Vanitie and Defiance were fog bound in Newport harbor today and the regatta committee at 12:30 declared the contest postponed until tomorrow.

SOME OFFICIALS NOT ENAMORED OF REPORT FOR CHANGED GRADES

Reform Committee's Suggestions Provoke Much Interest in State-House Circles.

Des Moines, Ia., July 18.—State officials were inclined to attack the tentative plan of the committee yesterday. The scheme provides for the division of state government into three large departments, the superintendents of which are to be appointed by the governor. The three superintendents and the governor will form the new executive council in the new arrangement. This will reduce the secretaries of state, treasurer and auditor to merely administrative officers with duties only as specifically mentioned in the constitution.

W. S. Allen, secretary of state, and W. C. Brown, treasurer, who are candidates for re-election, do not like the idea of the offices they represent being reduced in power. John L. Bleakly, auditor of state, who is not a candidate for re-election, but who is mentioned as a possible candidate for governor in 1916, objects to the change, as in his opinion it would throw too much responsibility on the governor and let the other elective officers escape all responsibility. He thinks it will be burdening the governor too greatly.

As to the actual saving in money, the committee expects to lighten the state's expenses greatly by reforming the methods of conducting the legislature itself. The report contains a provision for a great reduction in the number of committee clerks and door keepers. This will save from $10,000 to $20,000 a year, it is claimed. The change in automobile registration will make a big saving also.

Between $50,000 and $100,000 will be saved annually in the operation of the affairs of state by the reorganization which is recommended in the report, which will be presented to the Thirty-sixth general assembly, according to statements made today. It is claimed by the advocates for the change that the new plan will not only provide greater efficiency, but that the actual saving in cash to the state is considerable.

WOMAN AND BABY ARE CORNERED BY MAD DOG

Council Bluffs, Ia July 18.—Held a prisoner in her home with her baby girl by a house dog that had suddenly gone mad, was the terrifying experience of Mrs. William Nicholson, of this city. The dog forced Mrs Nicholson into a corner, baby in her arms, and held her there until she was nearly exhausted, when she managed to fight the animal off and take refuge in another room, where she barricaded herself In her fight with the mad dog, however, Mrs. Nicholson was bitten on the hand

Mrs Nicholson attempted several times to leave the house but each time the dog attacked her and would not allow her to leave and when she raised a screen in the room to secure needed air, the dog rushed at her and would have plunged through the wire netting had the window not been lowered Mrs Nicholson called to neighbors for help, but all were too badly scared to attack the dog

A telephone message to the police did not bring aid until after Mr Nicholson had returned home and rescued his wife, nearly dead from fright and exhaustion, from the house and dispatched the dog.

AT LEAST ONE SURVIVOR OF "GRAYBEARD" REGIMENT

Marshalltown Ia, July 18—That there is at least one surviving member of the famous Graybeard regiment, the Thirty-seventh infantry, is assured, despite statements that have been published in newspapers throughout the country at different times announcing the death of the last surviving "Graybeard"

W. H H Miller of Dubuque, a member of the soldiers' home, is believed to be the last survivor, and he is hale and hearty at the age of 67 Miller has recently returned to the home after a four years' absence

The graybeards were so called from the fact that nearly every member was past middle age, ranging from 45 to 60 The regiment was mustered in at Muscatine December 10, 1862, and was discharged at Davenport at the close of the war, May 10, 1865 Miller served throughout the three years' enlistment of his regiment as a fifer of Company F.

REGULAR GALE ACCOMPANIES HEAVY RAIN AT BURLINGTON

Burlington, Ia, July 18—The worst rain and windstorm of the present season broke over Burlington yesterday afternoon and for half an hour the gale raged in a terrific manner A large crowd had gathered at a circus when there was danger of a panic among the spectators. The storm blew down the animal tent and many spectators ran out of the main tent into the deluge of rain and bewilderment of wreckage outside Women screamed and children cried, and some men got excited. Employes of the circus probably prevented a serious panic by the manner in which they handled the crowd, and after the first few minutes had the crowd in control. No one was injured, but during the height of the storm hundreds were in peril of their lives.

ALTA MEN WILL START NEW BANK AT LAKE VIEW

Mr. Denio was, until July 1, connected with the Citizens National bank, of Storm Lake, and prior to his connection with that bank was with the Iowa National, at Des Moines. Mr. Zeilman is a lawyer, having practiced at Denver until last fall The new bank will open as soon as the building is ready

SHAW NOMINATED FOR AUDITOR; SILENCE ON WET AND DRY ISSUE

Republican Convention Accepts Platform Without Argument or Amendment.

Des Moines, Ia., July 18.—Frank Shaw of Tama county, who secured the largest number of votes in the primary election, was nominated on the third ballot for state auditor at the republican state convention here yesterday. This was the only nomination contest before the convention and the interest of the session, aside from this business, related principally to the platform to be adopted.

On the first ballot the vote was: Shaw, 333; Byrnes, 267; Ellis, 165; Wall, 111; Ford, 143. It required 511 votes to give a nomination. Shaw came close to the goal on the second ballot and was an easy winner on the third.

After the convention some of the Byrnes supporters attracted considerable attention with a declaration that the Shaw campaign bureau had been issuing circulars against the Byrnes candidacy on the ground that the latter is a Catholic. It is said that Shaw, in the presence of witnesses, admitted his responsibility for such letters The claim also is made that Shaw has been acting as an organizer for the Knights of Luther, an anti-Catholic organization.

All of the platform controversies were threshed out and smothered in a protracted session of the resolutions committee, which did not make its report to the convention until after 6 o'clock last evening. The belated report of the committee, with all of the delegates ready to quit the session, probably had some effect in keeping down contests on the convention floor, in the way of minority reports or efforts at amendment.

As forecasted in the report yesterday the committee was decidedly "wet" in its makeup and it was quite certain that no radical "dry" declaration would be reported in the resolutions. It was generally expected, however, that the committee would go so far as to declare in favor of submission of a constitutional amendment to the voters. Even this much of a concession was not made and the resolutions, as reported and adopted, without argument or amendment, ignored the liquor issue. The committee also smothered the "individual conscience" resolution framed up by the standpatters in an effort to embarrass Senator Cummins

It leaked out from members of the resolutions committee that a report could have been presented to the convention much earlier and that the delay was a deliberate piece of strategy to minimize the danger of eruptions on the convention floor

Following the nomination of state auditor, and while the delegates were awaiting the report of the resolutions committee, Senator Cummins was called to the platform and was given a rousing ovation In a brief address Senator Cummins expressed his appreciation of the vote of confidence given him by the republicans of Iowa at the June primaries He criticised President Wilson for usurpation of congressional functions and declared that the democratic tariff bill discriminated against the farmers of Iowa and in favor of the products of New Jersey and other eastern states

There were about 700 delegates present at the convention out of the 1,021 entitled to seats Each county chairman was allowed to cast the full vote of his county and this made a full state representation for nominating purposes

Will C Johnson of Ida Grove was chosen as permanent chairman in conformity to the recommendation of the committee on permanent organization.

CHICAGO SLEUTHS IN FATAL BATTLE

Chicago, July 18—With one detective dead and three wounded as a result of a revolver battle last night in Chicago's vice district officials reported closed, police officials attempted today to untangle the accounts of the fatal affray between members of the department.

The dead detective, Stanley J Birns, was a member of the regular plain clothes force. John C. Sloop, Birns' partner, was shot through the thigh. Joseph Merrill and Fred Amart detectives of the morals squad, were wounded less seriously. James C Carroll, who said he was an investigator and railway fireman, also was wounded.

In the investigation by Chief of Police Gleason, two facts appeared to stand out: that the killing and wounding of the policemen were precipitated by a gang of levee characters and that many of the shots fired came from weapons in the hands of the gangsters. It was thought that several of the crowd of vice district characters were wounded and had been hidden by their friends.

The affray was possible because the morals squad men, Merrill and Amart, did not recognize Birns and Sloop. Merrill and Amart had been policemen but a short time. They had just raided a disorderly resort and sent a wagonload of prisoners to the station. A gang of levee hangers on followed and attacked Merrill and Amart as they walked away from the place. "Look at the stool pigeons they yelled Stones and bottles were thrown and the detectives drew their revolvers. Just then Birns and Sloop ran up to disperse the mob. "Lookout they've got guns," someone cried Then the shooting began. Merrill declared that the first shot was fired by a man in the crowd who dodged behind a woman Another woman had just fallen, he said, having been hit by a brick. Merrill said he emptied his revolver at the man.

Clash of police activities in the vice district was disclosed in the shooting. Merrill and Amart were members of Morals Inspector W C [illegible]'s squad which he had unexpectedly sent into the levee section to make raids. At the same time First Deputy M L C Funkhouser had a detail in the district for the same purpose, thinking that Dannenberg was on the north side Birns and Sloop belong to the detective bureau, which is said to regard with jealousy the activities of the special details. The situation was finally dominated by the uniformed police, who dispersed the mob.

UNCLE SAM LENDS AID TO MEXICANS

Washington, July 18 The United States continued today to exert its influence with General Carranza to bring about an immediate cessation of hostilities and an agreement with the Carbajal government for the peaceful transfer of power at Mexico City to the constitutionalists

John R. Silliman, personal representative of President Wilson with Carranza, received further instructions urging him to impress on the constitutionalist chief the advisability of giving guarantees for the protection of the lives and property of those who have supported the Huerta government. Besides endeavoring to obtain a general amnesty representation on behalf of the clergy in Mexico now in disfavor with the constitutionalists, have been made by Mr. Silliman.

Definite official advices came through Mr Castellot that the commissioners, three constitutionalists, which had started from Mexico City on Wednesday to talk with Carranza, was authorized to negotiate with him for the transfer of the government at Mexico City. It will probably be two or three days before the commission, on account of the interrupted communication will be able to reach Carranza.

On the outcome of the conference and the assurance given by Carranza as to an amnesty and the adjustment of claims will depend whether recognition will be accorded Carranza by the United States at once or whether such action will be indefinitely delayed.

Looming up as an ultimate complication in the situation is the proposed repudiation by Carranza of the financial obligations incurred by the Huerta regime. Since that administration was recognized as legal by the powers of Europe, every effort will be exerted by them to maintain the validity of the claims of their subjects.

WIDOW OF DARING YEGG WITH $70,000 LOOT BESTS COPS

New Orleans, July 18 —After days of grilling at the hands of the New Orleans police Mrs. Charles Craven, or Mrs. Charles Prator, daughter of a former governor and widow of an expert cracksman who was killed while "pulling off a job," has been released She steadfastly refused to reveal the hiding place of $54,000 in money and $16,000 in diamonds which she says is concealed in the outskirts of Savannah, Ga The money was obtained by the bandit husband of the girl widow in a series of clever robberies which baffled the police of Dixie.

The pretty widow of the famous yegg has had an adventurous career With her bandit husband who posed as a millionaire while robbing his rich companions, she was received by the best of society. She is the daughter of the late ex-Governor MacCorkle, of West Virginia, and her early training in society enabled her to play the role of a millionaire's wife.

"You can torture me, kill me but I'll never reveal the hiding place of the money and jewels," said the girl when she was arrested. "I know where the mony is that Charlie obtained by blowing express cars and safes, and robbing postoffices and banks, before he was killed in Florida, five months ago but he gave it to me, and I'm not going to let go of it."

Papers in the trunks of Mrs Craven indicate that she is a stepdaughter of the late ex-Governor MacCorkle, of West Virginia. A society news item, clipped from a Dallas paper of three months ago, stated that she was visiting the parents of "her late husband, who had been killed in a railroad wreck in Florida." Other clippings show that she and her husband had been feted by society in several cities.

Robbed Palm Beach Guests.

She smilingly added that her husband had posed as a millionaire at Palm Beach hotels, and robbed many guests of thousands of dollars.

Mrs. Craven said that her husband's real name was Charles Lee Prator, and that his parents, Mr. and Mrs J B Prator, are living in Dallas A Dallas society clipping reads:

"Mrs. Charles Lee Prator of Jacksonville, Fla., is visiting Mr, and Mrs J. B. Prator here. Mrs. Prator formerly was Miss Eva MacCorkle of West Virginia, daughter of ex-Governor MacCorkle. Her husband recently was killed in a railroad wreck in Florida."

"Do you think that I would give up that little fortune after my husband risked and gave up his life in securing it?" said the young woman 'Not much; I still revere Charlie's memory and believe that I am entitled to the treasure, after he was killed while robbing a postoffice to give me money to live a life of ease.

"Yes, the money and diamonds are part of the loot my husband secured with his revolver, and by his ability to crack safes. But I, nevertheless, believe that I am entitled to it, just the same. The treasure is now hidden in Savannah, but it never will be discovered. They may kill me, but they never will know where it is

Will Conceal Treasure.

"They think they will be able to trail me to the hiding place of the treasure when they get me back in Savannah, but they are fools for thinking so I am somewhat of a detective myself and can go and come from the hiding place with perfect security."

Mrs. Craven also is known as Eva Black MacCorkle. She ran away from convent in Ontario some years ago She says she was put there by her stepfather, who, she says, was a former governor of West Virginia. She declares she met Craven in Norfolk Va., little more than a year ago, and that they had been married only about eight months when he was killed.

Mrs. Craven laughed when she entered into a recital of her life story

"One never would think that I spent 5 years of my life in a Catholic convent, would one?" She paused, to see what effect this would have on her auditors. "Nevertheless, it is true. I was born in Toronto, Canada, and when a small girl my father died and I was placed in a convent at Hamilton, Ont. My mother then moved to Charleston, W. Va., where she is now."

The suit in which the attorneys recently demanded that the directors join, is designed to force restitution from those responsible for funds alleged to have been illegally expended in building up the New Haven system

Judge Brady issued an order of notice returnable next Friday to show cause why a receiver should not be appointed and why an injunction against the disposition of the defendants' stocks should not be issued

The litigation is in the form of an equity action entered by the attorneys as trustees under the will of Olea Bull Vaughan They own 50 shares of New Haven stock and bring the action "in behalf of themselves and all other stockholders of said corporation, who may become parties

NEW HAVEN BOARD WILL NOT SELL ITS HOLDINGS

New York July 18 By unanimous vote, the directors of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad company stood by their decision not to sell the state of Massachusetts their holdings of Boston & Maine railroad stock under the terms imposed by that state.

In the language of the official statement the directors have neither receded from their position nor closed the door to further negotiations

The terms imposed by the state of Massachusetts in connection with the sale of the New Haven's Boston & Maine stock contain the provision that each certificate must bear the stipulation on the part of the purchaser that he will sell his shares to the state of Massachusetts at any time named

The New Haven directors took the ground that compliance with the conditions would render the stock undesirable as a purchase on any fair basis

NEW SEA SLED WILL BE COMPLETE IN FEW DAYS

(By Lieut. John Cyril Porte, R. N.)
(Copyright by Press Publishing Company)

New York, July 18.—Mr Curtiss telephoned me from Hammondsport that the last experiment with the sea-sled bottom for the America was quite satisfactory In Wednesday's trials there was a slight tendency to porpoising, so the length of the false bottom was reduced by two feet and Mr. Curtiss took the craft out for a short trial. The change proved an advantage and left us quite ready to complete the sea sled construction On account of a storm no effort was made to leave the water but the America planed perfectly without porpoising under a load of 1,300 pounds

Work will be pushed now to make the false bottom water tight. Mr. Curtiss hopes to have this ready for the final testing by Saturday noon. I shall go to Hammondsport when it is ready as I wish to try out the America again before the permanent rebuilding of the hull. Until this trial I am breaking off from writing any further reports, hoping to make a holiday of the next 24 hours.

Mr. Elmer Sperry, inventor of the Sperry automatic stabilizer, gave me a disappointing report at our conference at the New York club. I had quite counted upon the equipment of the Rodman Wanamaker craft with Mr. Sperry's device, but he finds it impossible to construct a stabilizer to equip the [illegible] before August 1

MINEOLA GRAND JURY WILL PASS ON GUILT OF SUSPECTED SLAYER

Maid and Tramp Tell Stories Which Tend to Involve Wife of Physician in Bailey Murder Case.

Mineola, N Y, July 17—The grand jury weighing the evidence against Mrs Florence Carman, locked up on the charge of slaying Mrs Louise Bailey, who was shot down in Dr. Carman's office on the night of June 30 last was expected to vote for or against an indictment late this afternoon. District Attorney Smith, in announcing so today said that the verdict probably would not be made public until tomorrow But three witnesses, Mr. Smith continued, were to face the grand jury today, with the possible exception of Mrs Carman herself Whether the jurors would receive her and permit her to make a statement, was a point which had not been determined this forenoon

The case of District Attorney Smith against Mrs Florence A Carman who is in jail here charged with the murder, was practically completed yesterday and little of a sensational character was expected to be brought out by the witnesses today The announcement by the district attorney that he would not call Elwood T Bardes, the insurance collector, whose testimony, before the coroner practically resulted in a charge of murder being placed against Mrs Carman, caused much surprised. The defense, it is said, was prepared to attack Berdes' testimony The district attorney also said he would not call Mrs Ida Powell, Mrs. Carman's sister nor her daughter nor Mr and Mrs Platt Conklin, her father and mother, before the grand jury

Still another surprise to the defense was the announcement by Mr. Smith that Mrs Carman herself would not be permitted to tell her story to the grand jury'

If Mrs. Carman does testify, Mr. Smith said, he would not ask her a single question and, if he could prevent it, he would not permit questions being put to her by jurors.

The most important witness yesterday was Frank J Farrell, whose story as told to District Attorney Smith was that on the night of June 30, being out of a job and hungry, he started for the back door of the Carman home to ask for food. He was rounding one of the rear corners of the house, his story went, when he saw a tall woman dressed either in a long cloak or kimono, come from the back door, go directly to a window in what he now knows to be the doctor's home and break the glass

Farrell said he did not know whether the woman had a revolver or not. If she did, he did not see it. Farrell's story continued that the woman shot and quickly hurried off.

After the grand jury had examined three witnesses—Dr. Runci, Mrs. Corby and Phineas Seaman, a detective—District Attorney Smith recalled Frank J. Farrell, who claims that he was at the back door of the Carman home when the shot was fired and saw a woman dart around the house and into the door near which he was standing.

NAVY PLUCKING BOARD IS PLACED UNDER FIRE

Washington, July 17—Rear Admiral Knight told the House naval committee today that Capt. John H. Gibbons and four other navy captains, recently "plucked," had added absolutely nothing to the efficiency of the navy, but detracted from efficiency He said that while Captain Gibbons' record was flawless, he had been at sea only three years out of the previous 13 and had contributed materially nothing to the advancement of naval science. He said the law under which "plucking" was done almost compelled the "plucking" of Gibbons.

There was reference in committe to a suggestion that certain officers had been "spotted" or "marked" for "plucking." A bill to reinstate Captain Gibbons is pending.

Washington, July 16—Operations of the dreaded naval "plucking" board, which annually orders the compulsory retirement of many high officers in the navy were to be gone into today by a subcommittee of the House naval committee. Rear Admiral Knight, who, as head of the "plucking" board, recently retired from active service Capt. John H. Gibbon, commander of the battleship Utah, had been summoned to testify.

Numerous naval officers recently retired by the board have appealed to members of congress in an effort to have their cases reopened with a view to restoration to active service. Friends of Captain Gibbon in and out of congress have protested that his "plucking" was unfair to him and to the naval service.

THINKS INSANITY IS DUE TO BODILY ILLS

Physicians Should Search for Physical Disease First, Says Expert.

Chicago, July 17.—"In all instances mental diseases are due to physical causes and should be met by physical measures," said Dr. Carl W. Sawyer of Marion, Ohio, today to the convention of alienists and neurologists in session here Dr Sawyer declared that in the study of 2,700 cases, he had found that a physical ailment was virtually always the cause of any of the forms of insanity. Psychic causes are mere side roads, he asserted.

"The psychical side has attracted so much attention that the physical has been lost sight of," said Dr. Sawyer. "I am convinced that wherever physical conditions are now shown to be the causes of psychic states it is due to the weakness of the investigator and to the immatureness of his methods rather than to the absence of a physical cause."

Steubenville, Ohio, July 17.—Two hundred striking miners today marched down the hills where they camped last night to the mines at Bradley, Ohio, and attempted to drive off the pump men Sheriff Huscroft, with a strong party of deputies, resisted at the advance and a number of shots were fired but none of the attacking party was hurt. WHITMAN IS WEAKLING DECLARES ROOSEVELT

Oyster Bay, N Y., July 17.—District Attorney Charles S. Whitman, of New York, was characterized by former President Roosevelt as either "a hopelessly timid weakling" or else as being in league with William Barnes, jr, republican state chairman, whom the former president styled "Boss Barnes"

The controversy grew out of what Colonel Roosevelt said was an attempt by men representing themselves as acting in Mr. Whitman's interests to obtain for the district attorney's candidacy for the governorship the support of the former president. The negotiations, Colonel Roosevelt declared, fell through largely because Mr Whitman failed to declare his opposition to Mr Barnes, as it had been represented, Colonel Roosevelt said, he would do.

SEA SLED LIFTS SKY SHIP INTO AIR WITH ALL APPARENT EASE

Big Flying Boat to Be Ready for Shipment August 1—Flight May Begin About August 10.

By Lieut. John Cyril Porte, R. N.
(Copyright by Press Publishing Company.)

Hammondsport, N Y, July 17—We are satisfied that the America is on the right road to perfection. The sea sled type of bottom tried twice gave very satisfactory results A definite program of reconstruction was agreed upon between Mr. Rodman Wanamaker's representative, Mr. Will Gash; Mr. Curtiss, the builder of the America, and myself.

August 1 was set as the day for shipping the airboat from New York to Newfoundland. Arriving there August 5, we expect to start the trans-Atlantic flight as nearly as possible to August 10.

It looks now as though it might be physically possible to complete the America in time for shipment on July 25, but it seems better to allow an extra week for Mr Curtiss to make the construction perfect. August 1 is, however, the latest date on which we should start in order to get away before the unsettled weather A delay beyond that might put the flight over into October

Porte to New York.

I am leaving for New York tonight with Mr. Gash to finish up some details of sailing preparations and await completion of the sea sled bottom, which is only partly built. As it was tried yesterday, the new bottom of the America was only fastened onto support and was not built watertight. When completed, it should give even better results than yesterday, when water rushed over the top of the supporting surface. Even in this condition, the America planed the surface of Lake Keuka with a load of 1,300 pounds, which was about all we dared attempt carrying with the roughly constructed experimental bottom. As it was, part of the temporary false bottom caved in, and still the air boat planed perfectly. On the first trial the unfinished boat of the sea sled kicked up spray which almost completely enveloped the America, hull and planes. After demonstrating that she could be lifted easily to the surface, we brought her back and extended the prow of the sled upward. This corrected the tendency to splash water. An encouraging feature of the trials was the ease with which the air boat came to the surface She was planing perfectly at a speed of 20 miles an hour. The best we have been able to do heretofore has been 30 miles.

Before rebuilding the hull of the America to include the new and wider bottom of the seasled, we decided to carry out the experiment to its ultimate conclusion, although well satisfied that it is the correct principle Mr. Curtiss will proceed at once to enclose the sides and top of the extended bottom, making a water tight compartment of the temporary false bottom. That will take probably until Sunday Then the boat will be tried again, and proving satisfactory, will be rebuilt so as to incorporate the seasled bottom in the permanent structure This will be necessary to distribute the load and make the big flat bottomed craft entirely seaworthy

Principle Established.

The width of the new bottom is seven feet six inches, against four feet of the America as she was first tried. The length of this new planning surface is about 17 feet, three feet more than before The outcome of all the experiments demonstrated what was apparent after the America's first test, that she needed more planing surface to get off the water How to add that surface has been the problem.

The experimental hydro-plane fins, pontoons, etc, were tried in the hope that time could be saved, in reconstructing the hulls It probably is well that they have been tried Irksome as the consequent delays have been, they have contributed substantial results to experimental hydro-aeronautics and after all, it is in that spirit we should regard the constructive side of the trans-Atlantic flight. If we cross the ocean—and my confidence in that achievement has never failed me during these delays—the great gain will be in what we shall have learned about aero navigation and hydroaerial architecture If we have established the adaptibility of the sea sled type of boat for lifting great weights out of the water into the air, Mr Wanamaker's generosity in financing these experiments will be well rewarded

TENNIS STARS COLLAPSE UNDER STRAIN OF PLAY

Seabright, N. J, July 17—R Lindley Murray and George Peabody Gardner collapsed in the third set of their matches today on the courts of the Seabright Lawn Tennis and Cricket club. Murray was making a desperate battle against R Norris Williams, second. The two had split sets and were rallying for all they were worth. Williams had overhauled Murray in the third set and had brought the games to five-all. Then Murray wavered and practically fainted. He had to be carried to the club house and attended by a doctor. The score as chalked up for Williams was 6-4, 4-6, 5-all defaulted.

It was believed that after Murray had rested he would be none the worse for the prostration.

Gardner felt the effects of heat in his match with Gustave F. Touchard, and he retired from the court before his strength waned.

Touchard had run him off his feet and was making brilliant shots to the lines when the famous Bostonian retired The score for Touchard stood at 2-6, 6-4, 5-all defaulted.

As Mr. Fossen was seen to be badly injured, he was taken to the Mercy hospital at Webster City and remained in an unconscious condition for over 24 hours. His left wrist was broken, the right side of his lower jaw broken in two places and the right side of his upper jaw smashed in. Two operations were made on his jaws to bind and replace them, a silver plate and screws being found necessary.

MEXICANS AMAZED AT CONQUERORS' TACTICS

Instead of Being Lined Up and Slaughtered They Are Saved.

To the amazement of the Mexicans (says Jack London in "Mexico's Army and Our," in Collier's), there was no general slaughter against blank walls. Instead of turning the prisoners loose, their numbers were added to. Every riotous and disorderly citizen, every sneak thief and petty offender, was marched to the city prison the moment he displayed activity. The American conquerors bid for the old order that had obtained in the city, and began the bidding by putting the petty offenders to sweeping the streets.

No property was confiscated. Anything commandeered for the use of the army was paid for, and well paid for. Men who owned horses, mules, carts, and automobiles competed with one another to have their property commandeered. The graft which all business men suffered at the hands of their own officials immediately ceased. Never in their lives had their property been so safe and so profitable. Incidentally, the diseases that stalk at the heels of war did not stalk. On the contrary Vera Cruz was cleaned and disinfected as it had never been in all its history

In short, American occupation gave Vera Cruz a bull market in health, order and business. Mexican paper money appreciated Prices rose. Profits soared. Verily, the Vera Cruzans will long remember this being conquered by the Americans, and yearn for the blissful day when the Americans will conquer them again. They would not mind thus being conquered to the end of time

An exciting sight was the cleaning up of the naval school, which had been so disorganized the first day by the five minutes of shell fire from the Chester. Immediateley the city had been turned over to the army by the navy, the first battalion of the Fourth infantry and Fourth field artillery descended upon the naval school. In a trice every window was vomiting forth the debris that clogged the interior. And then was fought the second battle of the naval school. Thousands of poor Mexicans—men, women and children—surrounding the building and battled over the old shoes, shattered furniture, and discarded clothes It was the women who fought fiercest and most vociferously, and, to the accompaniment of much hair pulling, many a pair of linen trousers and its legs irrevocably separated They struggled and squabbled and ran hither and thither like ants about a honey pot For once war was kind to them, and instead of being looted, they were themselves tasting the joys of looting And alas! I saw the ruined pretties rain down amid the mortar dust from my lady's boudoir and the two red, high heeled Spanish slippers borne off in opposite directions by gleeful Indian women

As I write this, beneath my window, with a great clattering of hoofs on the asphalt, is passing a long column of mountain batteries, all carried on the backs of big government mules. And as I look down at our sun bronzed troopers in their olive drab, my mind reverts to the review the other day of our soldiers and sailors. Surely, if the peon soldiers of Mexico could all have been brought down to witness what manner of soldiers and equipment was ours, there would have been such a rush for the brush that 10 years would not have seen the last of them dug out of their hiding places

And yet this is not fair The peon soldier is not a coward Stupid he well is, just as he is illy trained and sillily officered but he is too much of a fatalist as well as a savage to be grossly afraid of death The peon bends to the mailed fist of power, but never breaks. Like the fellah of Egypt, he patiently endures through the centuries and watches his rulers come and go

Changes of government mean to the peon merely changes of the everlasting master His harsh treatment and poorly rewarded toil are ever the same, unchanging as the sun and seasons He has little to lose and less to gain He is born to an unlovely place in life It is the will of God the law of existence.

The Uplift of Optimism.

From the Christian Herald

He who thinks the world is full of good people and kindly blessings is much richer than he who thinks the contrary Each man's imagination largely peoples the world for himself Some live in a world peopled with princes of the royal blood, some in a world of paupers and privation. You have your choice

This is a big, busy world It cares precious little what you think of it, or what faults or troubles you find in it It is a choice that concerns yourself more than all others combined, whether you grouch in the gloom, the companion of hateful goblins, or stride in the sunshine, seeing smiles and catching shreds of song

Men and women in God's image were not made an whining, groveling beings They were made to stand erect, mentally as well as physically, to labor well and joyously, to take the gifts of providence, whether they be joy or sorrow, and bear them cheerfully and with courage, to add ever something to the world's store of happiness, if it be only a smile.

If you would win anything, do anything, be anything, don't whine

Use Road Fund on the Roads.

From the Chicago Herald.

The good roads law has been marked good by the state supreme court and it is now up to the state, the counties and the road builders to make good.

Build the roads and learn from the building in Illinois how not to build them. "Illinois has ranked second in its road improvement expenditure and twenty-third in actual good roads." The roads have been a disgrace to the state for the reason that the old road building game had as much graft in it as they had mudholes in them.

The ways of the machinery men, material men, bridge builders and bunk boosters with the supervisor whom they supervised were as the way of the serpent and the bird, though in this case the fascination of the serpent resulted in the bird's moral destruction only while it contributed to his financial upbuilding and added to his creature comforts It is the road that must be paved with the dollar, not the pockets of petty officials and the men who supply the materials and skimp the work

He let her go. He sat quiet a long time. As she turned in, still galloping, at the high stone gateway of the chateau, his eyes came back again to the little shining buckle. It seemed the only thing tangible in a dream universe of rapture and agony. Over and over he heard the words she had said—words which must mean—what? Had they meant it? Had he possibly been mistaken? No—the utter happiness which came with the memory of the soft hurried voice must mean the truth—she cared for him, and then over and over and over he said, half aloud, through his set teeth:

"I said that I would give my happiness for my seigneur's; I said that I would be a friend to Pietro; I will."

CHAPTER XVI.

THE MOTHER OF A PRINCE.

The walls of the palace at Ancona dropped to the sea; against them the waves danced. Out on the blue water lay a fleet of fishing boats, and the wind flapped torn sails, and the sunlight glanced on battered hulls and littered decks. The woman who sat by an open window of the palace pushed the black trailing of her gown from her, as if the somberness hurt her eyes; she laid her head against the window-frame and stared at the breeze-tossed waves and the fishing fleet.

"It may be our only hope of escape—those wretched boats," she said, half aloud, and her blue eyes were full of sadness, almost of hopelessness.

A sound caught her ear, and she lifted her head quickly. The door into the next room was partly open and some one moved there, that was all. She turned, the lines of her figure falling again into a melancholy pose.

"The doctor takes a long time," she spoke, and gazed out once more to the water.

There had been a spirited young girl years before who had romped in the gardens of Malmaison, who had led the laughter which echoed through those avenues of lime and plantain, whose sweetness and vivacity had drawn the figure of Napoleon himself into the vortex of gladness which was her atmosphere. Always brightness seemed to follow her through the enchantment of the place, always she seemed to move in gaiety. Today, on a March morning of 1830, this was she—Hortense.

The daughter of France she had been, the queen of Holland, and now for years an exile. Here, ill, a fugitive, in her nephew's palace at Ancona, with the Austrians at the gate of the city, she waited in anxiety almost more intense than she could bear the word of the doctor as to her son. Five days before, at Forli, her older boy had died, and her sore heart stirred with a sickening throb as she thought of this other—Louis—now her only child, lying in the room beyond in a high fever, ill with the disease with which his brother had fallen. A woman's soul might well be overcrowded with such sorrow and such fear, but there was more Her two boys had thrown in their lot shortly before with the Italian revolutionists, and had fought, and had distinguished themselves And now that the revolution of the Romagna was a failure, that the Austrian army was advancing victoriously, now that death had taken the older to safety, the younger—Louis—the invalid lad in the room beyond, was in imminent danger. He was excepted from the general amnesty; the natural ways of escape were closed, for the authorities of Tuscany and of Switzerland had let her know that the prince would not be permitted in those territories. From Rome two of her son's uncles, Cardinal Fesch and King Jerome, had sent word that if were taken by the Austrians he was lost. And at the moment when Hortense had decided to carry her boy off to Turkey by way of Corfu, an Austrian fleet appeared in the Adriatic.

But the spirit and the wit of the girl of Malmaison were strong in the woman who must save her son. Wherever she went she made new friends, so winning was her personality, wherever she went she found old friends who had not forgotten her. There had been a young English earl in the Malmaison days who had lost his steady heart to the piquant fascination of the Princess Hortense as she laughed at him from the side of Josephine. He had gone away saddened, but had never quite forgotten his French sweetheart. At Florence, a month before, he had appeared, and to his influence she owed a British passport made out for an English lady traveling with two sons. No one would suspect that she would dare take the route described in it—through Paris to England—but Hortense dared much always, and everything for her children. She had set out from Florence to find them, to draw them from the doomed army of insurgents; to save them from the Austrians. When she found them, Napoleon, the elder, was dead and Lewis was coming down with his brother's malady. But the boy kept up for his mother's sake, and the two, fresh from their loss, had pressed hurriedly to Ancona, for there was not a moment to spare. So ill herself that she could not stand alone, she made all the arrangements for their escape; English liveries, a bed in the caleche, all were arranged; even the tragedy of filling the place of the lost boy was accomplished—as it must be, for her passport read for an English woman with two sons. The young Marquis Zappi, bearer of dispatches from the revolutionists to Paris, gladly agreed to travel with them. Suddenly Louis collapsed. He had been dangerously ill for days, but had borne up pluckily, hiding every sign so that he might help his mother. The collapse had been the day before, and the doctor had promised that 24 hours' rest would give him strength to risk the journey so necessary to him.

In such a critical state were the affairs of the black-gowned woman who gazed from the palace windows to the sea. The doctor was with her son. The boy's condition seemed to her no better, but worse than the day before; she waited an official verdict. The door opened and she looked up as a tall man came in.

"Doctor" she stammered and stopped—she feared to ask.

"Your majesty," the old man said gravely, "I grieve to be the bearer of bad news."

"He is worse, doctor?" The words came with a gasp; she felt that she could not face more trouble.

"Yes, your majesty, the fever has increased since yesterday. With his youth and strength we may hope—if he is carefully nursed—but to move him would be madness."

Queen Hortense struck her hands together. "What can I do? What can I do?" she demanded, and the doctor stood gravely regarding her, helpless, with all his devotion to the house of Bonaparte, to suggest a way out. "If he stays he will will be taken—they will execute him. If he goes he will die on the way," she cried in an agony of indecision. "Doctor, tell me, think for me—how can I save him?"

And the doctor stood silent, suffering with the impotent desire to help her. "If—if only the Austrians might think that the prince was gone," he stammered, and hated himself for the futility of the words. But the queen stood with a hand half lifted, arrested. Her blue eyes were alive with the crossing and weaving of swift ideas and then with a catch of her breath she laughed at him like a pleased child. "Doctor, you are a very clever man," she said. "Together we are going to save the prince."

The vivacity of the schoolgirl of Madame de Campan flashed for a moment into her manner, warmed to sudden life by the joy of hope. The doctor waited, enchanted, bewildered, to hear his cleverness explained, but Hortense did always the unexpected thing. She shook her finger at him.

"I'm not going to tell you," she said. "At least not till I have to—not till tomorrow at all events. But all today, as you visit your patients you may think that you are saving the prince from his enemies—and tomorrow you may know how Goodbye, doctor," and, puzzled and pleased, the physician was gone.

"Send Fritz to me," the queen ordered, and a moment later the young man who was for years the confidential servant of Hortense, who knew more of the history of her middle years, perhaps, than any other, stood before her . "Fritz, when does a packet sail for Corfu?" she demanded.

Fritz Rickenbach considered it his business to know everything. "Tonight, your majesty," he answered unhesitatingly.

"You will see that the luggage of Prince Louis is on board, and that a carriage is ready to take him there," she ordered.

"But yes, your majesty" Fritz still stood regarding her seriously. "It is a great happiness to me, your majesty, that his highness is well enough to travel."

Fritz knew perfectly that there was a complication somewhere, and he wanted to know what it was. His curiosity was patent, but his deep interest in the affairs of his people could not be an impertinence, and the queen smiled at him.

"You shall know about it, Fritz," she said. "The Austrians are coming. The prince can not be moved. If they take him it means death. They must believe that he is gone, and it is for you and me to make them believe it, Fritz. You must get a passport signed by all of the authorities—that is easy today, you must engage his place in the packet for tonight, you must tell the servants—tell every one—that the prince goes to Corfu, and you must see that the proper luggage is on board It will be known that I stay, but they will not molest an ill woman. Do you understand the plan, Fritz?"

And so the packet sailed for Corfu, and all day before sailing the servants of Hortense moved busily between the palace and the boat, carrying luggage and making arrangements. And only one or two knew the secret that Prince Louis Bonaparte had not sailed in the packet, but lay tossing with fever in a little room beyond his mother's, carried there for greater privacy by Fritz and the doctor.

Two days later, as the queen sat quietly by her boy's bedside, she heard that the vanguard of the Austrians had entered the city, and almost at once Fritz came to tell her that the palace in which she was staying had been chosen for the residence of the general commanding. The probability of this had not entered her mind; it seemed the last straw. The Austrian officer demanded the queen's own chamber for his chief, but when the steward's wife told him the name of the lady who was in the rooms which had not been given up, he bowed deeply and said not a word. It was another of that brotherhood scattered over Europe—the friends of Hortense, it was an officer who had protected her years before at Dijon.

So for a week they lived side by side with their enemies and only a few feet lay between the prince and capture, for his room was next that of the Austrian general, with but a double door between. It was a life of momentary anxiety, for the queen feared each time the invalid spoke that they might recognize a man's voice; when he coughed she turned white. But at the end of the week Louis was at last well enough to go. He was to leave Ancona disguised as one of his mother's lackeys the young Marquis Zappi was to put on another livery, and over the frontier they were both to change and be the sons of Hortense traveling on the Englishman's passport

CHAPTER XVII

THE RUSE

The day before the escape, as the prince, weak and ill yet, lay in bed, word was brought that a messenger of the marquis wished to see the queen.

"Let me see him too, my mother," the silent, grave, young man begged. "It may be that I can help you. I wish to help."

In a moment Fritz introduced a slight alert person whose delicate face was made remarkable by a pair of eyes large and brilliant and full of visionary shadows, yet alive with fire. One saw first those uncommon eyes and then the man. If they had not been entirely concerned with his message they might have remarked that he trembled as he looked at the prince's face; that his voice shook as he answered the queen's question.

"I have the unhappiness, your majesty, to bring you bad news," he said speaking to her, but still gazing eagerly at the prince. "The Marquis Zappi, my employer, is ill. He was taken suddenly last night, and today is much worse, and there is no chance that he can travel with your majesty tomorrow."

The queen threw out her hands with a gesture of hopelessness. "What can we do?" she exclaimed. "Am I to plan and plan and have always an unconquerable obstacle? Can I not save my boy? I might have known that everything seemed too bright this morning, too good to be true. Yet it is not possible that after all they should"—she looked at her son; her courage came springing back. "They shall not take you," and her eyes flashed defiance at a world of enemies, and she went over and threw her arm about his neck. "Louis, don't let yourself be excited, dearest. They shall not take you. I can save you."

It was as if she put a spur to her brain; there was a moment's silence and the two lads watched her brows drawing together under the concentration of her brain.

"Of course," she said suddenly, and laughed—a spontaneous laughted which seemed to flood her with youthfulness. She turned her blue glance swiftly on the newcomer, the slender boy with the luminous eyes. "You are in the employ of the Marquis Zappi, Monsieur?"

"But yes, your majesty. I am the secretary of Monsieur le Marquis." She paused a second, seemed to take stock of the young man, of his looks, his bearing, his accent.

"You are French. Have you a sympathy with the family of my son, with the Bonapartes?"

It was as if a door had been opened into a furnace, so the eyes blazed. "Your majesty, I would give my life for his highness," he said quietly. The impassive face of the young prince turned toward the speaker, and the half-shut heavy glance, which had the Napoleonic gift of holding a picture, rested on him attentively. Louis Bonaparte seemed to remember something.

"What is your name, monsieur?" he asked, and it might have been noticed that his head lifted a little from the pillow as he waited for the answer.

"Francois Beaupre, Sire." The young man seemed to be out of breath. "Sire!" Louis Napoleon repeated. And then, "I have seen you before. Where was it? Not in Rome—not in Switzerland—ah!" His hand flew out, and with that Francois was on his knee by the bedside, and had kissed the outstretched thin fingers, and the prince's other hand was on his shoulder fraternally.

"The old chateau of Vicques—my playfellow, Francois. I told you then I was going to remember, didn't I?" Louis Napoleon demanded, laughing boyishly. "Mother, he saved my life from the falling wall. Do you remember the story of my run-away trip?" And Hortense, smiling, delighted to see her sad-faced boy so pleased and exhilarated, did remember, and was gracious and grateful to the young Frenchman. "It is a good omen to have you come to us today," she said with all the dazzling charm which she knew how to throw into a sentence. And then, eager with the headlong zest of a hunter for the game, she caught the thread which wove into the patterns of her scheming. "You would risk something to save him, would you not? You will take the place of the marquis and travel with us, tomorrow, and help me carry away the prince to safety?"

The dark young face was pale. "Your majesty, it is a happiness I had not dared to hope for yet."

"Yet?" the prince demanded laconically. He saved words always, this lad, but he always said his thought.

The other boy's face turned to him, and he answered very simply, "But yes, your highness. I have known always that I should have a part in your highness' fate.

Louis Napoleon, in spite of practical hard-working qualities, a sentimentalist, a dreamer, above all a man dominated by a destiny, felt a quick shrill. Unknown forces were working throughout Europe to place him one day on his uncle's throne; such was the profound belief of his life. Might not this man's words, electrical with sincerity, point to his existence as one of those forces? It was as if he had come suddenly on deep water trickling underground through a dry country. He plunged his hand into the spring.

"Tell me," he ordered.

But the queen saw only the vagaries of irresponsible boys in this spasmodic conversation; it was important to arrange matters, she brushed aside the short vague sentences, and the prince, a flicker of a smile on his grave face, was silent.

In the gray dawn of the next morning there was a slight stir through the palace, and out between the lines of drowsy Austrian sentinels passed a procession of whose true character they were far from aware, else history had changed. The guard watched the departure; the sick lady—Hortense—late queen of Holland, as they all knew more or less clearly, drove away slowly in her traveling caleche, and on the box was a young man in the livery of a groom whom no one of the half-awake soldiers knew for Prince Louis Napoleon; in the middle of the second carriage sat another youth of two or three years younger, who was, the queen's servants had been told, the Marquis Zappi. Their passports were examined and they went through the gates of the city without awakening the least suspicion. But Hortense, as she lay back in the caleche, felt her heart batter against its covering so that each breath was pain; her mouth seemed parched; when she tried to speak the words would not come, or came in gasps; it seemed an agonizing century before the city gates were passed. And all the while the sick boy, so carefully guarded from a cold breath of air for days back, sat outside in a chilly drizzle, and his mother's anxiety was of yet another sort as she felt the dampness blow in upon her own shelter. She drew a sob of relief as they gained the fields—yet their dangers were only begun All over the country which they were about to cover they were known, the dethroned queen and her two sons, and Louis Napoleon's immobile young face was of an individuality not to be forgotten

THE MARSHAL.

Not once in all their dramatic series of escapes and disguises were Hortense and her sons betrayed, but they had to fear the indiscretion of their friends more than the malignity of their enemies, and this part of Italy was full of friends high and low.

Over and over again they were recognized, but mother and son learned to trust the untiring watchfulness of the ready resources of the Marquis Zappi's understudy, the young Frenchman who had so fortunately and easily fitted into the empty place on their program The great dark eyes, smoldering with unspoken loyalty, were always watching the prince, and he saved the invalid's strength and softened the hardships of travel in countless ways, no chance seemed to escape him Louis Napoleon, living an intense life under a cold and reserved exterion, responding as to an electric wire, to every thread of incident which seemed a possible fiber in the fabric weaving, he believed for him—the fabric of his imperial power—Louis Napoleon lost none of the young man's devotion There was little conversation between them, for the sick boy, often in great pain had no strength to spare from the exciting and strenuous days, where adventure and escape succeeded adventure and escape, where each step meant danger, and each turn of the road anxiety But his heart was touched with a gratitude which his impassive face was far from showing he would remember his old playmate, Francois Beaupre

At length it was time for Prince Louis and the sham marquis to drop their liveries and travel as the sons of the English woman for whom their passport was made out The clothes, which Beaupre was to wear, had belonged to the young man dead at Forli—Louis Bonaparte's brother—and as he presented himself dressed in them, he saw the painful flush which crept upon the prince's face

"Your highness, I am sorry," he stammered "It is grief to me" And then he threw himself impulsively on his knees by the side of Louis' chair "My prince, I wear them with reverence," he said and then hesitating, he added "Perhaps I would seem less unworthy if your highness knew that, mere secretary as I am, I am yet more, I am noble It isnot simple Francois Beaupre whom you honor, but a man created chevalier by the sword of the emperor"

The dull eyes of the prince shot a glance between drooping lids "What is it you mean, monsieur," he demanded. But at the moment the queen entered the room, and the lads sprang to their feet Her eyes caught the picture of the young Frenchman in his new dress at once they opened wide and then filled with tears

"Louis, Louis!" she cried, and laid her hand on his arm "He looks like him, he looks like Napoleon"

And the brother considering, saw there was a certain likeness, in the alert figure and the dark pale face. From that on Hortense wished Francois with her as much as possible, and as he was supposed to be her son it was natural that he should be There was a fretting anxious day or two, a frontier passed in the middle of the night where trouble with a sheep's commissioner almost brought disaster upon them there was a city to be gone through in broad daylight at which was filled with travelling English any one of whom might know the queen there was a foolish enthusiastic young officer who noisily greeted the prince at another post there were hairbreadth escapes everywhere At length, one night, in the valley of Chiana, they came to a quiet little village where, so near were they to safety, it seemed prudent to take a night's rest After this new luxury the party, refreshed and encouraged, breakfasted together the next morning

A deferential knock sounded at the door of the breakfast room Francois sprang to it and the landlord stood in the opening, bowing elaborately -a soldierly old man with thick grizzled hair

"A thousand pardons for disturbing miladi and the messieurs' and miladi smiled forgiveness 'Might an old soldier of the emperor dare to say that one could not help knowing the emperor's kinsmen?" He bowed again to both boys alike, and again Hortense smiled at him. It was comforting to know that the two seemed brothers to the world in general and she was so used to recognition and loyalty now that they appeared to belong together "Might an old soldier of the emperor dare to show miladi—her majesty—and the highnesses, the sword which the emperor himself had touched, the sword which he, Jean Gredin, an old cuirassier of the guard, had carried in four battles? There was a little story of the sword, a story also of the wonderful good of the emperor, which miladi—her majesty—permitting, he would like to tell to her, as also to the highnesses."

And, her majesty permitting, and the boys pleased and interested, the old cavalryman brought the sword and drew it from its sheath and gave it to each of them to handle, and called on them to remark how it was as keen and bright as it had ever been at Ulm or Austerlitz. He cleared his throat, strongly for the tale.

"Miladi—her majesty—permitting," the old soldier began, "it was on a day two years after the great battle of Austerlitz. The country, as her majesty and the highnesses will remember, was in a most dangerous condition. Desperate bands—" Why was it the landlord stopped?

The party, caught by the fervor of his manner, stared at him, annoyed as the tale of the emperor, promising so well, halted at its beginning. The man stood as if drawn to his tiptoes, every muscle tense, his head turned toward the doorway, listening.

And suddenly they were aware of a stir, a growing noise; there were galloping horses; there was a jingle of harness, and voices coming nearer. With a step backward the landlord flashed a glance from under bushy brows down the corridor, through the open door at the end, which gave on the court of the inn.

"Mon Dieu!" He faced the three, standing startled. He spoke fast and low. "Madame, it is a squad of Austrian soldiers, they are upon us. What can we do?" He hesitated only a second. "Bleu-bleu—my horse—saddled under the tree yonder—if one of the princess—if the prince—" He glanced uncertainly from one lad to the other.

But the game was out of his hands. Quicker hands than his had caught the play Francois Beaupre, the saber of the old cavalryman gleaming in his grasp, sprang to the doorway. He swung about, his great eyes radiating earnestness.

"It is monsieur there who is the prince," he explained rapidly to the landlord. "Hide him, take care of him—I will draw them away. When they are gone, see that the prince and the queen escape. That is for you; you are responsible."

There was the rush of a flying figure down the hallway, and out Francois flashed across a broken line of a dozen dismounted riders, straight toward the landlord's horse held by a groom under the trees There was a shock of startled silence as the impetuous apparition, saber gleaming at wrist, shot across the court. Then there was a hubbub of voices, and a mass of uniformed figures fell toward him as he threw himself on the horse. A soldier caught at the bridle. The naked sword twinkled and the man was under Bleu-bleu's feet. For a second there was a vortex of men and a frantic horse, and riding the storm a buoyant figure of fury, flashing a blade, with infinite swiftness, this way and that. Then horse and lad shot out from the living canvas, streaked the background of trees a second and were gone, and the Austrian troopers scrambled into their saddles to follow.

Through sun-spotted, breeze-tossed woods tore the chase; across a road and over a low fence, and still Francois led, but the heavy horses gained. It was a hopeless hunt, for the landlord's mount was no match for the big cavalry horses, yet the rider's light weight and clever horsemanship counted, and it was fully four miles from the inn when Bleu-bleu stumbled and fell at a ditch, and Francois pitched over his head. His lead was short by now, and they were on him in a moment, in a mass; he was seized by a dozen burly Austrians.

The leader took a sharp look at him as he stood panting, staring defiantly. "What is this?" the Austrian demanded sternly, and wheeled to a trooper in a bunch. "Friedrich, thou knowest the cub of the Bonapartes. Is this lad he?"

And Friedrich lunged forward, gasping, for he had run his horse hard, and shook his head. "No, my captain. I have never seen this one."

The boy looked from one to another of the threatening group, smiling, composed in spite of his quick breathing. The captain took a step close to him and shook his fist in his face.

"You have fooled us, you young game-cock, have you? But wait. Do you know what we will do to you, you bantam of a Frenchman? Do you know how we will treat you for this, we Austrians?"

Color deepened in his cheeks, and Francois drew up his figure magnificently. His face was radiant, he gloried in the theatrical beauty of the situation; for the rest, he was, as the villagers of Vicques had said long ago, born without fear.

"You may do what you like, messieurs," he said gaily. "It is for you; my part is done The prince is safe"

CHAPTER XVIII.

AFTER FIVE YEARS.

The window of the cell was small, but is was low enough so that a man standing could see from it the vast sky and the sea-line six miles away, and, by leaning close to the bars, the hill that sloped down into wooded country, beyond that the sand of the shore The jailer stood close by the little window in the stormy sunset for a better light as he dropped the medicine

"One--two," he counted the drops carefuly up to nine, and then glanced at the prisoner on his cot in the corner, who tossed, and talked rapidly, disjoinedly "It is high time that the doctor saw him," the jailer spoke, half aloud "If the governor had been here this would not have been allowed to run on I am glad the governor is coming back."

With that the prisoner threw off the cover from his shoulders and sat up suddenly with wild bright eyes staring at the jailer.

"Pietro!" he called in astonishment. "Why, my dear old Pietro!" and flung out his hands eagerly toward the man, and would have sprung from the bed to him

But the jailer was at his side and held him down, yet gently. "Be quiet, Signor," he said respectfully. "It is only old Battista, you will see if you look. Only Battista, who has taken care of you these five years."

The brilliant dark eyes stared at him hungrily, then with a sight the light went out of them and the head fell on the pillow.

"Ah, Battista," he said, "my good Battista" A smile full of subtle charm made the worn face bright. He spoke slowly. "I thought it was my friend—my best friend," he explained gently"

"Will the signor take the doctor's medicine?" Battista asked then, not mutch noticing the words, for the sick man was clearly light-headed, yet with a certain pleasant throb of memory which always moved within him at the name of Pietro. It happened that the name stood for some one dear to the jailer also. The signor took the medicine at once, like a good child.

"Will it make me better, do you think Battista?" he asked earnestly.

"But yes, Signor; the doctor is clever."

"I want to be better; I must get well, for I have work to do as soon as I come out of prison."

"Surely, Signor. That will be soon now, I think, for it is five yers; they will let you go soon, I believe," Battista lied kindly.

The Parent Chautauqua.

In this anniversary year of the Chautauqua movement it will be recalled that Bishop Vincent and the late Lewis Miller, of Akron, Ohio, began their notable and far-reaching work solely as a religious gathering under the giant trees near the northern end of Lake Chautauqua, N. Y. Born in the days of the camp meeting, it represented an innovation. It was undenominational, or, as Mr. Miller liked to state it, "all-denominational." Later a course in systematic study of the bible was inaugurated. Then came courses in arts and crafts, domestic science, and the introduction of programs of music and different phases of entertainment, and ere long the original chautauqua became a city of streets, business blocks, schools and churches, its area comprising about 300 acres and its activities annually witnessed by 50,000 people.

REAL HOME FOR THE HOLE

Finds Secure Abiding Place After a Period of Troublous Wanderings.

Everett P. Dahlgren, the millionaire opponent of woman suffrage, said at a suffrage debate in Boston:

"I always declare that woman shouldn't enter politics till she's fulfilled all her prior duties.

"'Prior duties! Prior duties!' So a young lady mocked me one day. 'What do you men mean by these "prior duties" that you're always talking about, Mr. Dahlgren?'

"So then I told the young lady this story:

"Once upon a time, I began, a little hole was born; and it looked around to see where it should take up its abode.

"It first decided on a window, but a man came straightway and put in a new pane. It next choose a chair seat, but the housewife sent for a caner, and in a jiffy a new seat was put in the chair. The hole now selected a baby's rattle, and the baby was so pleased that it began to tear the rattle to pieces, and the poor hole, half crazed with fright, had just time to escape. It threw itself, more dead than alive, into the first thing that came to hand, which happened to be the sock of a suffragist's husband.

"There, at least, the hole seems to have found a real home Its peace has not been troubled from the beginning, six months ago."

Puzzled the Parson.

At a marriage service performed some time ago in a little country church in Georgia, when the minister said in a solemn tone: "Wilt thou have this man to be thy wedded husband?" instead of the woman answering for herself, a gruff man's voice answered: "I will." The minister looked up very much perplexed, and paused. He repeated the sentence, and again the same gruff voice answered, "I will." Again the minister looked up surprised, not knowing what to make of it, when one of the groomsmen at the end of the row said: "She's deef, parson, an' I'm answerin' for her."

An old bachelor says that there are no marriages in heaven because there must be some way to distinguish it from the other place.

Niagara Falls adjourned. They were accompanied by Secretary Bryan and for nearly an hour discussed the Mexican situation in all its phases. They expressed the view that Francisco Carbajal was ready to turn over the government to General Carranza, but wanted guarantees that there would be no wholesale executions, arrests or confiscations of property.

They told President Wilson that Carbajal would not surrender unconditionally and that unless these guarantees for the protection of the lives and property of those who supported Huerta were given, would concentrate all the military forces and resist to the utmost any effort to invade Mexico City.

The president and Mr. Bryan listened attentatively to the views of the South American diplomats, especially as they indicated that their governments probably would be unable to recognize any administration in Mexico, which refused to give quarter to its enemy or establish itself by peaceful means in accordance with civilized practice among nations

Bryan Meets Diplomats.

After their talk with the president, Secretary Bryan and the three diplomats went to the state department for a conference.

That the influence of the United States was being relied on by the Provisional President Carbajal to obtain satisfactory terms from the constitutionalists was explained also by Jose Castellot, personal representative of Carbajal. The mediators conferred not only with Mr Castellot, but also with Emilio Rabasa, head of the delegation which represented Huerta at the Niagara conferences.

Mr. Castellot was confident the American government never would permit an arbitrary entry into Mexico City. He said the Carbajal government wanted no share in the future administration, no validation of the acts of Huerta, but simply guarantees for lives and property.

Word that the commission which will represent Carbajal in negotiations with Carranza had left Mexico City, came to Castellot today. The commission departed without obtaining credentials, but since Carranza indicated to the American government that he would receive the commission full instructions and authorization will be sent them.

General Carranza has suggested that the conference take place at Saltillo.

ARRANGING AN ARMISTICE AMONG WARRING FACTIONS

in the Southern Illinois Methodist conference, who disappeared from Lebanon, Ill., two years ago has been located in St. Louis. Several days ago a man who has been selling newspapers on a corner in the West end admitted to Rev. Mr. Birkhead, of a local Methodist church that he was the missing revival leader.

After Rev. Mr. Birkhead positively had identified Carlin, he notified Dr. Ewers, of Madison and Dr. Rodgers, of Gentralia, who came to St. Louis. Carlin, after a conference gave Dr. Ewers a written withdrawal from the ministery.

Dr. Carlin, who is more than 50 years old, has been a preacher in southern Illinois for 20 years, and his father T. P. Carlin, still is an active member of the Southern Illinois Methodist conference.

Carlin was surprised to find that the newspapers had learned of his identity and ordered the reporters from his home with the statement:

"I am through with religion, and religion and law will have to take their own course."

INTERVENTION IN HAITI IS LIKELY

Washington, July 24.—Possibility of American intervention in Haiti and Santo Domingo to restore peace continued today to be an absorbing topic of discussion in administration circles. Late official dispatches regarding the situation in the revolution-torn republics gave but little hope that the contending elements in the two countries would be able to restore order.

Under European pressure, the American government's patience practically has been exhausted and was forced to demand restoration of peace or threaten armed intervention. The gravity of the situation was increased by refusal of the warring factions in Haiti to cease fighting, despite the American government's warnings and failure to settle the Dominican revolution by diplomacy

The question of a possible movement of marines into Haiti was up for discussion at today's conference between Secretaries Bryan and Daniels. Advices from Cape Haitien of further fighting with increased danger to foreigners were believed to forecast prompt action by marines now being concentrated at Guantanamo.

PILOT LIGHTING PLANTS

HOME MADE ACETYLENE for LIGHTING and COOKING

The Flame of Acetylene Light is Small and the Burner Peculiar

You have probably noticed that a Pilot Country Home Acetylene burner is shaped like the letter "Y."

And that the little gas openings in the arms of the burner are only pin hole size. So small they let out only half of a cubic foot of Acetylene in an hour.

You might leave one of these Acetylene burners open by accident all day—and even then there wouldn't be gas enough in the air of the room to enable you to set fire to it if you tried.

And the chance of your leaving a burner open that long is not worth considering. The pungent odor of the escaping gas would be certain to attract attention in a few seconds.

Insurance reports say that in a list of 10,000 recent fires and accidents caused by illuminants, 9990 were charged to the misuse and abuse of electricity, kerosene, gasoline and city gas, and only ten to the misuse and abuse of Acetylene.

The new Pilot Outdoor Acetylene Generator is a frost proof type. Built to set in an out of the way corner of the back yard far from the buildings it supplies with gas.

You should own an Outdoor Pilot and use home made Acetylene yourself to light your house and barns and to cook your meals.

Recent investigations of the Illinois state highway department indicate that few highway steel bridges in that state are painted after their final completion and acceptance. Very serious corrosion resuts and is illustrated in a number of cases, says the Engineering Record. A serious factor in the corrosion of iron and steel is the use of salt to clear the roadway of snow and ice. This was was considered at least partly responsible for the bad condition of truss members in a bridge which had been about fifteen years in sehvice.

A beautiful new flower has been evolved by a resident of California who has succeeded in building a rose to a blackberry bush Following the budding, the bush grew rapidly and bore profusely, and the new flower is white with irregular leaves shooting out from the center very much like the bloom of a carnation. The foliage and stems retain the characteristics of the blackberry. In spite of the many crosses made by botanists, they have resulted in the creation of relatively few new fruits for consumption

Some very singular and unexplained effects of hydrochloric acid on silica are brought out in M. Armand Gantier's paper recently read before the Academie der Sciences. In his recent experiments on this subject Gantier finds that the effect of the acid varies widely according to the form of the silica. In the shape of rock crystal the acid attacks it but slightly. Some action can be detected when the crystal is cut parallel to the axis, but it is practically nothing on the surface when cut across the axis. The reason for this difference is unknown.

The most expensive single fruit in Japanese fruit stores is the natsumikan, a species of grapefruit, which sells throughout the winter for 7½ cents each. This is not eaten in great quantities by the class of people who make the great fruit buying population in the United States. The average income of the Japanese family of four is about $150 a year. This does not leave much margin for luxuries.

The woman cook at a small Philadelphia hotel accused a man of attacking her but did not know his name. When she appeared before a magistrate to swear out a warrant, she suggested that the name of the offender be put down as "John Dishwasher." They are now telling how John Dishwasher has shared an honor held exclusively hitherto by John Doe.

"The city has been owing me 50 cents for almost half a century," said M H. Scott. as he presented a yellow slip of paper, which was a check for 50 cents signed by H. Bartling, mayor of Topeka 40 years ago. It was cashed by City Treasurer Albert Hale.

The district committeemen held a meeting last evening and selected Dr J. W Reynolds, of Creston, as state chairman, Earl Bronson, of Spencer, is secretary, E. Council Bluffs, Ia, July 25—The Iowa Democratic Editorial association, which is known as the "I-D-E-A," at its meeting here elected C. F Duncombe, of the Fort Dodge Chronicle, president, and Theodore Wall, of the Osceola Democrat, secretary. A vice president for each congressional district was chosen, all of the old officials being reelected The organization made plans for the campaign of publicity in behalf of the state ticket, with especial emphasis on the candidacy of Connolly for senator

Secretary Wall was instructed to draw up resolutions indorsing the national administration, the state ticket State Chairman N F Reed and National Committeeman Wade, and commending the work of both Reed and Wade in the state and national campaign.

TO URGE NARROWER ROADS AND LAKE CONSERVATION

Webster City, Ia, July 25—Senator D. C. Chase, of this city, who has just been renominated on the republican ticket and who has no opposition either from the democrats or the progressives, has in mind the preparation of two bills to present to the state legislature the coming winter that will attract unusual attention all over Iowa. One is the permanent preservation of Iowa lakes and the other for the cutting down of highways from four rods to 50 feet.

The first bill for the permanent preservation of Iowa lakes is in line with one plank of the state republican platform adopted last week in Des Moines. It is designed to prevent leasing of Wall lake—the lease upon which was later rescinded

The matter of reducing the width of highways in Iowa to 50 feet has been much discussed in recent years Thus far, however, nothing has come of it. But with the recent laws enforcing permanent road improvement, sentiment is growing in favor of narrower roads.

BANKER AND WIFE TAKE OUTING IN 45-MILE WALK

Shenandoah, Ia., July 25.—A vacation cross country trip of 45 miles to Council Bluffs was made by W. A. Ruehlman, a banker, and Mrs. Ruehlman, the walk being made in three days. During the hot part of the days they rested at hotels at their stops along the road.

In walking outfits they departed from here about 6 o'clock in the evening, making seven miles the first lap of the journey, reaching Ensley Parrish's about 9 o'clock. The trip was completed when they got to the car line at the deaf and dumb institution at Council Bluffs, as it was the hot part of the day they rode the remaining distance to the city. Neither Mr. nor Mrs. Reuhlman felt any ill effects after their walk

Old Keokuk and Des Moines Valley Line Probably Due for New Management.

Des Moines, Ia., July 25.—Persistent rumors are current in railroad circles that the Minneapolis & St. Louis is contemplating the purchase of the old Keokuk & Des Moines Valley railroad, which is now being operated under a lease by the Rock Island as its Des Moines Valley division.

It is said that the Minneapolis & St. Louis is seriously considering the proposition and it is believed that the purchase will be made within the next few weeks. Local representatives of the Minneapolis & St. Louis refused to discuss the matter beyond admitting that there had been some mention of the attempt to acquire the road and expressing the opinion that the road would be of great service to the Minneapolis & St. Louis.

It became known yesterday that C. H. Huntington, vice president and general manager of the Minneapolis & St. Louis made a special trip over the Des Moines Valley division of the Rock Island as far as Oskaloosa last week when he was in Des Moines. It was thought that he was inspecting the property at that time with a view to possible purchase.

MEN NOW PLANNING FOR CHAMPIONSHIP RACE

Oskaloosa, Ia., July 25.—Fire departments from nearly 30 cities are entered here today, the third day of the annual state tournament. An estimated daily attendance of 15,000 is expected for the tournament.

Plans for a world's championship race to be held soon between the fire departments of Clinton, Council Bluffs and Missouri have been discussed here several days by representatives of the three departments. It is expected that an announcement concerning the race will be forthcoming soon.

The close rivalry between the Sac City, Wall Lake, Harlan and Perry teams has been productive of some spirited contests this week and may be the cause of some new records before the week ends. Among the teams represented are Wheatland, Grand Mound, Prestville, Lost Nation, Calamus, Bellevue, Clinton, West Liberty, Sac City, Shelby, Vinton, Brooklyn, Woodland, Clinton, Atlantic, Audubon, Ryan, Wall Lake, Harlan and Perry.

SIOUX CITY FARMERS NOW FEEL NEED OF SHOWERS

Correctionville, Ia., July 25.—Farmers here have rejoiced because the dry weather has made the harvest and threshing period almost perfect, are looking longingly for a cloud with rain in it. Corn in this section is still sturdy, but the western half of Woodbury county, which missed the last heavy shower, is not in as good shape. Pastures are so dry that a spark from a Northwestern train set fire to the grass and a field was burned over near Moville. Even weeds along the highway are giving up the struggle under the weight of the hot dust. Another week of drought means crop damage in northwestern Iowa.

Nodaway, Ia July 25—The work of threshing is on in full blast in this vicinity and the yield of the small grain is gratifying to the farmers The corn in this part of the state is badly in need of rain and unless rain comes soon it is feared by some that the crop will be injured to quite an extent Several farmers are reporting that the corn is firing at the roots now and if this continues for many days the yield will be diminished to quite a considerable extent

ANOTHER DEATH IN FAMOUS IOWA GRAYBEARD REGIMENT

Iowa City Ia, July 25—J M Anson, famous soldier long time resident of Johnson county and one of its oldest men, is dead, aged 96 years, 6 months and 17 days

Mr Anson was a member of the famous Iowa Greybeard regiment," which fought through the civil war Its members were nearly all old or middle aged men as the name of the regiment indicates and the regiment was as famous for its bravery and fighting ability as it was for its quota of aged men. Mr Anson fought through the war with this regiment

He was born in Alsace, Germany, on November 2 1817, and came to Iowa in 1841 He had lived in Johnson county ever since, making a residence of 70 years here

CHILD ALMOST DROWNED IN LARGE JAR ON PORCH

Charles City, Ia July 25—The 2-year-old baby of Mr and Mrs Pothost, living near Carrville on a farm, had a narrow escape from drowning It was playing on the porch and fell into a large jar of water Later the mother missed the baby and in looking for it found it nearly lifeless in the jar A doctor from a nearby town made a hasty run in his automobile and when he arrived found the child's pulse had stopped He worked over the child until midnight and in the morning it was reported out of danger

FARMHAND KILLED ON OLIVER RANCH, NEAR ONAWA

Onawa Ia, July 25—Farmhands working with Albert Gregg on the Oliver ranch, six miles south of Onawa, found Gregg's body in the field yesterday. His chest was crushed Gregg had been driving loads of oats bundles to a separator and it is believed he fell from the load and was run over.

Gregg was 38 years old. He was not married. He had worked near Onawa about four years and was employed on the J. W. Murphy farm, four miles north of the city. The body is being held at an undertaking establishment in Onawa.

PYTHIANS DRILL.

AMES CAMP CONVICT VIOLATES PRIVILEGE AND NOW AT LIBERTY

Others Resent Action, Knowing Such Cases Imperil Their New Conditions.

Ames, Ia., July 24.—One of the first things to mar the success of the convict road camp at Iowa State college was the escape last evening of one of the men. As yet nothing has been learned of the missing man. An act of this nature is by no means welcomed by the other members of the working convicts, as they are showing to the state that they can be trusted from behind the walls and are willing to begin life anew.

The men spent Sunday on the college campus, enjoying the sights of the college grounds and the recreation offered on the camping grounds. They are located in the transportation building temporarily, until the summer session students remove their tents from the grounds of the prospective camping place.

The men have been divided into a number of bodies, and will be worked on different parts of the campus. One of the first things to be accomplished is the building of a bridge over the creek on the newly proposed road leading into the college from the north.

A guard has been provided for the men, but to a great extent they are allowed their freedom in order that they may enjoy ordinary pleasures without the prison system restraint.

LIVESTOCK CARRIES BULK OF PERSONAL PROPERTY INCREASE

Des Moines, Ia., July 24.—As there is no new assessment of real estate in Iowa this year the valuation made last year will still stand, in spite of the exceptions of many farmers that the increase of last year was only a temporary condition. In addition to holding the real estate valuations up where they will do the most good, officially speaking, the members of the executive council are seeking to stiffen up a little on personal property assessments in order to meet the demands of the various state bureaus for "lubricant."

The 3,500 assessors in Iowa have shown a very considerable tilt in personal property assessments, which at the same old taxation levies will produce more funds for operating expenses. Additions to the tax lists include $24,000,000 worth of new buildings. The number of hogs in the state is given at 3,780,368, a reduction of 552,575 from the year before. The number of cattle listed this year is an increase of 148,000 head. Moneys and credits is boosted to $250,218,178, an increase of $43,000,000 over the previous year. The net increase in personal property is about $23,000,000, of which $13,000,000 applies to valuations on livestock

BODY PUT ON TRACK TO COVER AUTO ACCIDENT

Ames, Ia, July 24.—The funeral services for Mrs Daisy Antrim, the Iowa woman who was instantly killed in Colorado Springs last Tuesday evening was held at the home of the victim's sister, Mrs Mary A Meyers, Monday. Mrs. Antrim was hit by an auto driven by a negro on the streets of Colorado Springs, and the body of the woman was taken to a nearby railroad track, where the body was left, the auto driver trying to lay the blame with the railroad. Bystanders claim that the auto was going at a terrific speed when the accident occurred. An inquest will be held later.

In an accident which occurred near the James Carr farm northwest of town, Miss Bertha Boston, of Ames, received serious injuries to her back, and the auto was wrecked. The driver lost control of the machine and it plunged over the banks, but did not upset.

FARMERS MINT MONEY FROM BIG CROP OF ONIONS

Davenport, Ia, July 24—Scott county farmers will be minting money this year when they harvest their onion crops as the highest price is being paid that the crop has ever brought With some 360 acres planted and the crop running from 500 to 700 bushels to the acre, the price is around $1 87 per bushel mark.

Onions have been sold as low as 30 cents per bushel in former years. The first of the main crop is being harvested now, the topping done by hand. A machine topper will be used on the late fields.

MUSCATINE MAN LOSES HIS MAIL ORDER WIFE

Muscatine, Ia, July 24.—Henry Truitt, of South Muscatine, today mourns the loss of his $50 wife. Last spring he offered that sum to any of his friends who would secure for him a good wife Frank Hubbard, a friend, opened correspondence with Miss Mattie Johnson, of Missouri. Letters brought the young woman here on approval, and marriage followed her arrival, Truitt's name having been forged to letters. Domestic disturbances of late led to the interference on the part of the real correspondent, and yesterday when the police were called to quell a fight between the two men at the Truitt home it was learned that the wife had departed.

CLINTON POSTMASTER IS CARRYING CITY ROUTE

Clinton, Ia, July 24.—Postmaster B. M. Jacobsen now is carrying a regular route, one of the longest ones in the city. And he is going to continue to carry it until the regular carrier recovers from his illness or some of the relief carriers return from their vacation.

The Clinton Nasby stepped from the management of his big department store into the postmaster office June 1. He has already created new precedents. He familiarized himself as quickly as possible with the office routine and learned the clerk's duties. Then he accompanied the rural carriers on their rounds and made trips with each of the city carriers.

KILLS SONINLAW WHO STOLE HIS DAUGHTER

Shoots Youth While Latter Is Asking Blessing of His Fatherinlaw.

Haverstraw, N. Y., July 25.—In his cell in the country jail at New City, where he was taken after he had shot and killed Eugene B. Newman, his 19-year-old soninlaw, William V Cleary, prominent in county politics and for 14 years town clerk, refused today to discuss the murder or tell why he shot the young man.

Young Newman, son of one of the owners of the Rockland County Messenger, secretly married Cleary's 18-year-old daughter, Anna Cleary last Saturday in Weehawken, N J.

Yesterday the couple confided in their respective mothers and Newman was advised to tell Cleary and ask his forgiveness. It was while on this mission that Newman was shot. He entered the town clerk's office where Cleary was talking with three friends, Bernard Fox, a brewery agent, Patrolman Sheridan and Josiah Felter, county supervisor. Newman extended his hand and asked for Cleary's blessing. Cleary with hardly a word and before his friends could interfere, fired four bullets into the young man's body. Newman died instantly and Cleary surrendered himself to the authorities.

Newman and Anna Cleary had been sweethearts from their first meeting six years ago. It was an established thing in the village that Newman was to marry Anna. His parents did not object and Cleary, himself, never showed any bitter opposition to the match, although, it is said, he did not look upon it with favor.

GERMAN-AUSTRIAN ALLIANCE FACING WAR WITH RUSSIA

Berlin, July 25.—The grave possibilities connected with the strong Austrian note to Servia, which virtually took the form of an ultimatum demanding the suppression of the Pan-Servia movement and the punishment of those concerned in the assassination of the late Archduke Francis Ferdinand, are recognized in official circles here. It is realized that further serious disturbances in Austro-Servian relations are inevitable unless Servia complies with the Austrian demands.

It is believed in authoritative quarters that Servians will yield unless assured of support from the outside and for this reason official eyes here today are turned less toward Belgrade than to St. Petersburg, where the council of ministers is expected to settle the question of peace or war.

It was stated that Germany had not been consulted regarding the Austrian note to Servia before its delivery, but that she approved the step taken and was prepared for all the consequences that might insue from it.

It was pointed out that should Russia take part against Austria, Germany was fully prepared to draw the sword on behalf of her ally in accordance with the terms of the triple alliance between Germany, Austria and Italy. Comment in the German press today strongly supports Austria.

The stock market broke under the fear of general international complications. Securities in large amounts had been unloaded at the declines and the breaks in Austrian and Russian specialties assumed almost a panicky form.

NOTE WARNS SERVIA THAT SLAYERS MUST BE PUNISHED

Belgrade, Servia, July 25—The Servian government received last night a note from the Austro-Hungarian government bearing on the relations between the two countries and dealing directly with the assassination at Saarjevo on June 28 of Archduke Francis Ferdinand, heir to the Austrian throne.

The note reviews relations with Servia since 1909 and complains that although the Servian government promised loyalty to the Austro-Hungarian government, it has failed to suppress subversive movements and agitations by the newspapers. This, says the note, culminated in the Sarajevo assassinations, which are proved by depositions and confessions of the perpetrators to have been hatched at Belgrade, the arms and explosives having been supplied by connivance of Servian officers and functionaries.

"The Austro-Hungarian government" continues the note, "is unable longer to pursue an attitude of forbearance and sees the duty imposed upon it to put an end to the intrigues which form a perpetual menace to the monarchy's tranquility. Therefore it demands from the Servian government formal assurance that it condemns the dangerous propaganda whose aim is to detach from the monarchy a portion of its territory."

AUSTRIAN RESERVISTS ARE TOLD TO BE IN READINESS

Berlin, July 25.—Austrian reservists residing here were instructed today to hold themselves in readiness to return to Austria and join their regiments at the shortest notice.

MAN WHO SHOT COLONEL IS IN BAD MENTAL STATE

Milwaukee, Wis., July 25.—John Schrank, who attempted to assassinate Colonel Roosevelt in Milwaukee in October 1912, probably never will be tried on the charge of assault with intent to kill according to Judge A. C. Backus, of the municipal court, who today received word from physicians in the criminally insane department of the state prison at Waupun that Schrank is daily growing worse from a mental standpoint.

The assault charge stands against the prisoner and he cannot be tried until he has been pronounced sane. Should the case ever come up the point will be raised as to his sanity when the assault was committed.

Thirty men have been carried safely in a 30-foot lifeboat of a new type which, if overturned in water, will right itself.

[illegible] NOBLEWOMEN HELD FOR MILITANCY

Lady Barclay and Lady Fitzgerald Arrested at the King's Palace.

London, July 25—Two suffragists belonging to the British nobility, Lady Barclay and the Hon. Miss Edith Fitzgerald, were arrested today at Buckingham palace, where they made persistent and unsuccessful attempts to present to King George, a letter written to his majesty by Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant suffraget leader

The letter demanded a personal interview with the king and claimed that the suffragists should be given the same right to an interview as certain militant men, namely Sir Edward Carson, Capt. James Craig, John Dillon and John E. Redmond, who had, it was pointed out, been invited to Buckingham palace by the king.

The two women announced their determination to remain at the palace until they were given an audience with the king. The police took the two women to the nearest police station

EFFORTS OF KING TO SETTLE IRISH PROBLEM USELESS

London, July 25.—The fact that the conference at Buckingham palace between the leaders of the various political parties had been rendered abortive by its failure to agree on the area of Ulster to be excluded from the control of the Dublin parliament was confirmed by Premier Asquith in the house of commons today.

The premier's statement on the subject of today's meeting of the conference was very brief. He said "The possibility of finding an area to be excluded from the operation of the Irish home rule bill was considered, but the conferences, unable to agree in principle or in detail on such an area, brought its meeting to a close"

Mr. Asquith then announced that the second reading of the bill to amend the Irish home rule bill would be taken up on July 28.

The premier was invited to inform the house as to exact differences of opinion which had prevented the attainment of a settlement by the conference and in reply said:

"I can make no statement on the subject at the present moment"

Conference Is Brief.

The Buckingham palace conference today was the shortest of its four sessions. The chairman, the Right Hon. James Lowther, Premier Asquith and Chancellor of the Exchequer David Lloyd-George, representing the liberals; Andrey Bonar Law and the Marquis of Lansdowne of the regular conservation opposition. Sir Edward Carson and Capt. James Craig, Ulster unionists, John Dillon, Irish nationalist arrived at the palace at 11 o'clock, but the business session did not begin until 11:30 as John E. Redmond, through a misunderstanding, was half an hour late.

No statement was given out as to the result of the meeting, but it was expected that Premier Asquith would make an announcement in the house of commons during the day

The feeling was general in the lobbies of the house of commons that the Ulster conference had failed of its immediate purpose and that no definite agreement had been reached Members awaited anxiously the announcement as to the actual situation to be made by Premier Asquith.

Think Good Resulted.

Except among the extreme radicals and labor members, who are opposed to a conference of any kind and think the matter should have been fought out on the floor of the house of commons it is felt in parliamentary circles that the meetings of the political leaders in Buckingham palace have done much good.

It was pointed out that they had shown how far the opposing Irish parties were prepared to go and that this would assist the government in reframing its bill to amend the Irish home rule bill.

Sir Edward Carson and his followers during the conference, had, it was understood, abandoned their demand for "clean cut" elimination of the province of Ulster from the control of the Dublin parliament and were prepared to accept the exclusion of six counties. The nationalists on the other hand, agreed to leave the four northeastern counties of Ulster out of the control of Dublin and to allow the counties of Tyrone and Fermanagh to take a vote on the question whether they should be included or not. Neither party however would consent to go a step further.

STRIKE MEDIATION HANGS BY THREAD

Chicago, July 25.—Continuance of negotiations by the federal board of mediation and conciliation in the attempt to compose the wage differences between the engineers and firemen of 98 western railroads and the managers' committee hung in the balance today.

Since Monday there have been daily meetings of the board with the labor officials and railroad managers, each meeting separately.

As matters now stand the federal board is awaiting word from the engineers and firemen and on their message depends the continuance of the meetings of the board.

The men seek changes in service rules and increases in pay, principally in the overtime schedule and declare their requests are just and reasonable.

The railroad managers insist that to comply with the requests would be to increase the present pay rolls by $38,000,000.

Arbitration of the differences has been repeatedly refused by the heads of the unions on the contention that in previous cases the railroads have not held themselves bound by the arbitration awards.

Nearly 55,000 men are directly concerned in the outcome of the dispute and a much greater number would be affected should the differences lead to a strike of the employes.

MANY CASUALTIES IN RUSSIAN STRIKE

Numerous Battles, Between the Strikers and Troops, in St. Petersburg, Today.

St. Petersburg, July 25.—Stern measures were taken by the authorities today to suppress the strike riots, which have been in progress for several days in the streets of the capital during which a large number of casualties have occurred in the conflicts between the police and Cossacks and the striking workmen

Considerable leniency was shown during the presence here of Raymond Poincare president of the French republic but immediately after his departure four regiments of cavalry of the guard and two regiments of Cuirassers under the command of General Kasnakoff arrived from Krasnoye-Selo to assist in suppressing the disorders. They brought with them a number of quick firing machine guns.

A squadron of the newly arrived cavalry at once came into contact with the strikers charging and dispersing a crowd of them

The authorities estimate the number of strikers at 135,000 but it is believed the total is greater

The street car service, which has been interrupted for 48 hours was restored today This fact incensed the strikers who hurled volleys of stones at the cars and their drivers as they proceeded through the street Several demonstrations were attempted, but the manifestants were quickly dispersed by Cossacks

In the meanwhile the police fired a few shots at the windows of private houses from which stones had been thrown down at them

One significant feature of the strike is that the movement has been joined by many government employes.

MAZE OF TUNNELS CONNECT RESORTS IN VICE DISTRICT

Chicago July 25—A mushroomed bullet taken last night from the hip of Joseph C Merrill, the morals squad detective shot during the vice district battle of a week ago in which Stanley Birns, a detective was killed, was in the hand of State's Attorney Hoyne today The bullet conclusively proves it was said by Hoyne, that levee gunmen began the shooting with the intention of killing the morals squad men Police revolver bullets are of an entirely different size and character.

Merrill, who probably will be crippled for life, told Hoyne that he was struck by the third shot fired. Merrill reiterated his declaration that he was shot by a man in a light gray suit who sheltered himself behind a woman while he shot at the morals squad men The state's attorney expected to have in custody today eight levee saloon and resort keepers for whom he caused warrants charging murder to be sworn out yesterday.

Find Secret Passage.

A maze of tunnels, secret passages and hiding places was uncovered by the police in a raid on a notorious levee resort Dressers with no drawers in them, the vacant space furnishing a hiding place, a wall safe that in reality was the entrance to a tunnel under the street and hiding places in caves built under closets were among the devices A notorious all-night dance hall called the "Gibraltar of the Red Light District," which was theatened with closing by the new police captain of the district remained open until after daylight today as usual

The names of "Hinky Dink" McKenna, "Bathhouse John," Coughlan, world famous councilmen representing Chicago's vice district have been brought into the levee investigation. State's Attorney Hoyne is seeking to show that "The Bath' and "Dink" form the connecting link between the underwold and the political ring which controls Chicago

Deep Laid Conspiracy.

It is claimed by Hoyne that the underwold had conspired to kill members of the police morals squad and that Vanille the Montana gunman, had been employed for the purpose Vanille is under arrest

The levee district has lost much of its flambuoyancy since the battle between two raiding squads of detectives. The bars and cafes are doing and unusually light business and there is a widespread tendency among the habitues to seek other localities

Captain Nootbaar, the new head of the levee district police station, today continued raids on questionable places in the territory under his jurisdiction His efforts were directed today against houses in Chinatown where women were said to be harbored

Two of the men against whom charges of conspiracy were made yesterday by the state's attorney, gave bonds for their appearance in court, where testimony is to be given concerning their alleged complicity in the attack last week, which resulted in the shooting of Stanley J Birns, police detective

Rocco Venille, charged with the murder of Birns and said by the state's attorney to be a New York gunman imported to Chicago to kill W. C Dannenberg, inspector of morals, is still in a hospital under police guard

BIG REWARD OFFERED FOR WOULD-BE SLAYER

Columbia, S C., July 25.—A reward of $5,000 for the arrest and conviction of the man who shot Dr. James McIntosh, well known physician of Columbia, was offered by J W Norwood, a Greenville banker. Citizens of Columbia launched a campaign to raise $1,000 for the arrest of the assailant, who is supposed to have escaped in an automobile

The shooting of Dr McIntosh was the immedate subject for attacks on lawlessness in South Carolina by candidates for the United States Senate speaking here. Governor Blease, in his speech, expressed regret that Dr McIntosh had been the victim of such an attack Dr McIntosh was recently drawn into the senatorial situation because of his opinion in a well known parole case It was said that he would probably recover

SMALL DAMAGE DONE BY FIRE IN FORESTS

Blazes Reported in Five Counties, But Green Timber Is Safe.

Seattle, Wash., July 24.—Fires are reported today in King, Clallam, Snohomish, Mason and Kitsap counties, Washington, but only small damage has been done. The fires originated in logged-off land, and have not spread to green timber. The state fire warden and the Washington State Forest Fire association have about 150 men in the field. The national forests have not been attacked. The most serious of the fires is at Covington, 12 miles southeast of Seattle, where the saw mill of the Covington Lumber company, a rancher's house and two barns containing live stock have been burned.

This fire began in a slashing fired by loggers. The Puget Sound navy yard's magazine at Bremerton has at no time been threatened, but yesterday 100 sailors from the yard were sent to quench a fire near the town of Manette. This led to the report that the yard's magazine was in danger

ROOSEVELT FACES SUIT FOR ALLEGED LIBEL OF BARNES

New York, July 24.—Chairman William Barnes, of the republican state committee announced today that he had instructed his counsel to bring suit for libel against Theodore Roosevelt, based on Colonel Roosevelt's statement of last night attacking Mr. Barnes and indorsing the candidacy of Harvey D. Hinman for the nomination for governor at the republican primaries

Amount of damages for which Mr. Barnes would sue apparently had not been determined at the time he issued his statement. It was said, however, that it would be for a substantial sum.

The suit will be brought in the supreme court, Mr. Barnes announced, within a few days.

"I have nothing whatever to say in reply to Mr. Roosevelt's diatribe, except that it lacks dignity, self-restraint and is without foundation," reads Mr. Barnes' statement. "When an issue of this kind is raised by a person of such prominence one has but one of three courses: to submit to the aspersion; to enter into an unseemly personal controversy or to appeal to the courts, in order to enable that person who utters the libel an opportunity to produce legal evidence.

"I deny the truthfulness of every statement made by Mr. Roosevelt in his publication this morning and have instructed my counsel to bring an action for libel without delay against him."

Oyster Bay, N. Y., July 24.—The candidacy of ex-Senator Harvey D. Hinman, of Binghamton, for the gubernatorial nomination at the republican prmaries was endorsed by Theodore Roosevelt. In a formal statement Colonel Roosevelt calls upon "all good citizens, no matter what their party affiliations," to join in support of a state ticket "the success of which would mean the overthrow of both Mr. Barnes and Mr. Murphy."

In his statement he said:

"In this campaign I have a duty to the progressives of the nation and a duty also to the state of New York. In national politics in so far as I am able, I shall endeavor to strive for the success of the principles embodied in the progressive national platform. Therefore I shall oppose the policies of the present administration, which I regard as deeply injurious alike to the honor and the interest of the American people.

"But in this state the prime need is for a good citizens' movement, a union movement to save the state from the bipartisan control of Messrs. Barnes and Murphy precisely like the good citizen movement last year when by union the city of New York was the heart and core when we saved the city from the domination of Mr. Murphy

"In New York state we see at its worst the development of the system of bipartisan boss rule. The outcome of this system is necessarily that invisible government which the progressive party was in large part founded to oppose It is impossible to secure the economic, social and industrial reforms to which we are pledged until this invisible government of the party bosses working through the alliance between crooked business and crooked politics, is rooted out of our governmental system."

DOORS OF CHURCH CLOSE ON VANITY

St. Louis, Mo., July 24.—By driving the imps of vanity and envy around the stump, the East Alton Baptist church expects an infinitely larger attendance next Sunday.

When the board of trustees of the church sought to find the reason of a big falling off in attendance, they started with the belief that because of hot weather, tepid Christians preferred to remain in negligee o' Sunday mornings. But many who remained away reported that they did so because others went to church so fancily dressed, whereas they, the absentees, had not the raiment with which to "splurge."

Therefore, the pastor, Rev. D. C. Blunt, and the trustees, decided that all good and true members of the congregation will next Sunday attend in more than Puritanical simplicity. The women must wear only calico; the men overalls.

SIGNS WITH FEDS.

Mobile, Ala., July 24.—Pitcher Ralph Works, former Detroit American league player, released last night by Manager Finn, of the Memphis club, announced today that he had signed with the St Louis Federal league club and would leave immediately to join that team

REBELS CAN GAIN FOREIGN SUPPORT

Washington, July 23.—Ambassador De Gama of Brazil and Ministers Suarez of Chile and Naon of Argentine, the three mediators in the Mexican affair, appealed to President Wilson today to have the United States use its influence with General Carranza to obtain a general amnesty for those who supported the Huerta government.

It was the first formal call of the three mediators since the conference at Niagara Falls adjourned. They were accompanied by Secretary Bryan and for nearly an hour discussed the Mexican situation in all its phases. They expressed the view that Francisco Carbajal was ready to turn over the government to General Carranza, but wanted guarantees that there would be no wholesale executions, arrests or confiscations of property.

They told President Wilson that Carbajal would not surrender unconditionally and that unless these guarantees for the protection of the lives and property of those who supported Huerta were given, would concentrate all the military forces and resist to the utmost any effort to invade Mexico City.

The president and Mr. Bryan listened attentatively to the views of the South American diplomats, especially as they indicated that their governments probably would be unable to recognize any administration in Mexico, which refused to give quarter to its enemy or establish itself by peaceful means in accordance with civilized practice among nations

Bryan Meets Diplomats.

After their talk with the president, Secretary Bryan and the three diplomats went to the state department for a conference.

That the influence of the United States was being relied on by the Provisional President Carbajal to obtain satisfactory terms from the constitutionalists was explained also by Jose Castellot, personal representative of Carbajal. The mediators conferred not only with Mr Castellot, but also with Emilio Rabasa, head of the delegation which represented Huerta at the Niagara conferences.

Mr. Castellot was confident the American government never would permit an arbitrary entry into Mexico City. He said the Carbajal government wanted no share in the future administration, no validation of the acts of Huerta, but simply guarantees for lives and property.

Word that the commission which will represent Carbajal in negotiations with Carranza had left Mexico City, came to Castellot today. The commission departed without obtaining credentials, but since Carranza indicated to the American government that he would receive the commission full instructions and authorization will be sent them.

General Carranza has suggested that the conference take place at Saltillo.

ARRANGING AN ARMISTICE AMONG WARRING FACTIONS

On Board U. S. S. California, Mazatlan, Mex., July 23 (by Wireless to San Diego, Cal, July 23.)—On the arrival of the flagship California here today, approaches were received from both the federal and constitutionalist camps indicating that the generals on both sides would be glad to meet on board the flagship, or some other foreign cruiser, to arrange an armistice during a possible evacuation of the city by the federals.

Such a meeting would be thoroughly in accord with the policy of Admiral Howard, who, since the resignation of Huerta has done every thing he could to bring the warring factions together. Six hundred troops of those who evacuated Guaymas recently are known to have landed at Manzanillo, which would indicate a possible rear attack, in conjunction with the troops at Mazatlan, on the forces of General Obregon.

VILLA GOES ON VISIT; HIS ACTIONS PUZZLING

Chihuahua, Mex., July 23.—General Villa, his wife and several friends, left today for Guerrero to visit the home of Mrs. Villa for a week, it was announced.

El Paso, Tex., July 23.—Announcement of General Villa's delay in proceeding south from Chihuahua city greatly puzzled officials here today. It had been expected Villa would leave today for Aguas Calientes with three of his brigades to participate in the junction of constitutionalist troops north of the capital.

Mexican officials on the border admit ignorance of the plans of the general of the north. It was not known definitely that Villa had been invited to take part in the entry into Mexico City Guerrero is in the mountainous districts of western Chihuahua, where Villa operated as a bandit before the Madero revolution.

CARRANZA EN ROUTE TO MEET CARBAJAL ENVOYS

On Board General Carranza's Special Train En Route to Tampico, Victoria, Mex., July 21, (Via Laredo, Tex., July 22).—General Carranza was given an enthusiastic welcome at the towns along the line from Monterey to Victoria, today. He will remain two days in Tampico, which point he will reach tomorrow and then return to Saltillo via Monterev where he expects to receive the delegates from Carbajal and also Eugemio Zapata, brother of General Emiliano Zapata, who will confer with him concerning the disposition of the Zapata troops and details of the entry into Mexico City. John R. Silliman, who was on the train, had several long interviews with General Carranza and several of his cabinet officers. General Natera and General Triana accompanied Carranza to Victoria.

HAIL RUINS CROP.

Bottineau, N. D., July 23.—Hail storm reported to have been from two to 10 miles wide, today swept from a point north of Antler, N. D., to Berwick, N. D., 100 miles southeast. It is said that 100,000 acres of grain was partially or wholly destroyed, the storm being the severest ever experienced in that district.

HEADS PYTHIAN ORDER.

Terre Haute, Ind., July 23.—Brig. Gen. William H. Loomis, of Grand Rapids, Mich., was unanimously elected major general of the uniform rank Knights of Pythias, at the meeting of the supreme council of the order today in connection with the biennial encampment.

MISSING EVANGELIST WORKING AS NEWSBOY

Rev. Philip Carlin Says He Is Through With Religion and Church.

St Louis, Mo., July 24.—Rev. Dr. Philip Carlin, a well known evangelist in the Southern Illinois Methodist conference, who disappeared from Lebanon, Ill., two years ago has been located in St. Louis. Several days ago a man who has been selling newspapers on a corner in the West end admitted to Rev. Mr. Birkhead, of a local Methodist church that he was the missing revival leader.

After Rev. Mr. Birkhead positively had identified Carlin, he notified Dr. Ewers, of Madison and Dr. Rodgers, of Gentralia, who came to St. Louis. Carlin, after a conference gave Dr. Ewers a written withdrawal from the ministery.

Dr. Carlin, who is more than 50 years old, has been a preacher in southern Illinois for 20 years, and his father T. P. Carlin, still is an active member of the Southern Illinois Methodist conference.

Carlin was surprised to find that the newspapers had learned of his identity and ordered the reporters from his home with the statement:

"I am through with religion, and religion and law will have to take their own course."

INTERVENTION IN HAITI IS LIKELY

Washington, July 24.—Possibility of American intervention in Haiti and Santo Domingo to restore peace continued today to be an absorbing topic of discussion in administration circles. Late official dispatches regarding the situation in the revolution-torn republics gave but little hope that the contending elements in the two countries would be able to restore order.

Under European pressure, the American government's patience practically has been exhausted and was forced to demand restoration of peace or threaten armed intervention. The gravity of the situation was increased by refusal of the warring factions in Haiti to cease fighting, despite the American government's warnings and failure to settle the Dominican revolution by diplomacy.

The question of a possible movement of marines into Haiti was up for discussion at today's conference between Secretaries Bryan and Daniels. Advices from Cape Haitien of further fighting with increased danger to foreigners were believed to forecast prompt action by marines now being concentrated at Guantanamo.

With the 400 marines who are to sail from Norfolk, Va., for Guantanamo Saturday, the number of marines now there or on American warships in Haitien and Dominican waters would be increased to more than 900. If necessary reinforcements could be drawn from the nearly 4,000 marines now in Vera Cruz and Mexican gulf waters.

Captain Eberle, of the cruiser Washington, at Puerta Plata, San Domingo, in a dispatch to the navy department early today, reported that the light house had been damaged by rifle firing. It could not, he added, be repaired until receipt of new supplies He also reported that food conditions, which threatened to drive the rebels from their stronghold at Puerta Plata, had improved by the arrival of fresh supplies.

More decisive fighting at Puerto Plata, on the northern coast of the Dominican republic, was forecast in a dispatch today from Captain Eberle, of the cruiser Washington, saying that the federal gunboat Independencia had anchored six miles east of the town. General Vasquez also had arrived with a small body of fresh federal troops.

RUSSIAN CAPITAL SCENE OF BATTLE

St Petersburg, July 24.—At least five striking workmen were killed and eight seriously wounded during the fighting in the streets of St. Petersburg between strikers and Cossacks, which continued throughout the night and ceased only at dawn this morning. Three police officials also are known to have been severely injured

The figures are official, but it is generally conceded that the casualities among the strikers were much heavier as it is thought they concealed a number of their dead and wounded

Official returns of the number of workmen who have quit work give the total of 120,000 in this city itself. These include the street car employes, but do not comprise a large number of unskilled laborers in the building and other trades.

Men carrying red flags spent the night marching and singing revolutionary songs in the outlying open spaces of the capital, while in the Viborg district they cut down telegraph poles and upset a number of vans with which they constructed barricades across the street, from the shelter of which they stoned the police and Cossacks. The mob is also accused of having fired some revolver shots. The strikers, however eventually dispersed and the barricades were destroyed, but only after the police and soldiers had been subjected to hot attacks with volleys of stones in four different parts of the city and had fired volleys from their rifles in return.

At an early hour this morning the strikers attempted to set fire to the Samson bridge leading across the river to the Viborg district and they also tried to destroy the neighboring waterworks, but a strong detachment of police arrived in time.

Obituary of Alexander M. Griesemer

Seldom in its history has the community and this vicinity been so stirred as by the passing of Alexander M. Griesemer.

Stricken in February by the illness which finally wore away his strength and resulted in his death he made a valiant and courageous fight against the encroachment of the disease. But in spite of this and the constant ministration of solicitous friends and the attendance of skilled physicians, the struggle was unavailing and on Friday, July 24th, 1914, he journeyed to his reward sustained by faith in a merciful Father and the personal friendship of Jesus Christ, the Lord.

Born at Garner, January 26th, 1890, Alex. Griesemer passed through the usual experiences of childhood and youth, graduating from the Garner High School and later finished a business course in the Memorial University at Mason City. Upon the completion of his formal education he was offered an important position with the C. M. & St. P. R. R. which he accepted. But finding his opportunity for advancement limited he accepted the position of Asst. Cashier in the State Savings Bank at this place, which he held at the time of his death.

Mr. Griesemer was a beloved member of the Masonic lodge of Garner and on Sunday afternoon, July the 26th, the members of this organization joined with the representatives of the religious organizations of the community in a service sacred to the memory of a departed brother. Short services were held at the home at 2:30 p. m. under the direction of Rev. Schmidt of the German Reformed church, after which, under the escort of the Masonic lodge and attended by many friends the remains were conveyed to the Methodist Episcopal church. Services consisting of prayer and scripture reading by Rev McConnel of the United Presbyterian church and remarks by Rev Schmidt of the German Reformed church; by Rev Schaefer, local preacher of the German Methodist church and by Rev Wood of the Methodist church were conducted. The music was furnished by a quartette consisting of Messrs Trafford and Ell, and the Misses Gruetzmacher of Klemme.

Mr. Griesemer was also a member of the Brotherhood of American Yeomen and the Modern Woodmen of America and both of these august bodies deeply mourn his early demise.

The more than two thousand people in attendance at this service and the profusion of beautiful floral offerings are indicative of the unusually wide circle of friends and acquaintances enjoyed by one so comparatively young in years. Always the courteous gentleman Mr. Griesemer was ever characterized by thoughtfulness and kindness for others. Of the strictest habits of conduct and business integrity, he consistently inspired trust in the minds of his employers and those with whom he had business dealings. An obedient and considerate son, a loving brother, a devoted lover, he will be most missed by those of his immediate family and she whose husband he was soon to be.

The deceased was an excellent musician. Being a master of the violin and also one of our best band men and will be greatly missed in musical circles.

His was a heart of gold. He was one of nature's noblemen in truest sense—brave, generous, manly. His was a soul of honor, and his friends and friendship were sacred to him. It was the writer's good fortune to know him well, and we only knew him to esteem him more as the time passed by. Today we miss his kindly smile and friendly greeting: we long in vain to hear the ring of his jovial laughter and to feel again his genial presence. Only Sunday we sat before his bier in the church near the scene of his youthful and happy days. We stood by his open grave as the last sad rites were performed, and as the clay of the earth closed above his silent resting place, we said with the poet:

"Cold in the dust the perished heart
may die,
But that which warmed it once can never die."

Behind the storm clouds always lurkes the rainbow and when the storm is past it weeps upon the flowers of the land und the pearls of the sea. Darkness preceedes the dawning and out of the blackness of night comes the sunshine and joy of the day. And so from the beauty of his life take an inspiration and go forth to live as he had lived, so that when the summons comes you may say as did he, "All is well."

Following the service at the church the body of the deceased was given in charge of brother Masons who conveyed it to the last earthly resting place where interrment was made according to the Masonic form of service.

Of the immediate family left to mourn the loss of a loved one are the father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. H. Griesemer, a brother, Paul; and a sister, Mrs. E. Steil. To those and a large number of more distant relatives the universal sympathy of the community is extended.

"How mournful seems, in broken dreams,
The memory of the day,
When icy Death hath sealed the breath
Of some dear form of clay

When pale, unmoved, the face we loved,
The face we thought so fair,
And the hand lies cold, whoes fervent hold
Once charmed away despair.

Oh, what could heal the grief we feel
For hopes that come no more,
Had we ne'er heard the Scripture word,
Not lost, but gone before!

Oh! world wherein nor death, nor sin,
Nor weary warefare dwells;
Their blessed home we parted from
With sobs and sad farewells.

Where eyes awake, for whose dear sake
Our own with tears grow dim,
And faint accords of dying words
Are changed for heaven's sweet hymn;

Oh! there at last, life's trials past,
We'll meet our loved once more,
Whose feet have trod the path of God—
Not lost, but gone before."

Resolutions In Memory of Alexander M. Griesemer

"I cannot say and I will not say
That he is dead, He's just away.
With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand
He has wandered to an unknown land,
And leaves us dreaming how very fair
It needs must be, since he lingers there!"

Whereas—It has pleased the Beneficent Heavenly Father to remove from the scene of his labors among us, our beloved brother, Alexander M. Griesemer.

Therefor—Be it resolved by Bethel Lodge No. 319 A. F. & A. M. and Bethel Chapter No. 116 of Royal Arch Masons, that in the death of brother Griesemer we have each sustained a deep personal loss, the community has lost an upright and kindly citizen and his loved ones have been deprived of one whose loving consideration and filial affection always helped to make the rough places of life less difficult because of his presence. Cut down by the Grim Reaper in the prime of his splendid manhood, he has left to us that priceless heritage, a good man. As a man friend and brother we can say of him, he was true to his God, his country, his neighbor and himself. He needs no eulogy, at our hands.

Be It Further Resolved—That we tender to the family and loved ones of the deceased our heartfelt sympathy in this their hour of sorrow, commending them to the tender care of the kind and loving Father whose protecting arm is ever about us.

Be It Further Resolved—That these resolutions be spread in full upon the minutes, a copy thereof furnished to the family and loved ones and to the press and that as a further mark of respect the Charters and Great Lights be draped in mourning for thirty days.

Defeat Woden Tuesday

Klemme won a hard fought game from Woden, Tuesday, by the score of 11 to 9. The Woden boys put up a scrappy game and with the assistance of errors by the locals started out with a 5 run lead. After the Klemme boys came back to earth and settled down to play ball they succeeded in overcoming the lead in the eighth inning. It was an off day for the locals and being the 13th game they feel lucky in escaping a defeat. A return game will be played with Woden at that place, Sunday, August 9th, when they hope to win once more by a more decisive score. A good bunch of rooters are planning to follow the team

Better Than Castor Oil

Children detest castor oil and who can blame them—you do yourself and why expect them to take it?—it is entirely too harsh for a tender stomach.

What they need is something that is mild in action—does not gripe and at the same time is effective in all cases of constipation and troubles arising from indigestion—something they will like to take.

Nyal's Laxena can be given the younger ones with perfect safety—pleasrnt to take and sure in it's action.

it does away with the use of castor oil and other nauseating laxatives.

Acetylene not only supplies good light for the farm home, but cooking fuel as well—the hundred and one "systems" that Acetylene has crowded out, all furnish light only. Memoirs of Napoleon

In Three Volumes

The personal reminiscences of Baron de Méneval, for thirteen years private secretary to Napoleon Bonaparte, bring out, as no history can, many enlightening and interesting side lights on the character of that greatest of leaders. De Méneval's descriptions have the piquancy and interest possible only because he was an actual eye-witness of the scenes and incidents of which he writes. Their reliability and historical interest can be judged by the fact that the very conservative French Academy publicly recommends them.

IN SUCH PAIN WOMAN CRIED

Suffered Everything Until Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Florence, So. Dakota.—"I used to be very sick every month with bearing down pains and backache, and had headache a good deal of the time and very little appetite. The pains were so bad that I used to sit right down on the floor and cry, because it hurt me so and I could not do any work at those times. An old woman advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I got a bottle. I felt better the next month so I took three more bottles of it and got well so I could work all the time. I hope every woman who suffers like I did will try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. P. W. LANSING, Route No. 1, Florence, South Dakota.

Why will women continue to suffer day in and day out or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has restored the health of thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, etc.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

LITTLE MOTHER WORRIED

Problem Confronting Her Was One That Might Have Puzzled a Much Older Head.

She was the smallest and youngest of the daily parade of those who take baby out for an airing at Washington Heights, a novice among perambulator propellers, relates the New York Evening Post. The pram itself was a fair give-away, unspecked by use, newer even than baby. A first airing, beyond a doubt.

She stopped and marched around in front of the pram, the better to get a view of him or her. It was asleep. You could tell it by the mother's smile. But a cloud of worriment chased the smile from her face and worriment grew. It was the misery of doubt and inexperience. Presently she struggled with tears.

There was baby lying, asleep, mouth wide open like an O, sucking in the breezes from the river. The motherly and experienced one came by just as the mother's anguish welled over.

"Oh," she exclaimed in tears, "I'm dreadfully afraid of germs! And"—pointing to the open mouth—"oughtn't I to close it?"

She Looked It.

PRIZE FOOD.
Palatable, Economical, Nourishing.

A Nebr. woman has outlined the prize food in a few words, and that from personal experience. She writes:

"After our long experience with Grape-Nuts, I cannot say enough in its favor. We have used this food almost continually for seven years.

"We sometimes tried other advertised breakfast foods but we invariably returned to Grape-Nuts as the most palatable, economical and nourishing of all.

"When I quit tea and coffee and began to use Postum and Grape-Nuts, I was almost a nervous wreck. I was so irritable I could not sleep nights, had no interest in life.

"After using Grape-Nuts a short time I began to improve and all these ailments have disappeared and now I am a well woman. My two children have been almost raised on Grape-Nuts, which they eat three times a day.

"They are pictures of health and have never had the least symptom of stomach trouble, even through the most severe siege of whooping cough they could retain Grape-Nuts when all else failed.

"Grape-Nuts food has saved doctor bills, and has been, therefore, a most economical food for us."

THE RUBY MEDALLION.

By Thomas R. Bevins.

(Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"I don't understand that one clause a bit, Georgia." Mrs. Voelmar looked anxiously at her sister, but Georgia was too much engrossed in reading to notice. Forgetful of all manners and customs of the house of Harrington, Georgia knelt on a chair and leaned her chin on her elbows, resting her pretty elbows on the broad library table.

"It's plain enough," she retorted. 'It says here, now listen, Bab, 'And to my beloved friend, Mrs. Ross Kenton, the jewel which has been in her possession for 20 years.' I do think it was fearfully tactless of Uncle Tris to put it like that. Why didn't he give it to her outright?"

"We don't even know what it is yet. And she is in India with the Barclays."

"They came back Saturday. Todd told me. She's with them. Tod says she's more beautiful and interesting than ever."

"How long has she been a widow?" asked Barbara, reflectively.

"Four years."

"And he says 20 in the will. What do you suppose it is?"

"Well, listen. It will be mine some day, probably." Georgia was nothing if not direct in her mode of attack. "I shall simply tell Tod we want to know what it is, and he can ask her. It's right we should know. He was our uncle, and we come in for everything else."

"Wouldn't it be better as long as she is home again to call on her and tell her of the clause in his will? There's the bell, and I don't want any one shown out here. I don't see who'd call, anyway, right after——"

She stopped. Curtis was showing in Tod and with him was a lady. Georgia unconsciously straightened herself and looked with wide-eyed admiration at her. She was slender and rather tall, but infinitely graceful. Her eyes were deepest grayish blue, the tint of a summer sky on a sunless day, and her hair looked dusky and brown, just touched with gray. But it was more than features or complexion that constituted her charm. There was the look in her eyes and the expression around her mouth, the whole tender, gracious personality that reached out to one at once. Tod looked unhappy, but as one who would do his duty or die.

"Georgia, dear, I want you to meet my aunt, Mrs. Kenton," he said, his eyes pleading with Georgia to be lenient. "And Mrs. Voelmar, Aunt Lilian."

Georgia caught the mute appeal from her betrothed, but absolutely ignored it. Her first feeling of intense curiosity to look at the woman who had swayed an influence over Tristram Harrington for 20 years died away as she met the woman's eyes. They were beautiful eyes, warm, deep brown, full of an understanding sympathy. Barbara and Tod were busy talking about the new carved reredos at church, a perfectly safe, sane, impersonal subject under the circumstances, but it left the weight of the situation on Georgia. It was Lilian Kenton herself who lifted it from the girl's shoulders.

"I came to see you 'specially, my dear. Can't you show me the roses out yonder?"

Georgia led the way out of the side door opening on the loggia. It had always been her uncle's favorite place, the long, flower-twined loggia and the garden below it. Beyond the garden lay the sloping fields up into the long, shadowy, pine-covered slope of Mount Ascutney. It was late afternoon. The garden always looked at its best then. Mrs. Kenton moved down the wide steps, and along the winding, box-bordered paths leisurely, stopping now and then at some rosebush in full bloom.

"I always loved it here," she said, softly. "I haven't been in the old garden for 20 years—20 long years."

She stopped and took from her throat a long gold chain with an oval medallion suspended from it. Set into one side of it was a wonderful ruby, deep colored and oval, too. It glowed in the sunset light as if it held the embers of some hidden fire. On the other side of the medallion was a miniature of Tristram Harrington, not as Georgia remembered him, but young, his brown, wavy hair uncurling from his forehead, his eyes full of provocative mirth. Mrs. Kenton stood looking down at it for a minute in silence, a curious little smile of tenderness on her face.

"He was a darling lad. He gave me this, here in the garden, Georgia. You don't mind my calling you that, do you? It was the last time I refused to marry him. I think he had been asking me for fully five years—since we were 14 and 18."

"Didn't you love him?" asked Georgia, anxiously.

"Dear, I didn't know what love was. I liked him immensely, but I didn't love him until—it was too late." She looked up suddenly into the eager, flushed face so near her own. "You are going to marry Tod, aren't you?"

"Why, I—I expect to," Georgia laughed a little. "We have awful fusses, but we always make up."

"Marry him just as soon as you can." She held the face in the miniature nearer. "There's nothing in all the world like young love. Tristram gave me this that last day. I was leaving for Europe with my aunt. She was wealthy, and my people are not. Neither was Tristram. Not then. And I was to be given what they called my chance. And he asked me not to go, to stay here in this dear old garden and be his wife. I didn't know that I was throwing away paradise, my dear, I didn't know. He told me if I was quite sure that I did not love him, I was to send this back."

"Oh, I see," breathed Georgia, "but you married—"

Mrs. Kenton bowed her head. "Yes, I married, and paid for throwing away the garden, but I never sent this back. I could not. Would you like it now?"

Georgia's eyes filled with tears. She remembered the long years of her uncle's life there at Rosemeade. He had never married, but with all his success and accummulation of wealth he had clung to the old country house with its wonderful rose garden. Perhaps he had hoped that some day she would come back to it.

"The house has been left to you, I understand, and Barbara will have the new one in town. Tod seemed worried and uncertain today when I asked him about the date of the wedding—"

"I'll set it," Georgia exclaimed impetuously. "I'll marry him before the summer is over, and I don't think Uncle Tris would mind a bit. And I wouldn't take back the medallion for all the world. It must have made him happy at least to know you wanted to keep it."

Tod and Barbara came leisurely toward them down the terrace steps, and Mrs. Kenton took possession of Bab. Tod stood awkwardly looking down at the figure on the old Roman seat. She looked like a rose herself in her pink linen dress, he thought, her dark hair full of reddish gleams in the sunshine. There seemed to be something different about her, something that hinted at surrender. For over a year he had been alternately accepted and rejected, according to her moods, but now she met his eyes with a new look of womanliness and faith.

"Have I done anything?" he asked. "You seem changed, sweetheart."

"Tod," she said earnestly, "don't you adore this garden? I'm going to marry you in it this summer, truly I am. And Aunt Lilian will be matron of honor and fairy godmother."

If All the Laws Were Enforced—

From the Kansas City Star.

A speaker at a convention in Atlantic City declared that "to enforce the hundreds of miles of statutes now on the books would require 100 attorney generals, 1,000,000 policemen and at least $1,000,000,000." And he might have made the list complete by adding 1,000,000,000 years.

The government of Italy, Belgium and Uruguay have officially adopted 24-hour time.

A Romance of Extraordinary Distinction

Yet he knew well how the Austrian tyrants left men for a little thing, for a suspicion, for nothing, lying in dungeons worse than this for three times five years. It was a mere chance, he had heard, that this young signor had not been sent to Spielberg instead of this place; to horrible Spielberg, where one might see high bred nobles of Italy chained to felons, living in underground cells. Battista shuddered. He had come to have a great affection for this prisoner; he trembled at the thought that some caprice of those in power might send him even yet to Spielberg. Moreover—Battista hardly dared think it in his heart, but he himself was Italian—a patriot. And behold him a jailer to a man who was suffering—he believed—for the patriot cause. His soul longed to help him, yet he was afraid, even to be too gentle with his prisoner. It was an off chance that had left him here, Battista Serrani, in the castle of his old masters, after the castle had been confiscated by the Austrians, to be used by them as a prison. But what could he do? He was a poor man; he had a wife and children to think of; his knowledge of the place had been useful at first to the new lords, and then they had seen that he was hard working and closed mouthed, and had kept him on till they had forgotten, it seemed, that he was Italian at all. So here he was, set to guard men whom he would give his life to make free. But the masters knew well and he knew that it meant more than his life to be disloyal—it meant the lives of his wife and children. There would be small pity for such as Battista when great noblemen were treated like felons. So Battista was trusted as if he were Austrian born.

All this flashed through his mind as he gazed pitifully at the sick prisoner, only just out of boyhood, yet with that band of white hair, the badge of his captivity, in the thick brown thatch of his head. He lay very still now, as if his tossing were all finished, his face turned to the wall; Battista, softhearted, cautious, stopped to look at him a moment before going out. As he looked the dark head turned swiftly and the bright eyes met his with a light not delirious, yet not quite of every day reason.

"You are good to me, Battista," the boy said, "and just now you gave me a great pleasure. It warms me yet to think of it for you see, I thought you were Pierto—my dear Pietro—the Marquis Zappi."

Battista, breathless, stared, stammered. "Whom—whom did you say, signor?"

But the prisoner had flashed into reason. The color went out of his face as the tide ebbs. "Battista, did I say a name? Battista—you will not betray me—you will not repeat that name? I would never have said it but that I was not quite steady. I must have been out of my head; I have never spoken his name before in this place. Oh, if I should bring danger to him! Battista, for God's sake, you will not repeat that name?"

Battista spoke low, glancing at the heavy iron door of the cell. "God forbid, signor," he whispered, "that I should speak, here in his own castle, the name of my young master.

There was a long silence. The prisoner and his jailer gazed at each other as if saying things beyond words. Then the boy put out his long, hot fingers and caught the man's sleeve.

"Battista," he murmured, "Battista—is that true? Is it possible? Do you know—my Pietro?"

"Know him, signor?" Battista's deep voice was unsteady. "My fathers have served his for 800 years." The man was shaking with a loyalty long pent up, but Francois lifted his head, leant on his elbow and looked at him thoughtfully.

"But, Battista, I know you now; he has spoken to me of you; it was your son, the little Battista, who was his body servant when they were children?"

"Yes, signor."

"I did not dream of it; I never knew what castle this was; I never dreamed of Castelforte; you would not tell me."

"I could not, signor. It was forbidden. I am risking my life every minute."

"Go, Battista," and Francois pushed him away with weak hands. "Go quickly—you have been here too long. There might be suspicion. I could not live if I brought trouble on you."

"It is right so far, signor," Battista answered. "It is known you are ill; I must care for the sick ones a little. But I had better go now."

With that he slipped to his knees and lifted the feverish hand to his lips. "The friend of my young master," he said simply, but his voice broke on the words. The traditional faithfulness of centuries was strong in Battista; the Zappis had been good masters; one had been cared for and contented always; one was terrorized and ground down by these "Austrian swine;" the memory of the old masters, the personality of any one connected with them, was sacred. Battista bowed his head over the hands in his own, then he stood up.

"I shall be back at bedtime, signor," he said quietly, and was gone.

But Francois had an ally now, and he knew it. The excitement of the thought, the joy of dim possible results buoyed his high-strung temperament like a tonic. He must be, he would be careful beyond words to guard against any danger, any suspicion for Battista, but— There were chances even with that provision. Here was hope. It is necessary, perhaps, to have been five years a prisoner in a cell in an unknown castle in a foreign land to know what the first glimpse of hope may mean.

Instantly, with the hope working in him, he began to get well. Little by little, watching fearfully against the peril of conversations long enough to seem suspicious to eyes always alert, he told Battista of the close friendship of the chateau in France, of the splendid old officer of Napoleon and of his daughter, the beautiful demoiselle, who was Alixe; of the years at school together, the boyish adventures innumerable. Every word Battista drank in; he had not seen the young marquis since he had left Castelforte with his father on the journey which took them to Vicques. When, at the end of his school days, the boy of 18 had come back to his country, the castle had already been seized by the Austrians, and it had not been safe for Pietro to come into his own country. But the man's memory of his little lord was vivid and loving; he listened eagerly to the least detail of his unknown older life.

And day by day the prisoner who could tell him such things, who was the friend of his master, who had lived with his master, became more of an idol to him, stood to him more and more in the place of the marquis. From the beginning of the imprisonment he had had an affection for this young stranger; few people ever came under the influence of Francois without having an affection for him; but the day of his mention of Pietro had made Battista his slave.

A person of more importance than Battista had fallen under the spell of Francois' personality. The governor himself had been attracted by the young Frenchman. The governor, Count von Gersdorf, was a vain, discontented, brilliant Austrian, at odds with the world because he had not risen further in it. He was without society in this mountain fortress of his, and longed for it; he had a fine voice and no one to sing to; he liked to talk and had no one to talk to. Francois, with his ready friendliness, with his gift of finding good in every one, with his winning manner and simplicity which had the ease of sophistication, was a treasure-trove of amusement to the bored Austrian. Moreover, Francois could play a guitar and accompany his songs, and knew enough music to appreciate the governor's really beautiful voice; his delight in it was better than the most finished flattery. He had taught the governor French songs; they sang together, and the count roared them out and then roared with laughter, and Francois smiled and was pleased. It had come to be a custom with the governor, during the last two years, to have the Frenchman brought down very often to his room for dinner, and to spend the evening. All this was against regulations—but who was to know? The count was lord of life and death at Castelforte, and if higher powers came once in a year or two, no one would dare to speak of the doings of the governor except the governor.

Things stood so with the prisoner at the time of his discovery of the identity of his jailer and of his jail. The governor at that time was away on a visit to Vienna, looking for a promotion; he came back elated and good-humored in the prospect of a change within the year. But the heart of Francois sank as he thought what the change might mean to him. This man had treated him with unhoped favor in some ways. He realized what it meant to reason and health to have those evenings away from his narrow cold cell, even in such company as the governor's. Besides which Francois persistently found good qualities in the governor. He had been allowed books to read in his cell, though no writing materials. Strange as it may seem, it had been in some ways a happy life. The mystical, thoughtful bent of the boy had developed in the great quiet loneliness; with the broad Italian sky and the sound of the sea in his constant companionship, his mind had grown to a grasp of the greatness of living and the smallness of life. A vista of thought before unknown had opened out to him in the long, solitary days. When he awoke in the morning he let himself be floated out on a tide of meditation where strange bright visions met him like islands in a southern ocean. He looked forward to these thoughts as to events, as a mystic of India looks to Nirvana.

In the light of this happiness of prison, the hardships of prison, the drain of his health from dampness and lack of air and poor food were small discomforts, hardly to be noticed in the greatness of his blessings. These trials would be over shortly; the real things, friendship, love enthusiasm, were eternal. Moreover, it was action he dreamed, not quiescence, as he looked from the barred window at the vast blue depths of Italian sky, depths profounder, more transparent than elsewhere. His belief in his star, in its fusion some day to come into the larger star of the Bonapartes, had been strengthened, fixed, by the adventure which had landed him in the desolation of an Austrian prison. He had saved the prince's life; it was an omen of greater things which he should do for the prince. If no more came of it he would have done his part; he could die happy, but he believed without a shadow of doubt that more was to come.

"'Some day a marshal of France under another Bonaparte,'" he said to himself one day, staring through the bars at his meadow—he called the sky so. He smiled. "But that is nothing. To help place my prince on the throne of France—that is my work—my life." He talked aloud at times, as prisoners come to do. He went on then, in a low voice.

"If there were good fairies, if I had three wishes: Alixe—the prince made emperor—Francois Beaupre, a marshal of France." He laughed happily. "It is child's play. Nothing matters except that my life shall do its work. Even that is so small; but I have a great desire to do that. I believe I shall do that—I know it." And he fell to work on a book which he was planning, chapter by chapter, in his brain.

But, if he were to escape, ever, the chance was increased infinitely by the going back and forth to the governor's room. A new governor might keep him shut up absolutely. It had been so while the count was away; then he had been ill, and the lieutenant in command would not let a doctor see him till he became delirious; that was the ordinary treatment of prisoners. So, thinking over these things, Francois felt, with a sudden accession of steady push of his longing for freedom, the conviction that he must be free before the count left, else the opportunity and force for the effort would both be gone forever. And on the day Battista brought in his midday meal with a look and a manner which Francois remarked.

"What is it, Battista?" he asked softly.

The man answered not a word, but turned and opened the door rapidly and looked out. "I thought I had dropped the water pitcher. Ah, here it is—I am stupid," he spoke aloud. And then finger on lip, dramatically, he bent over the young man. The son—the little Battista—had brought a letter. The young master wished Battista to come to him in France, to be with him. He is going in two days."

It was whispered quickly and Battista stood erect.

"The signor's food will get cold, the signor does not eat it," he said gruffly. "I do not like to carry food for prisoners who do not appreciate it. I shall bring less tomorrow."

But Francois, hardly hearing the surly tones, had his hand on Battista's—arm, was whispering eagerly.

"Where does he go, in France?"

"To Vicques," the low answer. Francois sank back, tortured.

"Going to Vicques, the little boy From Castelforte. And he, Francois must stay here in prison. His heart was wrung with a sudden wild sickness. 'He wanted to see Alixe, to see his mother, to see the generous see the peaceful little village and the stream that ran through it, and the steep-arched bridge, and the fields, and the corn. The gray chateau with its red roofs, and the beech trees and the dim, high walled library. How he wanted to see it all! How his heart ached, madly, fiercely. This was the worst moment of all his captivity. But with that, Battista was over him, murmuring words again. Something was slipped under the bedclothes.

"Paper—pens. The signor will write a letter this afternoon. And tomorrow little Battista will take it."

And the heart of Francois gave a sudden throb of joy as wild as anguish. He could speak to them before he died; it might be they could save him. His hands stole to the paper age under the coarse blanket. It seemed as if in touching it he touched his mother and his sweetheart and home.

CHAPTER XIX.

GOOD NEWS.

In the garden of the chateau of Vicques, where the stiff, gray stone [illegible] spilled again their heart's blood in scarlet and the etching of vines; [illegible] the two stately lines of them led [illegible] to the sun dial and the round lawn [illegible] one of the griffin-supported stone [illegible] Alixe and Pietro sat, where Alixe and Francois had sat five years before.

Alixe, again in her dark riding habit with the blue feather in her hat [illegible] the gauntleted hands, was grown [illegible] an exquisite slip of a girl into a woman more lovely than the girl. Her eyes [illegible] when she lifted the long, exaggerated curled lashes, held fire and force [illegible] knowledge of suffering, it might be [illegible] under their steady smile, but had [illegible] these in control. This was a [illegible] able not only to endure things [illegible] is the gift of most women, but [illegible] things. Pietro, his big arm [illegible] along the back of the stone [illegible] watched her—as Pietro had watched her always. It seemed never to [illegible] her to turn and find his honest [illegible] fixed calmly on her face. Pietro, [illegible] illness at Ancona had put Francois into his place in the escape of [illegible] Napoleon, had put Francois in his place as the prisoner of Austria these five years—Pietro had managed to get away from Italy and had [illegible] Queen Hortense and her son [illegible] they entered Paris. Both the [illegible] and Pietro had moved heaven and earth to find out the fate of Francois. That he had been taken by the Austrian squad at the end of his wild ride they knew. More than this they could not discover, except that one of the things pointed to the conclusion that he had been immediately executed. The prince believed this, and Pietro came to believe it. But Alixe had not believed it.

In these five years Pietro had not been back to Italy; the "Austrians" had put down in 1[illegible] revolution in the Romagna, the [illegible] in which Prince Louis and Pietro's friend, Marquis Appi, had taken part. In the war-torn country no movements of importance had taken place since then. Pietro, a Carbonaro, a member of "young Italy," a marked man, was safe inside the Italian frontier. The other patriots he awaited in a foreign country the day when he might go back to fight again for united Italy. In the meantime he inspired, planned, worked continually for the patriot cause, and as continually tried, though now without hope, to find a trace of Francois. The boy who had dashed through the Austrian soldiers on that morning at Chiusa, who leaped to the landlord's horse and cleared his way through with the sword of the old soldier's sword, and [illegible] wild race, to fall into the enemy's hands at last—the boy had disappeared from the face of the earth. Pietro, grieving deeply for his old friend, grieving bitterly because it was [illegible] ing his place that Francois had met his fate, believed him dead. But Alixe would not believe it. Pietro was now at Vicques now, and the two would discuss the question again and again. He might not speak to the grandmother Francois; the blow had been too great, and the old soldier's wound had not closed; it might not be touched. But Pietro and Alixe spoke of it constantly.

Today, as they sat in the garden they had been going over the possibilities of his life or death for the thousandth time. Pietro's quick eyes were sad as he looked at Alixe and across the lawn to the wood.

"God knows I would give him quickly if I could see him through the trees there, as I used to see him, mornings long ago, in patched home spun clothes."

Alixe followed the glance curiously, as if calling up the little trudging figure so well remembered. Then she tossed up her head—"Who?"—and then she laughed. "I shall be seeing visions next, like Francois," she said. "I thought I saw—back in the beech wood."

"I see no one." Pietro stared.

"But you have no eyes, Pietro."

always see a thing two minutes before you" Alixe threw at him. "There—the man."

"Oh," said Pietro. "Your eyes are more than natural, Alixe You see into a wood, that is uncanny. Yes, I see him now. Mon Dieu! he is a big fellow."

"A peasant—from some other village," Alixe spoke carelessly. "I do not know him," and they went on talking, as they had been doing, of Francois.

And with that, here was Jean Phillippe Moison, 40 now and fat, but still beautiful in purple millinery, advancing down the stone steps between the tall gray vases, making a symphony of color with the rich red of the flowers. He held a silver tray, a letter was on it.

"For Mademoiselle"

Mademoiselle took it calmly and glanced at it, and with that both the footman and the Marquis Zappi were astoinshed to see her fall to shivering as it in a sudden illness She caught Pietro's arm The letter was clutched in her other hand thrust back of her.

"Pietro"

"What is it, Alixe?" His voice was quiet as ever, but his hand was around hers shaking fingers, and he held them strongly "What is it, Alixe?"

She drew forward the other hand; the letter shook, rustled with her trembling "It is—from Francois"

Jean Phillippe Moison, having stayed to listen as he ought not, lifted his eyes and his hands to heaven and gave thanks in a general way, volubly, unrebuked By now the unsteady fingers of Alixe had opend the paper, and her head and Pietro's were bent over it, devouring the well known writing. Alixe, excited French, exploded into a disjointed running comment

"From prison—our Francois—dear Francois" And then "Five years, Pietro! Think—while we have been free" And then, with a swift clutch again at the big coat sleeve crowding against her "Pietro' See, see' The date—it is only two months ago. He was alive then, he must be alive now, he is' I knew it, Pietro' A woman knows more things than a man."

With that she threw up her head and fixed Jean Phillippe, drinking in all this, with an unexpected stern glance. "What are you doing here, Moison? What manners are these?" Then, relapsing in a flash into pure human trust and affection toward the anxious old servant 'My dear, old, good Moison—he is alive—Monsieur Francois is alive—in a horrible prison in Italy! But he is alive, Moison'" And with that, a sudden jump again into dignity "Who brought this, Moison?"

Jean Phillippe was only too happy to have a hand in the joyful excitement "Mademoiselle, the young person speaks little language. But he told me to say to Monsieur the Marquis that he was the little Battista"

Pietro looked up quickly. "Alixe, it is the servant from my old home of whom I spoke to you I can not imagine how Francois got hold of him, but he chose a good messenger May I have him brought here? He must have something to tell us"

Alixe, her letter tight in her hands, struggled in her mind Then "The letter will keep—yes, let him come, and we can read it all the better after for what he may tell us."

So Moison, having orders to produce at once the said little Battista, retired, much excited, and returned shortly—but not so shortly as to have omitted a fling of the great news into the midst of the servants hall He conducted, marching behind him, the little Battista, an enormous young man of six feet, four, erect, grave, stately This dignified person, saluting the lady with a deep bow, dropped on one knee before his master his eyes full of a worshiping joy, and kissed his hand. Having done which he arose silently and stood waiting, with those beaming eyes feasting on Pietro's face, but otherwise decorous.

First the young marquis said some friendly words of his great pleasure in seeing his old servant and the friend of his childhood, and the big man stood with downcast eyes, with the color flushing his happy face. Then "Battista," asked the marquis, "how did you get the letter which you brought mademoiselle'"

"My father," answered Battista laconically

"How did your father get it'"

"From the signor prisoner, my signor"

Alixe and Pietro looked at him attentively, not comprehending by what means this was possible. Pietro, remembering the little Battista of old, vaguely remember that he was incapable of initiative in speech. One must pump him painfully.

"Was your father in the prison where the signor is confined?" Alixe asked.

The little Battista turned his eyes on her a second, approvingly, but briefly. They went back without delay to their affair of devouring the face of his master. But he answered promptly. "Yes, signorina, he is there always."

"Always?" Pietro demanded in alarm. "Is Battista a prisoner?"

"But no, my signor."

"What then? Battista, try to tell us."

So adjured, little Battista made a violent effort. "He is one of the jailers, my signor."

"Jailers? For the Austrians?" The face of the marquis took all the joyful light out of the face of little Battista.

"My signor" he stammered, "it could not be helped. He was there. He knew the castle. They forced him at first, and—and it came to be so."

"Knew the castle!" Pietro repeated. "What castle?"

Battista's eyes turned to his master's like those of a faithful dog, trusting but not understanding. "What castle, my signor? Castelforte—the signor's own castle—what other?"

A sharp exclamation from Alixe summed up everything. "Your castle is confiscated; they use it as a prison. Francois is a prisoner there, Pietro! All these years—in your own home!"

"I never dreamed of that," Pietro spoke, thinking aloud. "Every other prison in Austria and Italy I have tried to find him in. I never dreamed of Castelforte."

And with that, as if pulling teeth, they got by slow degrees all that he knew from the little Battista. The letter, tight in Alixe's hand, was still unread; this living document seemed to bring them closer to their friend than even his written words. There were some things in the living letter, moreover, not to be found in the one of paper and ink. The little Battista, being put to the wall, told them what his father had told him, what the doctor of the prison had told his father. How the prisoner's health was failing; of that band of white in his dark hair; at last that the doctor had said to the big Battista that the prisoner could not live more than two or three years as things were; that even if released he might not regain his health, would not live, perhaps; that the only thing which could save him would be a long sea voyage.

"A long sea voyage!" Alixe groaned and put her face into her hands suddenly, and Pietro looked very sorrowful. "A long sea voyage for a political prisoner in the hands of the pitiless Austrians!"

At the end of the interview the little Battista put his hand into his breast pocket and brought out another letter, thickly folded. Would mademoiselle have him instructed where to find the mother of the signor prisoner? He had promised to put this into her own hands. He must do it before he touched food.

And Jean Phillippe Moinson, who had lurked discreetly back of the nearest stone vase, not missing a syllable, was tista was sent off up the stone steps given orders, and the huge little Battista between the scarlet flowers, up the velvet slope of lawn, in charge of the purple one.

Half an hour later the general walked up from the village, walked slowly, thoughtfully through the beech wood, his face hardly older than when he had come to Vicques, but sterner and sadder; his still soldierly gait less buoyant than it had been five years ago. There were voices coming to him down the wind through the trees. The general's keen eyes—as keen as Alixe's—searched the distant leafy dimness and made out shortly Alixe and Pietro hurrying to meet him. Why he wondered to himself as the two young people swung through the wood—why had nothing more ever come of this long friendship? He felt that Pietro loved the girl; he knew that the girl loved Pietro, at least as a sister loves a brother. But she was not a sister; why had it gone no further? Alixe, now a very beautiful woman, a woman of charm greater than beauty, had had many lovers, but no one of them had touched her heart, and this Frenchman and his daughter were on strange terms for a French family. So intimate, so equal had the two been always that the general would not have arranged a marriage for her as would any common father of his country. Alixe must have her free choice. Alixe was no ordinary girl to be happy in a marriage of convenience; she must have love, his Alixe.

But what was Pietro about? And what, moreover, was Alixe about? Did she care for him? Or—his heart sank at the thought—was it possible that her big warm heart was wearing itself out for a man dead or worse than dead—for Francois, shot by the Austrians, or else buried without hope in an Austrian fortress? The general went over this question many times as he walked or rode about the Valley Delesmontes, as he sat in the high dim library, as he lay in bed at night and listened through the stillness to the Cheulte rushing down over its stones half a mile away. He wished above all other wishes to know Alixe married to Pietro; yet when he saw them together he was jealous for the memory of Francois, his boy Francois, whose career had promised so brilliantly, whose dashing courage, whose strength and brains and beauty and charm had been his pride and delight almost as much as the brave bright character of Alixe. He himself had sent the boy away to keep him from Alixe. It might be he had sent him to his death; it might be he had spoiled Alixe's life as well. He could not tell.

He puzzled over it as he came up through the park—and then he saw Alixe and Pietro coming joyfully toward him, running light heartedly, calling to him with excited gay voices. It stabbed the general's heart; a quick thought came of that other who had been always with them, now dead or worse, of that other whom these two had forgotten. And with that they were upon him, and Alixe was kissing him, hugging him, pushing a letter into his hand, up his sleeve, into his face—anywhere.

"Father—good news—the best news—almost the best! Father, be ready for the good news!"

"I am ready," the general growled impatiently. "What is this foolery? Sabre de bois! What is your news, then, you silly child?"

And Alixe, shaking very much, laid her hand on his cheek and looked earnestly into his eyes. "Father, Francois is alive!"

For all his gruff self-control the general made the letter an excuse shortly to sit down. Queer, that a man's knees should suddenly bend and give way because of a thrill of rapture in a man's psychological makeup! But the general had to sit down. And then and there all that had been extracted from little Battista was rehearsed and the letter read over from start to finish.

The letter, still kept in that cabinet in Virginia, told them all that has already been written or told, and which was of importance to this chronicle. But some of it was what has been quoted about the old days when the three children rode Coq in the park, and about the morning when the Marquis Zappi came with his little boy, Pietro. The general, hearing that, was afflicted with all varieties of a cold, and Alixe choked, reading it, and broke down and read again, half crying, half laughing.

"But he is alive, father! Alive! That is happiness enough to kill one. I never knew till now that I feared he was dead."

And the general, getting up and striding about fiercely, ripped out savage words such as should be avoided—many of them—and alternating with symptoms of sudden severe influenza. Then he whirled on the two.

"Alive—yes! But in prison—in that devil's hole of an old castle!" And Alixe looked at Pietro and laughed, but the general paid no attention. "He must be got out. There is no time to waste. Diable! He is perishing in that vile stable! What was that the lad said about the doctor's speech, that only a long sea voyage could save him? One must get him out, mon Dieu, quick!"

Alixe, her hand on his arm, put her head down on it suddenly and stood so for a moment, her face hidden. Pietro, his hands thrust deep in his pockets, looked at the general with wide gray eyes, considering. With that Alixe flashed up, turned on the young Italian, shaking her forefinger at him; her eyes shone blue fire.

BRILLIANT DISPLAY MARKS CELEBRATION

Fall of Bastile Commemorated in Paris—400 Aeroplanes Fly Simultaneously.

Paris, Special: Half a million Parisians, celebrating the anniversary of the fall of the Bastile at the president's annual review of the Paris garrison today saw 20 military aeroplanes rise at the far end of the Long Champs race course and in perfect alignment of fours fly at full speed past the presidential stand.

A mighty roar of cheers swept over the grounds and kept on as 30,000 troops, comprising cavalry, artillery, infantry and other branches, marched in close order before the reviewing stand.

Another minute of excitement was provided when at the close of the review 2,000 currassiers in bright steel breastplates and brass helmets charged, swords in air to within 30 paces of the president.

Brilliant weather brought out a large number of distinguished guests, including most of the diplomatic corps, the French cabinet ministers, the speakers of the chamber of deputies and senate and a host of society people.

The troops of all the garrisons in France also paraded, and the military authorities calculated that over 400 army aeroplanes were on the wing at one time in various parts of the country.

Fireworks displays, military bands, public dancing, free performances at theaters in Paris and all the other cities, towns and villages of France were provided at the expense of the government.

"SOMEBODY OUGHT TO BE IMPEACHED"

Julius Chambers, in the Brooklyn Eagle.

Word comes from Bogota, "under the ocean led," that a special session of the Colombian congress was convened for ratification of the Thomson-Urrutia treaty between that country and the United States, under which the latter government is to pay to Colombia $25,000,000 and accord to it, in addition, privileges of free passage for its warships through the Panama canal. Naturally, the ratification was rushed through the Senate and House, although a minority did not think sufficient compensation had been offered.

Colombia never saw so much money at one time and the graft that will arise out of spending it will be something marvellous to a tropical mind.

Some day I'll tell how the Panama $10,000,000 was "milked."

But, the question is seriously asked: "Will Colombia actually be paid this blackmail?"

This is not a subject about which one can talk with calmness. To discuss the possibility of congress at Washington yielding to the appeal of Mr. Bryan in this matter is calculated to cause one's spleen to get active. And the opponents of free passage for American coastwise ships actually are so illogical as to advocate that very concession to Colombia, with other special privileges on the Panama railroad. If an exemption of tolls to American vessels is a violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, how can the United States grant such favors to another nation?

Purposely, I have avoided mention of the most humiliating feature of the treaty, namely, the apology therein for having thwarted the original Colombian "hold-up." Had the Colombian congress accepted the Hay-Herran treaty, the second Hay-Pauncefote document would have been of very different text. Colombia is to blame for the position in which she finds herself. She played a bolder game than did Nicaragua and lost out in the same way.

Within the past three months I have heard sincere supporters of the administration say that somebody ought to be impeached for the suggestion of national humiliation contained in the text of this Colombian treaty.

ANOTHER ROMANCE FOR SOCIETY GIRL

CECELIA MAY.

The announcement of the engagement of Miss Cecelia Jacquelin May, the youngest daughter of Colonel and Mrs. Henry T. May, of Washington, to Wilhelm Von Rath, of the German embassy staff, recently made by Colonel May, reveals the second romance in the life of this beautiful society girl.

The first romance came in her debutante year, when her engagement to Robert Bacon, jr., son of the French ambassador was announced.

ECZEMA ITCHED AND BURNED

R. F. D. No. 4, Box 55, Holland, Mich.—"My child's trouble began by getting red and sore around her neck, and her face, behind her ears, under her arms, and different parts of her body were affected. The eczema appeared in a rash first. It was wet and looked as if it was sweaty. It seemed to itch and burn so that she could not sleep or rest. It got so bad at last that behind her ears was one crust or sore so that I had to cut her hair. There was a hard crust covering her neck. She could not have her clothes buttoned at all. I could hardly change her clothes. It caused an awful difigurement for the time. She would cry when I had to wash her.

"We had her treated for some time but without success. I got one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment and I had not used more than half of what I bought when she was all cured." (Signed) Mrs. G. C. Riemersma, Mar. 21, 1914.

WORLD'S BEST LIVE STOCK AT FAIR.

In various parts of the world there are communities which have gained fame as the producers of the most perfect pure bred live stock. If Iowa farmers had the opportunity of traveling to far distant lands they might come upon these famous districts, where the most noted blood lines of some of the famous breeds of live stock are so highly developed. There is the famous district of La Perche, in France, from whence the massive, powerful, intelligent Percheron horses come. There is that district in Belgium where the Belgian draft horse, so ideal in conformation, has been developed. There are districts in England where climate and soil and years of intelligent breeding have brought forth special breeds of live stock which prove a real blessing to mankind. On the Island of Guernsey a breed of dairy cattle has been developed through centuries of patient selection and study, which animals are indeed marvelous in their powers of milk production. The same is true of the Jersey isle adjoining it, and a traveler could wander over the globe and find numerous such districts. All of these, however, are brought to the very door of the Iowa farmer by the Iowa State Fair.

This year's Fair, to be held Aug. 26 to Sept. 4, will again be the mecca for all the greatest live stock exhibitors

OPENING OF PANAMA CANAL.

The opening of the Panama canal will be portrayed at the Iowa State Fair this fall, Aug. 26 to Sept. 4, at the big night show as put on by the Pain Fireworks company. Marvelous ingenuity is shown in putting on this production. The opening of the canal is an event of tremendous importance to this country, and therefore any opportunity to learn of the canal is seized with eagerness by the American people. This production at the big night show at the Fair will afford the best opportunity Iowa people have yet had of becoming acquainted with the canal. The scenic setting is over 400 feet in length and shows a portion of old Panama City, Limon bay, the mountains in the distance, the Gatun locks and the Atlantic shown in the perspective. The opening of the canal takes place with officers of this country and foreign governments present, and patriotic exercises are held. Upon signal from Colonel Goethals the great engineer who constructed the canal, there is a flash and a terrific detonation. This represents the dynamiting of the last obstacle between the two great oceans

DRAFT HORSE FUTURITIES EXCITING.

One of the most exciting days at the live stock pavilion during the Iowa State Fair last year was the one given over to the judging of draft horse futurities. A magnificent bunch of youngsters were in the ring. There was big money to be won, the stakes amounting to $4,000. There were honor and recognition for the winner. When the ribbons were finally placed there was a great demonstration of enthusiasm. The Percheron filly Conceorous, which carried off the honors in the Percheron division, was sold after the contest for $2,000. At this year's Fair, to be held Aug. 26 to Sept. 4 at Des Moines, there promises to be still greater interest in the futurity. A total of $4,000 is again being offered in premiums.

PILOT LIGHTING PLANTS

HOME MADE ACETYLENE for LIGHTING and COOKING

You have probably noticed that a Pilot Country Home Acetylene burner is shaped like the letter "Y."

And that the little gas openings in the arms of the burner are only pin hole size. So small they let out only half of a cubic foot of Acetylene in an hour.

You might leave one of these Acetylene burners open by accident all day—and even then there wouldn't be gas enough in the air of the room to enable you to set fire to it if you tried.

And the chance of your leaving a burner open that long is not worth considering. The pungent odor of the escaping gas would be certain to attract attention in a few seconds.

Insurance reports say that in a list of 10,000 recent fires and accidents caused by illuminants, 9990 were charged to the misuse and abuse of electricity, kerosene, gasoline and city gas, and only ten to the misuse and abuse of Acetylene.

The new Pilot Outdoor Acetylene Generator is a frost proof type. Built to set in an out of the way corner of the back yard far from the buildings it supplies with gas.

You should own an Outdoor Pilot and use home-made Acetylene yourself to light your house and barns and to cook your meals.

KLEMME, IOWA

Jokers or propagendists frequently take advertising space in English papers and publish some sentimental or humorous propositions. One of the best instances of this was seen recently in the "agony column" of the morning paper; "Scion of noble family has island for sale. Wild scenery and precipitous cliffs; single gun on adjacent mainland would dominate only possible place of disembarkment. Ideal for colonization by suffragets. Though advertiser is conservative, would gladly come to bargain terms with present government or high-minded philanthropist with country's weal at heart."

The Cistercian abbey of La Trappe is situated in a valley of Normandy, France, and was founded in 1140. In the 16th century it became demoralized but in the 17th century it was restored to religion by the Abbot Le Bouthelier de Rance. The new regime called for 11 hours daily being devoted to prayer, and the rest of the time was devoted to hard labor and silence. The order is still in existence, and the faces of the members are still covered by hoods.

Two children, a boy and a girl, each 12 years old, disappeared from their homes in a middle western city the other day. The parents of one received this note by mail: "No use to hunt further. We are died. A auto truck struck us as we cross the street, so we are both died. Good-by." In spite of this positive assurance of an untimely ending of two young lives, the parents notified the police to be on the lookout for a pair of runaways.

The Wisconsin industrial commission has issued a shop bulletin entitled, "Gear Accidents and Their Prevention," in an effort to reduce fatalities caused by unguarded gears. It is shown that more than 2,000 accidents have occurred since 1911, and that employers are rapidly learning that repairs, adjustments and oiling are dangerous operations when machinery is running.

Boric acid in considerable quantities is generally recognized as an original constituent in the waters and gases given off with volcanic emanations. In fact, the Tuscan fumaroles in Italy have been an important commercial source of boric acid for a long time. There is abundant evidence of the presence of boric acid in volcanic emanations in many parts of the world.

The Painconecas were a race of Indians of northern Bolivia, at one time very numerous. They were much occupied with agriculture and many were converted by the Jesuits and joined the Mission of the Conception, where, in 1831, there were about 500 of them. They were supposed to come of the same stock as the Paunacas, a tribe mentioned by Fernandez.

Henry a Meals, of York Springs, Pa., has a pair of brass trimmed spectacles that have been handed down through four generations. They served his greatgrandfather until his death at the age of 90, his grandfather until he was 92, his father until he was 80, and at present, at the age of 75, Mr. Meals is still using them.

Nicolas Poulssin, the great painter of religious subjects, is known as the French Raphael. He was born in Normandy in 1584 and died in Rome in 1665. Among his most celebrated works are the "Seven Sacraments" and "Capture of Jerusalem." He also was a painter of landscapes.

Boyce Lake captured a baby seal off Lobster rock, Lynn, Mass., after a fight with the mother seal. The younger seal headed for his boat thinking it a big fish, but when Mr. Lake pulled the smaller seal into the boat, the mother fought until the shore was reached

Residents of Wallace, Id., assert that the destruction of the forests near there has almost caused a water famine in the locality. The flow of one stream, they declared, was cut from 1,000 miners' inches—the unit of measurement—to less than 250 miners' inches.

It is predicted that by 1915 western Canada will produce 600,000,000 bushels of wheat annually. The population is increasing more rapidly than the railroad development, and there is serious apprehension that it will not be possible to handle the enormous crops.

The Hamburg, Germany, court of appeals has confirmed the findings of a lower court in the case of the French sardine manufacturers versus the Norwegians, who sell sprats under the sardine label. The judgment of the higher court definitely upholds the rights of the French manufacturers.

A popular drink among the peasants of Russia is called quass It is made by pouring warm water over rye or barley meal. It is a fermented liquor and is very sour, but has been used for years by these poverty-stricken people.

Profits in the South American buchu leaf industry are expanding remarkably, owing to the limited supply, as compared with the demand. Five years ago the annual output of 291,334 pounds was valued at $44,776, where today an output of only 223,021 pounds is valued at $186,664.

The town of Bulger, Colo., has been sold for the cash consideration of $1. H. M. Ayelsworth, the purchaser, will plant oats on the main street and will build a corral on the site of the Bulger hotel. The ornamental street lighting system of the town will be left intact.

Thirteen acres of land in Columbus, Ohio, are to be utilized as a municipal nursery for plans, shrubbery and trees. The trees and plants will be raised for transplanting to street parkways. It is said that work-house labor will be employed on the property.

Iowa Father of Young Wanderer Goes After Railroad for Heavy Damages.

Shenandoah, Ia., Aug. 1.—V. V. McIntosh, of this city, has started an action in federal court in which he asks $100,000 from the Iron Mountain railroad company because of the shooting of his son, Verne McIntosh, by a special officer of the company. Young McIntosh returned here only a few days, coming direct from a hospital at Little Rock, Ark., where he had been a patient since June 16. According to relatives here, the young man was doing only a temporary hobo stunt at the time he was shot.

The petition states that on the night of June 16 last, while preparing to board a train at Argenta, Ark., D. J. Williams, a special agent of the railroad, shot McIntosh through the breast. Young McIntosh had been employed on the farm of an uncle, P. J. Kennedy, near Roe, Ark., and with two cousins was enroute to Kansas for the harvest fields. They planned to visit Little Rock to see a labor agency and had reached Argenta, a suburb of the Arkansas capital.

There, it is recited, the special agent was having some trouble with a tramp, that he kicked the tramp from the train and followed him to the ground, finally firing one shot from a heavy caliber revolver, the bullet passing through McIntosh's breast.

It is claimed that the train pulled out and McIntosh was left dying on the ground, where he remained for two and one-half hours before an ambulance was secured and he was taken to a Little Rock hospital, where he remained 14 days.

DOCTOR REFUSES TO "GIG" ON HOSPITAL CRITICISM

Clinton, Ia., Aug 1.—Dr. D. S. Fairchild, vice president of the American Medical association, president of the American Association of Railway Surgeons, and editor of the Journal of the Iowa Medical association, has been disbarred from treating patients in either of the Clinton hospitals, presumably because he published a communication in a Clinton paper saying that on account of lax methods of hospital management, one life has been sacrificed for every nurse trained in the operating rooms of the local hospitals.

Commenting on the actions of the hospitals Dr. Fairchild said:

"This move on the part of the hospital authorities was taken in secret convention and without notice to me, so I have been tried, convicted and punished withou a hearing. I have been advised that if I will retract what I have said, and will promise to be good, that the action of the board will be rescinded, and if this retraction is not made before the first of August, my head goes 'into the bucket.' All that I have said I believe and know to be absolutely true."

WOMAN AUTO DRIVER RUNS DOWN OLD SOLDIER

Storm, Lake, Ia., Aug. 1.—James Harris, an old soldier and long time resident of Storm Lake, was run over by a car driven by Miss Mabel Nylander, daughter of a local plumbing shop proprietor, Wednesday night. Mr. Harris, with two companions, started across the street just as the car swung around the corner. His companions escaped, but he failed to step back in time and Miss Nylander did not see him soon enough to stop the car. It was feared at first that he had received fatal injuries, but he revived soon after being taken to a hospital and was later taken to his home.

Ida Grove, Ia., July 31.—Albert Kolb the 16-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Kolb, residing northwest of Ida Grove, narrowly escaped being hurt in an automobile spill last evening, as he was coming to this city. He had left his mother and other members of the family at a neighbor's for an evening visit As he was passing another automobile on a newly graded road the car skidded through the loose dirt and struck the embankment at the side of the ditch with sufficient force to turn it over on its side throwing young Kolb clear of the car.

PRIEST SERIOUSLY INJURED IN COLLAPSE OF OLD WALL

Rockwell City, Ia., Aug. 1.—Father Marx, priest in charge of the Catholic church here, was seriously injured yesterday and was taken to a hospital at Fort Dodge. He was assisting to remove the vaults from the old court house, preparatory to converting the building into a Catholic school. A large mass of stone and brick gave way and Father Marx was caught under the debris. Several ribs were broken and one lung was badly lacerated. His injuries are considered very serious.

LEMARS MAN DEFENDANT IN $10 000 ALIENATION CASE

LeMars, Ia., Aug. 1.—Charles Knudson has started a suit against Arthur Hamilton, in which he asks alienation damages of $10,000. The plaintiff claims Hamilton enticed Mrs. Knudson from the Knudson home at Camrose, Alberta, Canada, in August, 1912, and took her to California and Washington.

The case was originally filed in Pocahontas county, but is brought here on a change of venue, following a showing that Hamilton is a resident of LeMars. He has lived here only a few months.

OSCAR BERGER SUFFERS STROKE OF PARALYSIS

Ida Grove, Ia., Aug. 1.—William Jones, county superintendent of schools, received word last night that his brotherinlaw Oscar Berger, had been stricken with paralysis at a hotel in LeMars, and that his condition is very serious. Mr. Berger is a prominent Mason and members of that order are looking after him until the arrival of his wife and daughter from Seattle, where they reside. Mr. Berger is widely known throughout northwestern Iowa, having been traveling solicitor for a life insurance company for a number of years past. At the time of the failure of the banking houses of E. H. McCutchen & Company, at Holstein, he was assistant cashier of the institution.

STATE STARTS FIGHT ON SHORT WEIGHTING IN DELIVERIES OF ICE

Two Council Bluffs Dealers Are Placed Under Arrest—Other Cities Also in Line.

Council Bluffs, Ia., Aug. 1.—The state department of weights and measures has started an investigation of alleged short weight deliveries of ice in various cities. It is said that complaints have been made in nearly all large cities of the state. Arrests will follow in all cases where investigation shows the complaints to be well founded.

Following a two days' investigation here by E. W. Van Duyn, superintendent of the weights and measures department of the Iowa pure food department, and C. O. Frazer, deputy inspector, warrants were issued last evening for the arrest of the managers of the Bloomer Ice & Cold Storage company and the Droge Elevator company, charging them with violation of the law.

Two informations were filed against each. One charges short weights and the other neglect to use scales or make any pretense of weighing the ice. Both of the firms have ice plants and all of their sales have been based upon the original weight of the water contained in the cans before freezing. This is 300 pounds. The ice taken directly from the refrigerating rooms and delivered to the customers will weigh the full amount expected if the cans were filled, but after an hour or two in the heated air there is considerable loss from melting. Many of the cakes weighed by the inspectors were short more than 40 pounds. One sale to a Broadway butcher of eight cakes was billed to him at 2,400 pounds, but at the time of delivery the driver detected the presence of the inspectors and weighed each cake on the butchers' scales. The eight cakes weighed 2,167 pounds.

HIGHWAY COMMISSION IN HIGH AND MIGHTY MOOD

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 1.—Complaints are being made from various counties of the state that the newly created highway commission is seeking to exercise autocratic powers over the county supervisors, threatening all kinds of trouble to those officials who do not knuckle to every whim and demand of this bureau. If the members of this commission correctly interpret their powers and privileges the county supervisors, rather time-honored institutions, are mere fillers on the official horizon.

The commission has been "in Dutch" with a number of county boards and in order to strike terror into the hearts of these local officials, and make them duly subservient, an action was started yesterday by the commission to oust the members of the Davis county board of supervisors. The members of the Davis county board have been insisting on having a voice in the road and bridge work in that county and have refused to comply with orders from the commission not in line with their judgment.

MANY MASONS ATTEND IOWA CITY DEDICATION

Iowa City, Ia., Aug 1.—Officers of the Grand Masonic lodge of Iowa, assisted at impressive ceremonies dedicating the new Masonic temple here yesterday. Most Worshipful Grand Master Charles W. Walton of Dubuque presided over the dedication ceremonies.

The new Masonic building was crowded with Masons and their wives and members of the Eastern Star order. Members of the Masonic order from Cedar Rapids, Des Moines, Muscatine, Davenport and many of the smaller cities of the state made what is perhaps the largest crowd of Masons ever gathered together for the dedication of a temple in Iowa.

SPECIAL POLICE OFFICER UNDER BURGLARY CHARGE

Council Bluffs, Ia., Aug 1.—Lee Conrad Kohl, special member of the Council Bluffs police force, was placed under arrest here on a charge of burglary, preferred by County Attorney Capell for Arthur H. Stolz, a prominent merchant here. Kohl was seen by Stolz at a public meeting wearing a diamond pin with one stone missing, which was part of the loot recently taken from the Stolz home. Chief of Police Vien named Kohl last Saturday as one of the special officers to help guard the western portion of the city, where prowlers have been attacking women and committing many depredations. Kohl claims he bought the pin.

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL MAY REDUCE GENERAL LEVY

Des Moines, Ia., Aug 1.—The state executive council yesterday afternoon agreed upon a reduction of one-tenth mill in the state levy for 1914 Definite action was delayed until today, owing to the absence of one member of the council.

The one-tenth mill reduction based upon the present assessed valuations represents nearly $200,000 in revenue which the state will get along without next year. The levy for 1913 was 2.9 mills. The levy for 1914 will be 2.8 mills.

MAINE COMMITTEE WANTS SPEECHES FROM KENYON

Washington, D. C., Aug 1.—Senator Kenyon has received letters from the republican state committee of Maine, urging him to speak there. He said today he will probably do so if congress quits before the Maine election. He will then go to Iowa and enter at once into the campaign for Senator Cummins and the entire republican ticket. He expects to cover much of the state by auto.

WOOL PRICES LOWER.

Sydney, Australia, Aug. 1.—Competition was greatly restricted at the wool sales here today as a consequence of the European crisis. The better descriptions were quoted 10 per cent lower, while the inferior qualities showed an even greater decline. The bulk of the wool offered was withdrawn.

PLYMOUTH WETS NOW ASK SUPREME COURT TO REVIEW PETITION

Claimed That the County Board Was Too Liberal in Honoring Withdrawals.

Des Moines, Ia., July 31.—Plymouth county "wets" yesterday carried their fight in defense of the defunct saloon consent petition in that county to the supreme court. The high court will review the case at the September term. In the meantime a stay order has been issued

The liquor interests assert that the county board of supervisors in passing upon the statement of consent, honored a number of withdrawals sufficient to render it invalid. The withdrawals were filed, it is claimed, on November 17, 1913, after the board had begun the canvass of the document. Petitioners hold this to be illegal, and that the withdrawals, to have been effective, should have been filed before the case was opened.

The "wets" appealed to the district court and again were defeated. The court also honored the withdrawals and declared the statement invalid. The object of the writ is to secure a review of the court's proceeding with reference to this case.

It is declared that Plymouth county has 5,178 voters and that the petition filed had 3,700 signatures, or 65 per cent of the total number.

The result of the temperance fight in Plymouth county has been to cut the number of saloons operated from 32 to four. The four remaining saloons are all in the city of LeMars. That city suffered a cut from 11 to four establishments in the past year.

The anti-liquor element has served notice on the "wets" that they will never be able to get another petition of consent in Plymouth county. They assert that the saloons in that district are gone forever. However, the "wets" are making a tremendous fight to hold their ground.

MAN "KILLED" BY AUTO ENJOYING DAILY MEALS

Meriden, Ia., July 31.—Sioux City, Omaha and Des Moines newspapers carried an item detailing the death of Jessie Weise, son of J. E. Weise, as the result of an automobile accident near Cherokee Saturday. Instead of being dead, Mr. Weise is enjoying his daily meals and making rapid recovery from the effects of the accident. The Cherokee correspondent evidently thought the accident would result fatally and therefore put on the finishing touches without taking the trouble of making investigation.

QUITS MINISTRY TO TAKE POSITION IN BANK

Webster City, Ia., July 31.—L. H. Sours has filed with the board of trustees his resignation as pastor of the Chrisitian church in this city. He asks that it take effect October 1. He has accepted the assistant cashiership in the State Savings bank, at Hampton, and has also been made a director of that institution. This bank has just recently reorganized. Mr. Sours was formerly pastor of the Christian church at Hampton and came from that town to Webster City about two years ago. When he resigned the pastorate of the Hampton church it was his intention to enter business life and permanently leave the ministry. The Webster City church made him a flattering offer, however, and he accepted the place here.

TO MARK IOWA GRAVES OF REVOLUTIONARY PATRIOTS

Des Moines, Ia., July 31.—Five pioneer graves on Iowa soil await adequate marking if it can be established that the occupants served in the Revolutionary war. Since the erections by the Iowa Sons of the American Revolution of a bronze tablet to the memory of five veterans who were laid to rest in Iowa, three other graves of veterans were discovered, and the society will take measures to honor them in a similar way.

The society is still in doubt as to the records of five men who are said to have served in the war, and if the claims can be established, they will be honored with the three veterans already discovered since the erection of the tablet last April. The names of the alleged but not proved Revolutionary heroes are: Martin Linn, Tipton: Lamb, Kilbourn: William Depew, Winterrowed cemetery, Camp ship, Polk county, William Woody, Dahlonega, near Ottumwa, and Adam Ream, near Lowell, Henry county.

WARDEN LOCATES MAN WHO FLED FROM CONVICT CAMP

Des Moines, Ia., July 31.—Warden C. C. McClaughry of the state reformatory at Anamosa passed through Des Moines on his way to Grand Island where he is to get Frank Johnson, the convict who escaped from the road camp at Ames.

Johnson will have to stand trial at Nevada, county seat of Story county, for breaking custody, the warden said. The penalty on conviction is anything up to five years.

"Johnson has been a shifty young fellow, and formerly a cocaine user," the warden said in discussing the case. "I suppose when he saw a chance to escape he just couldn't withstand the temptation."

WILL APPEAL TO VOTERS FOR FRANCHISE RENEWAL

Des Moines, Ia., July 31.—Efforts to secure a street car franchise through the city council were declared ended today and the company will go direct to the people, as provided in the commission system. Four members of the council have pledged themselves to take the stump against granting the franchise on the ground that it places the capital stock of the company too high,

JAPAN MAY PLAY AN IMPORTANT PART IN FAR EASTERN SEA

Believed Only Naval Developments Will Bring Her Into Strife—United States Has Strong Squadron in the East.

Washington, Aug. 1.—The possibility that Japan might become involved in a general war should her ally, England, be drawn into the threatened vortex in Europe, was discussed today in diplomatic circles here The existing treaty of alliance between Great Britain and Japan, signed in 1905 and renewed in 1911, provides that the two countries shall support each other in the event of an attack or aggressive action against either in Eastern Asia or India by another power From time to time there have been rumors of secret clauses greatly extending the scope of the convention, and making it applicable to hostilities conducted outside of the far east, but the existence of such provisions is unknown to the state department or the Japanese embassy here.

That the possibility of Japan's being drawn into any war that might involve Great Britain with Germany or Austria or Italy is believed here to hinge entirely upon naval developments in the far east. In those waters are many vessels of European powers engaged in looking after the interests of their citizens resident in China, Korea and Japan.

Aside from Japan's navy, the international far eastern fleet is made up largely of cruisers. Many of the vessels, however, are more powerful than any of the American warships that followed Dewey's entrance into Manila bay 16 years ago.

Great Britain, including her East Indian squadron, has two battleships, two large cruisers, four light cruisers and 35 smaller craft, including gunboats, destroyers, torpedoes and submarines.

Germany has two armoured cruisers, four light cruisers, seven gunboats and two destroyers.

Russia has four light cruisers, eight small gunboats, 30 destroyers and 12 subnarines, the latter said to be in poor condition.

The French fleet in the orient includes two armored cruisers, five gunboats and one destroyer

Italy had only one cruiser at last reports in Asiatic waters

The American navy in Japanese and Chinese waters comprises one first class cruiser, two third class cruisers, 10 gunboats, two monitors five destroyers and a number of auxiliaries.

REAL SERB KING IS ON RETIRED LIST

KING PETER.

King Peter is the nominal ruler of Servia, but not long ago he put himself on the retired list and left the actual government to his son, the crown prince, who rules just as if he were fully endowed. King Peter is 68 years old.

BRAZIL NAMES RIVER IN COLONEL'S HONOR

Washington, Aug. 1.— The Brazilian government has formally changed the name of the River of Doubt to the Rio Theodoro in honor of Colonel Roosevelt.

This announcement was made by John Barrett, director general of the Panama Commercial Union, who received, today, the official report of the Brazilian commission of which Colonel Rondon was commander, and who accompanied Colonel Roosevelt down the Duvida, as its name is in Portuguese.

It was the desire of the Brazilian expedition, Colonel Rondon stated, to have the Castanna and Duvida rivers, which are practically one, known as the Rio Roosevelt, but at the suggestion of Dr. Lauro Muller, the Brazilian secretary of state for foreign affairs, it was decided to call the newly found stream after Colonel Roosevelt's first name and it has been formally charted as the Rio Theodoro, and the new name promulgated officially by the Brazilian government.

RUN ON BANK.

DOWAGER CUTS VISIT.

London, Aug. 1.—Dowager Empress Marie Feodorovna of Russia, who has come to England intending to visit some weeks with her sister, Queen Mother Alexandra, has decided to return to Russia tomorrow, cancelling her usual visit to Denmark.

...IKE OF FIREMEN AND ENGINEERS NOW OFFICIALLY SET FOR AUGUST 7

...erhood Officers Declare That Strike Order Positively Will ...e into Effect on That Date Unless Railroad Committee Ac... to Demands Filed With Government Mediation Board.

Chicago, Aug. 1.—A strike of 55,000 firemen and engineers on ...railroads operating west of Chicago, has been set for Friday, Au... 7, it was officially announced today. William S. Stone, grand ...ef engineer of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and W. ... Carter, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and ...gnemen, declared the order positively would be put into effect un... the general managers' committee of the railroads accepted the ...nds filed with the federal board of mediation.

...a signed statement Presidents ... and Carter asserted that after ...managers' committee had invoked ...services of the federal board of ...iation and conciliation, the mana... committee had refused to accept ...plan of settlement proposed by the ...eral mediators and declare "Thus ... burden of responsibility of the ...ike must rest on the railroads."

The three principal causes of the ...ike, according to the statement of ...ssrs. Stone and Carter, are.

The manner in which railways have ...udiated arbitration agreements

The manner in which the managers' ...mmittee has excited the anger of the ...gnemen in the service by their ar... ...rary attitude.

Because the railroads seem de... ...mined to force the employes to ...andon the mileage basis of pay ...thout being willing to adopt the ...urly basis of pay; the managers at... ...mpting to force on the employes an ...tirely new basis of pay which they ... pleased to term the "service ...riod."

President Takes Hand.

In a final effort to prevent a strike ...enginemen and firemen on railways ...st of Chicago, President Wilson last ...ght summoned the general mana... ...s' committee, representatives of the ...n and the members of the federal ...diation board to confer with him at ... White House Saturday. This ...tion followed the failure of the ...diators to bring about an agree... ...nt between the engine crews and ...e roads on the former's demand for ... increse in wages. The president's invitation was accepted by both sides and the men who have been carrying on negotiations here since last October will depart tomorrow for the capital.

William L. Chambers and Judge Martin A Knapp, members of the government board of mediators, conciliation and arbitration, left last night for the capital Several members of the general managers' committee also started for Washington They will advise the President preparatory to the conference tomorrow G W Hanger, third member of the board remained in Chicago for possible developments, though none is expected Mr Hanger asserted that after the board had met separately with the employes and employers for three days the futility of a settlement by mediation was realized.

The commissioners continued to meet with the committees seven days more in the hope of finding some grounds on which the men would agree to arbitration Hope, he said was abandoned yesterday and the mediators notified President Wilson of the situation.

Contention of Both Sides.

The men's statement of their case, as presented to the board, is in part, as follows

"Added responsibilities and the increased cost of living induced the enginemen in the western territory to make certain requests of the managers of their railroads. These requests carried moderate increases in pay and some improvements in working rules, having for their object the standardization of wages and working conditions which were to be revisions and additions to the present schedule."

In their printed statement of their position the enginemen laid emphasis on the increased traffic of the railroads, declaring that more powerful locomotives, larger freight cars and longer trains had vastly increased the earning power of the roads and had added correspondingly to the responsibilities of the enginemen, with no corresponding increase in their pay.

The managers' committee replied that railroad conditions at the present time do not justify any increases in wages. The demands of the men, according to the managers, center upon the substitution of an eight-hour day for a 10-hour day in the computation of overtime.

"The employes know," the managers' statement asserts, "that it would be impractical to reduce the actual working day in train service to eight hours. To do so it would be necessary to shorten practically all railway divisions, to relocate yards and shops; in fact, to reconstruct the railways at prohibitive cost The employe know the only effect of changing the basis of a day's wage from 10 to eight hours would be enormously to increase the overtime paid

"In view of the present conditions there could be no justification for the railroads in taking any step that would add greatly to their expenses. The managers of railways have no moral right to accede to requests of employes that would unduly increase the expense of railway operation."

The Mediation Plan.

The plan of settlement as proposed by the federal mediators and which was rejected by the general managers' committee, according to Messrs. Stone and Carter, follows:

"The schedules in effect prior to October 10, 1913, with the amendments thereto and accepted ruling thereon to be restored and continued until changed by arbitration.

"The demands of the two organizations as set forth in their communication of that date to the conference committee of managers and no other question or questions, to be submitted to arbitration under and in accordance with the act of congress of July 15, 1913, commonly known as the Newlands law.

"All subsequent demands of the organizations and all the counter demands of the managers to be withdrawn without prejudice."

ALL AMERICAN EXCHANGES SUSPEND TO END DUMPING OF SHARES BY EUROPEANS

Liquidation Up to Date Has Caused Slump in Paper Value of United States Securities Estimated at $696,967,261—Terrific Shrinkage Prompts Drastic Action—Bank of England Advances Discount Rate and British Cabinet Considers Measures to Prevent Possible Panic.

UNCLE SAM READY TO OPEN HIS STRONG BOX

London, Aug. 1.—The banking situation in London has become so abnormal that it is understood that the British cabinet at its meeting today discussed the possibility of taking measure to prevent a possible panic The Bank of England was today charging 10 per cent for weekly advances —an unprecedented rate.

There has been nothing in the nature of a panic or a run, but officials have been quietly paying out gold and silver since the opening of the bank this morning.

The Bank of England today increased its rate of discount to 8 per cent.

Washington, Aug. 1.—Secretary McAdoo issued a statement today saying the treasury department will help as far as "it legitimately may" in New York or elsewhere during the present situation.

Secretary McAdoo said:

"We are keeping in close touch with the situation. The treasury department will help as far as it legitimately may, in New York or in any other part of the country where it becomes apparent that assistance is needed.

"The Aldrich-Vreeland act, as amended by the federal reserve act, is still in force and the terms on which currency may be issued under that act are now so favorable that resort may be had quickly and effectively to it to meet any emergency. It must be remembered that there is in the treasury, printed and ready for issue, $500,000,000 of currency which the banks can get on application under that law. This is in addition to the resources of the treasury.

"In view of the closing of the foreign stock exchange, the action of the New York stock exchange, of which I have just learned, in closing temporarily, is a reasonable measure of protection to American interests."

It was announced at the White House that every effort would be made for organizing the federal reserve board and putting the new reserve system in operation.

Relief measures contemplated include depositing funds in banks in Chicago, New York and Philadelphia and other cities. The president planned to send to the Senate today or tomorrow the nomination of a man in place of Thomas D. Jones and efforts were begun to find out definitely just what Paul M. Warburg of New York expects to do with regard to his nomination.

New York, Aug. 1.—The New York stock exchange was closed today on account of the European situation. The Consolidated stock exchange and the curb market also ceased business.

This was followed immediately by the announcements of the closing of other exchanges in the chief cities of the country.

This announcement was made by the secretary of the stock exchange:

"The governing committee decided that the exchange be closed till further notice and that all deliveries be suspended until further notice."

With the suspension of business here, transactions in securities the world over came virtually to a halt.

New York for the last few days had been the only great market of the world to carry on business as usual.

This practically closes all of the securities markets in the world open to free trading. The closing of these exchanges was generally expected as many questioned the wisdom of keeping them open and thus affording a market in which foreigners might destroy values

What the European situation thus far has cost the holders of American securities is exhibited in the table showing shrinkage of $696,967,261 in the market value of 135 stocks, and this does not include the entire list. It has been a slaughter in values for which neither the properties concerned nor the affairs of this country have been responsible.

While the market felt the first shiver a week ago yesterday, when there was published the note of Austria to Servia, the real crash came yesterday and the day before.

Within the period named the finest American shares have had there market values rocked as reeds in a gale. Also credits at banking centers are disturbed.

Money rates advances and financial markets generally are hit all by conditions outside the United States.

Canadian Pacific has led in the decline because it is largely held abroad. At the first evidence of trouble the foreigners began disposing of this stock in large volume and latter followed it with others starting the sympathetic movement which has caused all to go down together.

The decline in the price of Canadian Pacific has been 27¼ points, representing a loss in capital value of $70,200,000. Union Pacific has lost $19,000,000; Southern Pacific, $31,000,000; Reading, $15,900,000; Atchison, $16,400,000, and United States Steel, common, $48,000,000. All classes of American securities have suffered from the unloading by Europe.

The stock exchange in London and the big provincial cities as well as those on the continent were closed owing to the break down of the credit system which was made complete by the postponment of the Paris settlement. This, it was pointed out, would necessarily be followed by the failure of some 50 members of the London stock exchange.

J. P. Morgan today issued a statement which said:

"Alarming as the news is from Europe, we are still hoping there will not be a general war. While the gravity of the present situation can hardly be exaggerated, there is still the opportunity for the sober second thought of the people of Europe to prevail over their first impulses.

"The situation of the American security market during the last few days has been a splendid illustration of the inherent soundness of financial conditions in this country. While we all earnestly hoped that the New York stock exchange might be kept open, the situation is fraught with so much uncertainty that it seemed necessary in the interest of the whole country to close the exchange.

"It is essentially a time for the owners of American securities to keep their heads. Bear in mind that the actual properties represented by American securities will not suffer greatly by an European war.

"It is idle to say that America will not be hurt by a general European war. The wholesale waste of capital involved in such a catastrophe would result in a distribution of losses the world over, but the loss here would be infinitesimal compared with the losses to the countries immediately involved. There is no doubt that the whole American people will co-operate to restore normal conditions throughout this country at the earliest possible moment."

Stock exchanges have notified their offices not to make deliveries for received stock until further notice.

William C. Van Antwerp, a governor of the exchange, said that it was the first time since 1873 that business had been suspended for a full day.

The movement of gold to Europe, which has reached unprecedented proportions during the last few days, was continued. The steamship St. Louis which sailed for Europe today, carried the largest amount of gold ever taken from any port of the world on a single vessel. The total value of the cargo was $11,025,000. The total on this movement of gold in five days aggregates $45,435,000.

Members of the board of governors of the stock exchange said the board would probably ask the banks not to call any loans due today or at any time while the stock exchange remained closed. The banks, it was believed, would agree to such an arrangement.

The board of governors is in favor of restricting all outside or private purchases or sales of securities by any of the members.

The conference of bankers was resumed at Morgan & Co.'s offices in the early afternoon with some additional participants, including Paul M. Warburg, of Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

Several of the bankers expressed belief that the tension would show some relaxation over night. Another subject which will be given consideration is the matter of gold export. It was the opinion that lack of American vessels and the increasingly prohibitive rates of insurance would soon bring that outflow to an end.

It was learned that some of the Canadian banks were calling loans and withdrawing some of their reserves from banks in this city. The amounts withdrawn by the Canadian banks was said to be relatively small.

...SERVIANS REPEL ATTACKS ...OF GREAT AUSTRIAN ARMY

London, Aug. 1.—An Exchange Telegraph company's dispatch from Nish, Servia, via Saloniki, says that up till last night the Austrian invaders at Semendria had not succeeded in forcing the lines held by the Servian troops, possession of which would give them access to the Moravia river valley and thus open up a direct road to Nish.

Another dispatch from Nish to the Exchange Telegraph company says desperate fighting continues along the River Drina. Both Austrians and Servians have sustained heavy losses. The Austrian divisions, after fighting fiercely all day, failed to force the defile leading to Pleviie and Priepolie.

Dispatches from Nish, in Servia, and from Vienna told of encounters between Austrian and Servian troops, on the frontiers, but authentic details of the fighting were lacking. It seems certain that conflicts between the frontier guards have occurred, but military men here point out that stories of fighting with heavy losses such as that said to have occurred at Jadar are absurd, as it would be impossible, for the Servians in the time at their disposal to cross the Drina and advance 20 miles within Austrian territory. It is also argued that the announcement that 500,000 Austrian soldiers were on the march into Servia is practically incredible.

It is said that Austria cannot have 500,000 men on the move in less than six weeks.

Vienna, Aug 1.—Austrian frontier guards today repelled a strong attack by Servians near Klotievatz on the Bosnian frontier without suffering loss. The Servians lost one officer and 22 men.

Popular enthusiasm in connection with the war against Servia shows no signs of abatement. An appeal from Red Cross nurses today met with an immediate response from 1,000 women and girls belonging to all classes. Archduchess Marie Theresa applied to Emperor Francis Joseph for permission to be enrolled as a Red Cross nurse.

The police authorities have forbidden the publication of extra editions of the newspapers and even the regular editions have not been permitted to refer to the occupation of Belgrade, which is still not generally known. The Austrian plan of campaign, it is understood here, is to attack Servia chiefly by way of Bosnia, while the armies on the Danube in the north simply occupy positions and remain temporarily inactive

TOURISTS IN EUROPE FACE DIFFICULTY IN ESCAPING WAR ZONE

Thousands of American Globe Trotters in Wild Rush to Get Away.

MANY ARE SHORT OF MONEY

Already Find It Difficult to Cash Checks—Passenger Liners to Curtail Trans-Atlantic Service.

London, Aug. 1.—Americans visiting Europe received a shock today when it was announced that the sailing of the Imperator from Hamburg for New York had been cancelled owing to the unsettled situation. There was a rush to steamship offices to endeavor to book passages but few or none were to be had as all the ships were filled to capacity until the middle of September. Business men, to whom it was imperatively necessary to get back to America, offered premiums for berths but even then could not get the lucky possesors to give them up.

Paris, Aug. 1.—The Paris offices of the German steamship lines sold tickets today with the condition that the money would be refunded in case war put a stop to the sailings. Many travelers may be delayed until the new year before being able to get home to the United States should hostilities occur.

There was a steady demand today at the Paris offices of all the lines by those who have return reservations, many of whom requested earlier accommodations. Most of the boats are already fully booked until October 15, but on some of the liners a few expensive cabins are disengaged.

Many American tourists, apprehensive of being caught in Europe without considerable quantities of cash, have been selling checks on New York. On Tuesday they received five francs and 12 centimes for each dollar. Today only five francs were offered them. Some of the American banking agencies here are importing English gold to supply their customers.

A semi-panic has broken out among some of the American travelers who see the possibility of being kept in Europe indefinitely, should a general war break out as nearly half of the passenger steamers probably will cease running on the trans-Atlantic service.

...WIDESPREAD BLOCKADE OF ...SHIPPING NOW THREATENS

WILSON HAS PLAN.

Washington, Aug. 1.—President Wilson has a plan in mind for bringing much of the shipping of the world under the American flag during European troubles by having congress pass a law admitting to American registration the vessels of other nations. He summoned Senator Kern and Representative Underwood, the majority leaders of the Senate and House, to the White House today to discuss the advisability of introducing such bills in congress.

The president believes that the merchant ships of European nations would be glad to register under the American flag at this time in order to prevent being pressed into service or being captured as prizes. Under existing laws it is impossible for foreign ships to take American registration.

The shipping situation is becoming ...ious throughout the world. The ...ernments which are about to be... ...me involved in a general European ... have commenced commandeering ...els for the transportation of troops ... war supplies.

England holds a distinct advantage ...er all other countries in respect to ... merchant marine. The German ...ssels were the first to be withdrawn ...om trans-Atlantic service. The Hamburg-American and the other big liner companies have withdrawn their ships from commerce

A general shipping tieup is feared, though all nations are endeavoring to keep commerce open. Should a general blockade follow a declaration of war, Europe will suffer greatly as a result of her inability to secure food and war supplies.

INSURANCE CONCERNS TO WITHDRAW FROM FIELD

San Francisco, Aug 1.—To an insurance company here asking for rates on foreign shipments, Lloyds of London, cabled in reply today.

"No quotations possible. War believed inevitable on all sides."

Lloyds' San Francisco manager said, in commenting on the cable, that he had not been given to understand that quotations had been suspended but that they probably were so erratic that it was useless to put them out, because a quotation offered now might not stand 10 minutes hence.

The uncertainty over insurance rates has thrown the export business here into the greatest confusion and hesitancy. The voyage to Europe is so long that no shipper cares to risk the chances of the passage without insurance.

Two French sailing vessels, three British steamships, one Norwegian steamship, one American and one British sailing vessel, and a Danish steamship are lying in the roadstead or at their piers, all under charter and all laden with barley consigned to British and other malsters.

None of them will sail until they obtain insurance.

JEALOUS NEBRASKA MAN SHOOTS WIFE'S FRIEND

Fremont, Neb., Aug. 1.—Jealous over alleged attentions to his wife, Joseph Hejhal last night shot Rouscka Overheat. He fired without warning while Rouscka was at the home of Joe Swoboda, at Howells.

Hejhal was captured under a bed at his home in Howells this morning by Marshal Dickey and taken to Schuyler. Rouscka is in a serious condition. Both men are prominent retired Bohemian farmers, and both are past 60 years of age. Hard feeling had existed for years between them because Rouscka was friendl towards Hejhal's wife.

England Is Playing Waiting Game and Preparing to Fight

London, Aug. 1.—England, like France, is playing a waiting game. The attitude throughout Great Britain is one of expectancy. The British public and the British ministry will be surprised if war does not come. In the meantime all naval and military preparations for the impending clash have about been completed.

Official announcement of the resumption of the "conversations" at St. Petersburg and Vienna came today at a moment when pessimism had taken possession of all Europe. The hope that it might lead to a peaceable solution was grasped with desperation, but the news was offset later by the proclamation of martial law in Germany, which was regarded as a preliminary to the mobilization of the German forces for war.

Everybody then seemed to settle down to await the news that the great European powers had decided to engage in a struggle for supremacy. There was nothing to give the public hope that a general war might be averted.

The prevailing public opinion here is determined that England must observe her unwritten obligation to assist France in her difficulties with Germany, but a small body of radicals continues to utter objections to England's involving herself in the quarrels of the continental powers.

LARGER LOCALS

Mr. and Mrs. Levi Neese returned home, Tuesday. They have been spending their vacation attending school at the Iowa State College at Ames, and among relatives and friends at Webster City and various other points.

Klemme dropped the game to Belmond, Sunday, by the score of 9 to 3. The game was not so much one-sided as the score might indicate, but the locals were unable to hit at opportune time. A large number from here were in attendance.

All those indebted to Thomas Frankson for livery hire, will please call and settle with Mr. C. L. Yahnke at once. All accounts not settled for by August 15th will be turned over to an attorney for collection. Thos. Frankson.

Thomas F. Frankson of St. Paul, who recently acquired the Yahnke livery barn, was down Tuesday and he and Dr. Zinn pulled off a deal that left Dr. Zinn the owner of the Yahnke house and also the livery barn. We presume the Doctor purchased it for speculation and it is hard to tell just who will own the livery business ere long.

Quite a number from here attended a meeting of the I. O. O F. at Goodell, Wednesday, evening. A. F. Hubbard and S. J. Kirkwood were given the initiatory degree. Klemme is the home of a number of members of the I. O. O. F. and there is strong sentiment of starting a local lodge. Klemme would not be any the worse if this comes to pass.

A deal was made Tuesday, whereby J. P. Larson purchased the Meat Market from Chas. F. Busch, possesion to be given September 1st. Mr. Busch has ran the meat market for some time and has always ran a first-class shop. We are sorry to see him leave our business circles, but are glad he will remain with us. Mr. Larson has had previous experience in the butcher business and we look for him to enjoy a successful business and hope his parchase proves a money maker.

The Garner Boosters were here with part of their band, Wednesday morning advertising their big ball tournament and carnival at Garner, next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, August 11, 12 and 13. They are planning one of the best tournaments ever held in that city and have secured the fastest semi-pro teams in Northern Iowa to take part. They have also secured the services of a first-class carnival company. A large number from here will likely be in attendance each day.

Insects Worth Protecting.

Among the common insects of the household are two which are friends of the housewife. If she realized this fact, she would protect them, instead of taking every opportunity to kill them. One of them is the spider, and the other is the so-called "centipede," or "earwig." But the latter is neither an earwig (which is quite a different kind of creature), not yet a centipede. It is a "myriapod," and has fifteen pairs of legs. Like the spider, it is predaceous, attacking and devouring flies and other "undesirables."

Better Than Castor Oil

Children detest castor oil and who can blame them—you do yourself and why expect them to take it?—it is entirely too harsh for a tender stomach.

What they need is something that is mild in action—does not gripe and at the same time is effective in all cases of constipation and troubles arising from indigestion—something they will like to take.

Memoirs of Napoleon

In Three Volumes

The personal reminiscences of Baron de Méneval, for thirteen years private secretary to Napoleon Bonaparte, bring out, as no history can, many enlightening and interesting side lights on the character of that greatest of leaders. De Méneval's descriptions have the piquancy and interest possible only because he was an actual eye-witness of the scenes and incidents of which he writes. Their reliability and historical interest can be judged by the fact that the very conservative French Academy publicly recommends them.

"This is for you, Pietro. If we should lose him now, just as we have found him!. Now is the time for you to show if you can be what is brave and strong, as Francois has shown. It is your castle; you must save him."

Pietro looked at the girl, and the color crept through his cheeks, but he said nothing.

"Alixe, my Alixe," her father put an arm around her. "One may not demand heroism as if it were bread and butter. Pietro will not fail us."

"Alixe always wished me to be brilliant like Francois," Pietro spoke gently. "But I never could."

"Yet, Pietro, it is indeed your time, "Alixe threw at him eagerly. "Francois must be rescued or he will die."

"Yes," Pietro answered quickly. "Francois must be rescued."

He was silent a moment, as if thinking. His clam poised mind was working swiftly; one saw the inner action in the clear gray eyes. The general and Alixe, watching him, saw it.

"I think I know how," he said.

CHAPTER XX.

THE STONE STAIRCASE.

Battista's prisoner stood at the barred window high up the steep side of the castle and stared out wistfully at the receding infinity of blueness—his meadow. In the three months since his letter had gone to France, he had grown old. The juices of his youth seemed dried up; his eyes were bloodshot, his skin yellow; there was no flesh on him The waiting and hoping had worn on him more than the dead level of the hopeless years before. There was a new tenseness in the lightly built figure, even in the long, delicate, strong fingers. The prisoner had caught a whiff of the air of home and was choking for a full breath.

It had not been so before. The brightness of his temperament had done him good service at first. Eager, vehement, energetic, he had the heart of a contented little child, and it had led him to play and be happy in his prison, as a buoyant child will make a boat of the chair in which he is set for a punishment and sail away into adventures. This man, developing out of the boy thrown into prison five years ago, might well prove to have limitations Full of force and fire and gentleness, he had the virtues of his qualities, but he had their defects, too. It might yet well be that he would fall short in sober judgment; it might be that he would not be found fitted for any complication of responsibility. Yet there was in him something of the vision of the mystic, something of that power—called what it may be—which has in all ages worked miracles and moved mountains. Out of his companions, sea and sky and distance—out of great spaces outside and great silence inside his prison he had drawn power, and risen step by step in the years. On the foundation of the Catholicism in which he had been brought up he had built a religion whose breadth reached right and left beyond the old measure and covered living things with the charity which suffers long and is kind; whose height stretched up into hopes undefined, of things unseen All of this had comforted him and kept the glow of his soul undulled

But since Battista's son, the little Battista—who had been a fisherman and not much known about the castle—since he had gone to France with those two letters of Francois' sewed into his right coat sleeve, a restlessness all but unendurable had seized the prisoner. He knew as well as his jailer tales of men thrown into dungeons coming out many years after old and broken—of men never coming out at all. No crueler tyrants than the Austrians ever ruled, and no more pitiless. And now that his letters had actually gone, now that they might actually be in the hands of the people he loved and who loved him, unrest tortured him. He counted the days of the journey, the chances of delay, he made allowances, and at last he believed, with a thrill of joy and of pain at each thought of it, that little Battista must have arrived at Vicques, that his mother and Alixe must have his letters. With that, unrest grew fiercer. They could not help him. What could they do? How could they do anything against the iron wall of Austrian power?

He said such things over to himself, even aloud, to keep down a hope which he could not bear to let grow for fear of the anguish of its slow death. But the hope grew and was anguish in its growth. He could not help hoping, believing that the general, that Pietro, that Alxie, with her force and energy and inventiveness, would yet save him. And the hope and the fear racked him and he wasted away and burned as with fever.

"You are not well, my friend," said the governor. "The doctor must see you."

But Francois refused lightly and laughed and fell to singing an old peasant song of France which he had remembered lately; he got up on the table and droned it to an imaginary fiddle which he pretended to play after the manner of old Jacques Arne, who played for dances in Vicques.

"De tous cote's l'on dit que je suis bete—
Cela se peut! Et cependant j' ne ris
Car, mes amis, si j'y perd la tete,
Je n'y perd pas pour cela, l'appetit!

Assis a table, a l'ombre dune trielle,
Je bois et ris
Et gaiment je m'ecrie
En avalant bouteille sur bouteille,
A quoi sert l'esprit?"

So ran the song. And the governor was taken with a violent fancy for it. He roared at it, and sang it over in fragments till he had learned it, and then he sang it and roared again and slapped his knee; there was a droll comedy in Francois' rendering also, not that Francois must come to his rooms the next night for dinner and sing him the song again and also listen to a to be explained—and the count said new one of his own.

So Francois was taken down the stone staircase and conducted to the two rooms which were the governor's suite. He knew them well, for he had dined, as has been said, many times with the count. But tonight he was left alone a few moments in the outer room, the living room, while the governor was in the bedroom, and he looked about keenly with a strained attention which grew out of the suppressed hope of escape. Who knew what bit of knowledge of the castle might be vital, and who knew how soon? He noted the swords and pistols hanging on the wall, and marked a light saber whose scabbard was brightly polished as if the blade also were kept in good order. On the table he saw the flint and steel with which Count von Gersdorf lighted his pipe; he stepped to the window and bent out, scanning the wall. A stone coping, wide enough for a man's foot, but little more, ran four feet below; 10 feet beyond the window it ended in the roof of a shed, a sloping roof where a man could drop down, yes, or even climb up with ease. A man, that is, who had climbed when a boy as Francois had climbed—like a cat for certainty and lightness. But what then, when one was in the court yard? It was walled about with a stone wall 16 feet high; these old ancestors of Pietro, who had built this place, had planned well to keep Pietro's friend in prison.

So Francois, not hopeful of a sortie by that point, drew in his head from the open window and took to examining the walls of the governor's room. There were three doors—one from the hall by which he had come, one behind which he now heard the count moving in his bedroom, and a third. The count had gone through this last door one night a month before into a dark, winding, stone staircase, and disappeared for three minutes, and brought up a bottle of wonderful wine.

"A fine stock they put down there—the Italians who ruled here for 800 odd years," he had said. "I've lowered it a bit. A good spacious wine cellar and grand old wine. You will be the better for a little." And Francois had watched him as he put the brass key back on the chain which hung from his belt.

At this point of memory the bedroom door opened, and the governor came out, in great good humor and ready to eat and drink as became an Austrian soldier. The dinner was brought in, but Francois, for all his efforts to do his part, could not swallow food, or very little. The fever, the unrest burning in him, made it impossible. Count Gersdorf looked at him seriously when dinner was over; as yet Francois, talking, laughing, singing, had eaten not over half a dozen mouthfuls.

"Certainly you are not well," he said. "I think the doctor should see you." And then he nodded his head and his small eyes gleamed with a brilliant thought. "I know a medicine better than a doctor's." He stood up and his fingers were working at the chain of keys at his belt. Francois watched them and saw the thin, old, brass key which he slipped off. "A bottle of wine of our Italian ancestors—yours and mine, Beaupre"—the count chuckled—"that will cure you of your ills for this evening at least." He slid the key into the lock and said, half to himself, "My little brass friend never leaves the belt of Albrecht von Gersdorf except to do him a pleasure, bless him!" And then, "Hold the candle, Beaupre—well, come along down—it can do no harm and I can't manage a light and two bottles."

So Francois followed down the twisted, headlong, stone staircase and found himself, after rather a long descent, holding the lamp high, gazing curiously about the walls of a large stone room lined with shelves, filled with bottles.

"A show, isn't it?" the Count von Gersdorf demanded. "Here, hold the light on this side," and he went on talking. "The wine is so old that I think it must have been stocked before the time of the last lord of the castle."

And Francois, holding the light, remembering the Marquis Zappi, thought so too. The count pointed to a square stone in the wall which projected slightly, very slightly.

"That is the door to a secret stock of some sort, I have always thought," he said. "Probably some wonderful old stuff saved for the coming of age of the heir, or a great event of that sort. I wish I could get at it," and he stared wistfully at the massive block. "But I can not stir it. And I don't let any one but myself down here—not I." The count turned away and they mounted the two stories of narrow steps, for the governor's rooms were on the second floor, and the staircase ran from it between walls, down underground. "The old chaps must have thought a lot of their wine to have the cellar connect directly with their own rooms—for Battista tells me these were always the rooms of the Za—of the lords of the castle," the governor explained.

And to Francois, considering it, the fact seemed an odd one. And then the governor set to work drinking Pietro's wine, and little thought, as he urged it on his prisoner, how much more right to it the prisoner had than he. It was a wonderful old liquid, full of a strange dim sparkle, and of most exquisite bouquet. As he drank it Francois silently toasted its owner on his return to his own again. He took so little as to disgust the governor, but it put fresh life into him, and when at last he could leave the count, who was by that time more than fairly drunk, he went up to his cold prison under the roof quieter and more at peace than he had been for months.

CHAPTER XXI

A LOAF OF BREAD

The next morning Battista came in with a manner which to the observing eye of his prisoner foretold distinctly some event. He talked more than usual, and more gruffly and loudly, but at last, after wandering about the room some minutes, all the time talking, scolding, he swooped on Francois and thrust a thick paper into his coat and at the same instant his heavy left hand was over Francois' mouth.

"Not a word," he whispered, and then—"The loaf of bread."

Francois, struck dumb and blind, turned hot and cold, and his shaking hand in his coat pocket clutched the letter.

But Battista prodded him with his hard forefinger. "Be careful," he muttered, and then again, "The bread"—and the door had clanged. Battista was gone.

A strong man, who had not been shut away from life, would likely have read the letter instantly, would instantly have examined the long round loaf lying before him. Francois was ill and weak and it was the first word for five years from his own people, which lay in his hand; he sat as if turned to stone, touching the paper as if that were enough; he sat for perhaps 15 minutes.

Then suddenly a breathlessness came over him that something might happen before he could read it—this writing which, whatever it should say, meant life and death to him. Taking care not to rustle the paper, deadening the sound under his bedclothes, he read it, kneeling by the bed. It was four letters—from his mother and Alixe and the general and Pietro; but the first three were short. He felt, indeed, reading them, that no words had been written, that only the arms of the people he loved had strained about him and their faces laid against his, and that so, wordlessly, they had told him but one thing—their undying love. Weak, lonely, his intense temperament stretched to the breaking point by the last three months of fearful hope, it was more than he could bear. He put the papers against his cheek and his head dropped on the bed, and a storm of tears tore his soul and body.

But it was dangerous; he must not be off his guard; he remembered that swiftly, and with shaking fingers he opened Pietro's letter—Pietro's letter which, yellowed and faded but distinct yet, in the small clear writing, is guarded today with those other letters in the mahogany desk in Virginia.

"My dear brother Francois," the letter began, and quick tears came again at that word "brother," which said so much. "My dear brother Francois—this is not to tell you how I have searched for you and never forgotten you. I will tell you that when I see you. This is to tell you how to get out of that house of mine which has held you as a prisoner when you ought to have been its welcome guest. When Italy is free we will do that over; but we must get you free first. Francois, I am now within five miles of you—"

"I am living on a ship, and I will explain how I got it when I see you, in a few days now, Francois. Every night for a week, beginning with tonight, there will be a person watching for you in Riders' Hollow, from midnight till daylight. After that we shall go away for two weeks so as to avoid giving suspicion, and then repeat the arrangement again every night for a week. You do not know Riders' Hollow, and it is unnecessary to tell you more about it than that it is a lonely place hidden in trees, and supposed to be haunted by ghosts of men on horseback; the people about will not go there for love or money except by broad daylight.

"This is the way you are to get there. In the wine cellar of the castle, which opens from the governor's room—in old times always the room of the lord—in that wine cellar, on the north wall, is a square block of stone projecting slightly beyond the wall. If you press the lower corner on the left-hand side of the stone under this, the big stone above will swing out and show an opening large enough for a man to pass. Going through, you close the door by pressing the same stone, and you then will find yourself in an underground passage which leads straight half a mile through the earth to Riders' Hollow. The passage is 500 years old and only the family of the Zappis has ever know of it. I went through it once in my boyhood with my father, and it was in perfect condition, so I believe that it will be now. It was built with solidity—as one may believe, for if the old Zappis wanted it at all they wanted it in working order.

"Your part will be difficult, Francois, but I belive you can do it. You will have to get the key of the wine cellar, or else force the lock. Can you do that? It is necessary to do it, Francois, for we can not get on without you, and we shall from now live only to set you free. I send you something which may be useful."

Francois dropped the letter and picked up the long loaf and tore it apart. There was a file in the center. As if a powerful tonic had been infused into him he felt strength and calmness pour through him. He read the letters over and over till he had them by heart, then he concealed them carefully, with the file, in his mattress. After that he sat down and concentrated his mind, with the new force working in it, on his plan.

The governor was almost certain to have him down to dinner again in two or three days; it was a pity that while he was there, all but on the spot, he could not possess himself of the key and escape. He thought over one or two plans on that basis, but they all shipwrecked on the fact that the guards were accustomed to take him back to his room at 11, and that, failing notice from the governor, they would certainly come to find out why if they were not called. They would start the pursuit; he must have the night clear. So he unwillingly let go of the great advantage of his own presence in the governor's room, so near the scene of action, and planned otherwise. With infinite forethought, with an eye to every contingency possible to imagine, he planned, and when the notice came, two days later, that the Count von Gersdorf wished him to dine with him that night, Francois' heart leaped madly but exultantly, for he was ready.

Never had the young Frenchman been more entertaining, more winning to his tyrant than tonight, but the excitement of what was before him made it almost out of the question to eat the count's dinner. As before, the count prescribed old wine as a tonic, and took Francois with him to get it. Tonight there were three bottles brought up—the count was preparing to drink hard. And Francois had some trouble in not drinking with him; but he kept up his end with singing and acting, with a dance or two out of the peasant repertoire of the Jura, with a mock drill of an awkward squad at Saint Cyr, with clever imitations of the few people whom he had seen about the castle, Battista's gruffness and mangled German words, and the sniffling mixed with grandiloquence of one of the guards; finally he grew daring and imitated the governor's superior officer who had visited the prison six months ago and had seen Francois among the others. Francois, with his body bent out and a fat waddle, and an improvised eye glass and a pursy short breathed manner, spoke of the governor severely, puffing at him between sentences, reproving him, among other things, for having prisoners dine with him.

And the governor roared with delight for this man was his rival and it did his soul good to see him made ridiculous. He roared, and drank to the imitation, and the imitation rebuked his levity throatily, till the governor roared and drank again and shouted for more. And Francois, excited, exhilarated, did more; and still the governor drank as he acted. And the vaudeville went on. So that when the guard came at 11 the count was lying across the sofa, too tipsy to get to bed alone ,and Francois had to wait, pretend to be heavy with wine himself, while the two soldiers put the governor to bed.

At last he was taken up stairs between them, leaning on them limply; at last his door clanged shut; he listened to the footsteps of the two dying away down the stone hall, down the staircase; then swiftly he drew out the file and the letters from his mattress; he hid the papers, wrapped tight in their oilskin cover, in his coat lining; he set to work with the file to finish iron bars already three-quarters filed through. That was done and with fingers that seemed to work as fast, as intelligently as his brain, he tore the bedclothes into stout stripes and tied them together with square knots which would not slip, and tied knots in the line at intervals of a few feet which might keep a man's fingers from slipping. He had to guess how long the rope must be, but the bedclothes were all used and the rope was many yards—it must serve. He put the file, with two candle ends which he had saved, into his pocket; he made one end of the strip fast to an untouched iron bar of his window; he weighted the other end; then he looked about a moment, half to see if all of his small resources had been remembered, half in a glance of farewell to a place where he had passed hours never to be forgottn.

With that he vaulted to the window ledge and took the first knot in a firm grip and let himself out into the dark still night. His feet hung in the air, his hand slid fast—fast—down that poor ladder of torn stuff; the die was cast; he was going to things unknown; he had taken a desperate chance and might not go back. And he slipped down, down, from knot to knot. Suddenly he came to the last knot; he had fastened a bit of wood there so that he might know when he got to the end. What was this? It certainly was the last knot; the bit of wood scraped his hand as he held it; but his feet did not touch ground.

There he hung, swaying in blackness, not knowing how far he might be above the earth, not knowing what to do. Only a moment, for instantly he knew that in any case he could not go back, if he would, up that slight swinging rope; he must drop, whatever happened He bent his knees ready for the fall and let go. With a shock he landed and rolled, bruised and out of breath, but not injured; he looked up and in the dimness saw the last knot with its bit of wood swinging in air 12 feet or so from the ground.

But he had no time given him to consider this point, for at that second, at the far end of the closed yard a door opened, a blaze of light poured out, and a squad of six soldiers stepped from the castle, torches in the hands of the foremost. Francois dropped, crouching into the shadows against the wall, but his heart grew sick as he realized the futility of this. The soldiers were coming straight toward him.

With that, a gleam on a brighter surface than the ground met his sight, below the level of the ground. His eyes searching the darkness, made out a great butt of water, sunken by the castle wall. Instantly he slid into it, upto his neck. It was not quite full, and his head did not show in the shadows of the inside. The blaze of torches swept close, brighter, as Francois, shivering in the cold water, glued himself to the dark side; the blaze of the torches waved, shadowy, gigantic, across the water and the castle wall; he heard the soldiers speak in short deep words; it was like an evil dream, and it slipped past, torches and dark swinging shadows and heavy tread of men and stern voices, like a dream. The heavy door shut, the lights were gone, everything was still.

More dead than alive, Francois dripped from the water butt. The hardest part of his night's job, the part that needed all his strength of body and brain, was immediately before him, and he stood nerveless, with clicking teeth, as limp as the traditional drowned rat. A moment he stood so, utterly discouraged, without confidence, without hope. Then with his trembling lip he framed words, words familiar to him for years and with that, in a shock he felt strength and courage rising in him like a slow clam flood. It was not less a miracle because there was no sign in the heavens, no earthquake or lightning; it was not less a miracle because many people living now might tell of a like help in fearful need. As it was once a long time ago, the water of his blood was changed into wine. So the prisoner stood in the courtyard in the blackness of midnight and found himself ready.

He groped his way to the shed he had seen from the governor's window; with his old boyish agility he scrambled up its sloping roof and felt for the coping he had noticed—the coping wide enough for a man's foot; he had found it; he had found a water pipe above to help him stand on it; he was on the coping, face flat to the wall, working his way with infinite delicate care to the window of the governor. He never knew how long that part took; it seemed a great while though not many feet lay between the shed and the window. Then he felt the stone sill of the window; his hand crept up; it was open—wide open. With a strong pull he had swung himself over and stood in the dark, in the governor's bedroom.

Stood and listened, hardly daring for the first instant to draw the long breath he sorely needed. Then he smiled, necessity for that caution at least, governor was snoring a heavy asive snore which would have dromost noises. Francois stood quiehis eyes had grown accustomed to shadows, and then they searched quickly. Ah! there they were, the ernor's clothes. On a chair by his With wary steps he stole across, lifted off one or two things and denly there was a jingle.

"Ah!" growled the governor flung out his hand, and the snore to a full stop.

The hand searched the darkness second; all but touched that of Fracois, then fell limply, the head turaway, with a deep sigh. Like a stFrancois stood, frozen to the floor, dared not look at the figure stiin the bed, for fear his gaze awake the sleeper. For he slept; sound of the keys had only jarred chord in his uneasy dream. Long utes after the snoring was in progress again Francois waited, then with careful fingers he clasped entire bunch of keys softly and ried them into the next room.

There was a low light there, on writing table. Francois slipped thin, old, brass key which he knew from the bunch; he glanced at quickly and found the flint and on its table and put them in his pocke took down that small saber, its well polished scabbard, and buit about himself; then a thought to him. A sheet of paper lay on governor's writing table as if he been about to write a letter: pen ink were ready. The prisoner drop into the governor's chair and wrote:

"My dear count, I can not run a without leaving a good-by for you a word of thanks for the kindness have shown me. Be sure I shall forget our evenings together and be glad when I hear of your promot as I am sure I shall hear. I hope I am not going to make tro for you. But I have to go—you understand that. With a thou thanks again I am, count, your gr ful prisoner—Francois Beaupre."

under the signature by an after spiration he wrote:

Cela se peut! Et cependant j'en r

Still the count snored. Franco alert, stood and listened as he fol the note carefully and laid it under weight on the table. Then he temp Providence no longer. He slid the tered, bright, old brassy key softly the lock, let himself into the dark sta way, relocked the door on the ins groped his way painfully down steep stairs into the wine cellar, when he felt a level floor under his struck a light with the governor's and steel. He lighted one of his ca ends. The wine cellar, which he left only two hours before, seemed most homelike; it lacked the gover that was all. He crossed to the jecting stone in the north wall, pressed the corner of the stone be Nothing happened. Hurriedly pressed it again, harder, but the even surface of the wall stared blankly in the face. Again he pu —with no result. A sickness came o him. Was all his labor and peril t for nothing? Was he to be ca again and thrust back, this time some far worse dungeon? How had dared to hope! The entrance closed, overgrown, the masonry grown solid with years and damp

CHAPTER XXII.

THE PEASANT GUIDE.

He flashed out the saber and desp ately he slid it this way and that ab the great stone, trying to find a cr something to loosen, something would give. And while he worked a fever, in a chill, he remembe Pietro's letter.

Then he set down the candle end a shelf and with trembling fin drew off his coat and drew out hidden papers. The wet from his b in the water-butt had stained them little, but only a little, for they w carefully wrapped in the bit of oil in which they had come. He unfol the letter.

"If you will press the lower co on the left-hand side," Pietro sai "the lower corner!"

And he had been concentrating his efforts, all his despair, on the per corner. When it is a question life and death a man is superhuma strong and quick sometimes, but he also sometimes forgetful. It is an citing and confusing thing, likely, be working for life and liberty a five years of imprisonment. Fran pushed the lower left-hand corner like magic the great block ab swung out. With his lighted ca end in his hand he slipped through swung back the door into place turned again and faced blackness. row, low, cold blackness. Quie enough, however, with good cou with his heart thumping out a song hope, which he had kept down sta till now, he walked, at times stoop low as he must because of the desc down the secret road of the old Zap His candle held forward, he could a few feet ahead, but all he could was huge blocks of rough stone, s with mold, water dripping betw them. The air he breathed was h and thick; through his wet clothes felt a chill as of the grave. But w mattered the road, when the road to freedom?

Suddenly it came to him that passage might be blocked. It was since Pietro had been through it; of the stones might have fallen; would take very little to close so row a way. With an anxiety w was physical pain, with breath eagerness now he hurried on. He to stop to light his second ca again he hurried on. Would the never come. VICTORIA'S "PROUDEST DAY" SHE FIRST WORE CROWN

In Queen Victoria's account of her coronation, abstracted from Lord Esher's edition of the young ruler's diary, we have an interesting picture of the girl monarch's emotions and impressions on the great day of her life.

"I was awoke at 4 o'clock by the guns in the park, and could not get much sleep afterward on account of the noise of the people, bands, etc. Got up at 7, feeling strong and well, the park presented a curious spectacle, crowds of people up to Constitution hill, soldiers, bands etc.

"At 10 I got into the state coach with the Duchess of Sutherland and Lord Albermarle and we began our progress. It was a fine day and the crowds of people exceeded what I have ever seen many as there were on the day I went to the city it was nothing nothing to the multitudes the millions of my loyal subjects who were assembled in every spot to witness the procession Their good humor and excessive loyalty was beyond everything, and I really cannot say how proud I feel to be the queen of such a nation. I was alarmed at times for fear that the people would be crushed and squeezed on account of the tremendous rush and pressure

"I reached the abbey amid deafening cheers at a little after 11 30 * * * Then followed all the various ceremonies, and last of all the crown was placed on my head, which was, I must own, a most beautiful and impressive moment."

She was deeply impressed with the ceremony, but it was done somewhat awkwardly The archbishop had put the ring on the wrong finger, and the consequence was that I had the greatest difficulty to get it off again, which at last I did with great pain.'

After descending from the throne, the queen proceeded to St Edward's chapel, where Lord Melbourne observed that what was called the altar was covered with sandwiches and bottles of wine The archbishop came in and ought to have delivered the orb, but the queen had already got it. She said that the crown hurt her a good deal, but nevertheless, she set it down that the day was "the proudest of my life."

A Desert Conquered.

From "The Office Window" in the New York Mail

Near Lyndon Vt there is a place where a real bit of desert has grown up—all shifting sand, and not a spear of vegetation This happens to be level ground, and its desert condition has come about in this way Fifty years ago it was all fields and good pastures—sandy no doubt, but grassy and arable nevertheless Pasturage by sheep wore away the grass, and the bare earth began to appear By and by some one opened a sand pit on the tract, and left the sand exposed It began to drift, it drifted more and more, until finally 30 acres were sand and nothing else. The sand drift spread, and began to engulf the neighboring farms. Then the state stepped in and sent its forester to see what he could do with the Lyndon Sahara He did nothing but plant it all over with little Scotch pines They were planted so well, so expertly, that they grew and thrived even in the sand, and now the sand is drifting no more. There will be a pine wood soon where the desert had began to form, and the neighboring farms will be safe

The rescue of the eroding hillsides of northern New England and northern New York lies in the hands of the forester.

The remarkable increase in suicide among women in Germany is blamed on the development of the women's movement. During the last 20 years the number of women suicides increased from 8 3 to 10 6 per 100,000 female population The greatest increase is shown in Berlin, where nearly 48 women take their lives to every 100 men

UNSIGHTLY PIMPLES ON FACE

New Sharon, Iowa.—"Two or three years ago pimples began to come on my face and I had dandruff. The pimples made a very unsightly appearance. They were red and numerous, some came to a head and festered and the itching caused me to scratch them. The dandruff on my head could be plainly seen.

"I tried several remedies but they only temporarily relieved me. I had been bothered with the trouble two or three years when I decided to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment. A NEW SPORT CREATED.

Automobile riding is in itself exhilarating and enjoyable, but when it comes to creating a game in which the automobile is used the most exciting and novel sport of the present age is possible. Auto polo is the one game that has been developed through the use of the automobile. Only one man, however, has been successful in promoting auto polo, and he is the originator of the game, Mr. R. A. Hankinson of Kansas City, Mo. For the past two seasons Mr. Hankinson has been putting on games of auto polo for the amusement of the big crowds, and he is coming to the Iowa State Fair this year, which is held at Des Moines Aug. 26 to Sept. 4. There will be auto polo games every afternoon and evening in front of the amphitheater. The games are short and snappy and highly exciting. The game is based on pony polo, but automobiles are used instead of ponies. Only Mr. Hankinson and his trained athletes, most of whom are college football men, can really put on the game successfully. The State Fair management feels that it has secured in auto polo a new and novel entertainment which Iowa people will thoroughly enjoy.

AN ART EXHIBIT WORTH WHILE.

Some of the best paintings of our most successful modern day artists will be a part of the art exhibit at the Iowa State Fair this fall, to be held at Des Moines Aug. 26 to Sept. 4. This has not been possible heretofore for the reason that no suitable place has been provided on the Fair grounds for the housing of valuable paintings. It was one of the hopes of the originators of the Women and Children's building to provide a place for an art exhibit, and this hope has been fulfilled. The most spacious room on the ground floor of the beautiful new building is to be given over to an art exhibit. Professor Charles A. Cummings of Des Moines, who has gained an enviable reputation as an Iowa artist and as a conductor of art schools, is in charge of the exhibit. There will also be competitive exhibits in which Iowa artists will participate.

FALSE WEIGHTS AND MEASURES TO BE SHOWN UP.

Cheating in weights is something the weight and measure department of the Iowa Food and Dairy Commission is watching very closely these days. During the past several months the department has confiscated scales and short weight measures in many parts of the state. An exhibit is to be made of these at the Iowa State Fair at Des Moines Aug. 26 to Sept. 4, with a man in charge who will point out just how the dishonest buyer very often cheats those of whom he is buying. This exhibit will be valuable and instructive. The dairy department will also put on a most excellent dairy exhibit, showing what is being done and what is possible in the Iowa dairy industry.

In the Darkest Hour.

When weary life, breathing reluctant breath, hath no hope sweeter than the hope of death; then the best counsel and the best relief to cheer the spirit or to cheat the grief, the only calm, the only comfort heard, comes in the music of a woman's word.—Edwin Arnold.

HOWARD PIANOS

are

Surprisingly Reasonable!

It does not follow that you have to buy the highest-priced piano to get a really high-grade instrument.

If care is taken in the selection, you can secure an instrument that will more than fulfill every home requirement at a remarkably reasonable cost.

After hearing the Howard Piano and appreciating its absolute durability, you would naturally expect it to be among the costly ones, but it is not.

Considering value with price it is positively the most economical instrument for the home.

It gives you all the qualities of the high-grade instruments at so reasonable a price because it is a product of one of the manufacturing companies of the greatest piano organization in the world—The Baldwin Company.

No other instrument of equal quality can be sold at the price because no other makers possess the facilities and resources.

THE "Howard Manualo", the Player Piano that is all but human, is distinguished by Quality, Durability, Reliability and Attractive Price. It is a quality proposition throughout. Be sure to examine it.

OBITUARY OF CLARENCE SAMPSON

Clarence Benjamin Sampson was born in Germantown, Hancock Co., on August 8, 1885. About 8 years ago he left for Beltrami, Minn., where he took up farming and where he was married about 2 years later to Miss Flora Lee. Four children were born to this union.

About a year ago a sore on his lip developed into a cancer. He was taken to a hospital where the best of care and attention was given him but to no avail. He returned to his parental home where he was taken care of by his wife and parents. During his suffering he made no complaint, and as the end was drawing near he had the best of hopes, trusting God and testifying that he was ready to meet him who said "I will come again and take ye unto myself." His last wish was to meet his dear ones in the yonder world. He passed away August 9, 1914.

He leaves his wife and four children, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Sampson, four sisters and a large number of relatives and friends to mourn his departure.

He was a devoted husband and a kind and indulgent father: to his parents, a loving son, to his sisters, a tender brother, to his friends, the soul of fellowship. But the greatest of all he was a man. And as a man it is that those who knew him best love to contemplate him. He believed in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. He believed that the man who scatters flowers in the pathway of his fellow men, who lets in to the dark places of life the sunshine of sympathy and human kindness is following in the the footsteps of his Master. His last words were expressive of peace in God and a willingness to depart and be at rest with him. His cheerful, helpful life his devotion to his wife and family, and kindness to everybody will long linger as a fragrant memory in the home which his presence brightened and which death darkened.

The funeral services were held at the German M. E. Church, Wednesday afternoon at 1:00 o'clock being in charge of Rev. Witter who paid a fine tribute to the deceased in the English and German language. Interment was made at the local cemetary.

"THE SQUIRT GUN"

Iowa is going to have a Magazine—one that Iowa people will sit up nights to read, one that is going to boost Iowa all the time and not knock on anything.

Because it is going to squirt all over Iowa, the magazine will be christened the "Squirt Gun" and will be filled from cover to cover with genuhumo—nothing else—so if you do not enjoy fun, don't subscribe.

The price of the magazine is $1.00 a year, but to get it going right off the reel with a big list, we are putting the price at 50 cents for the first year.

The first issue will be off the press October 1st, but it goes on the press September 1st, so those who want to be certain of getting the first issue, should send remittance before that time.

Send 50 cents to the "Squirt Gun," Ellsworth, Iowa, and we'll have more fun than blowing bubbles through a six inch gas pipe.

The Suitor.

Young Wilmarth sought an interview with Mr. Carpenter. "I'd like," said the young man, nervously, "to marry your daughter, sir." "Well, I've got six," responded the obliging father. "Take all you want."

THE KLEMME TIMES

KLEMME, IOWA

The last survivor of the famous Birkenhead disaster in 1852 died recently a England. The Birkenhead, a transport steamer, laden with soldiers and their families, struck a reef off the coast of Africa. The women and children were put into the boats and the 454 British soldiers stood at attention on deck, giving a great shout as of victory while the boat went down. Those were the days of British dicipline, a quality which, it is to be feared, has somewhat declined, though, as the Kansas City Star says in a well written article about the event: "It is an old tradition that Anglo-Saxons may usually be depended upon to acquit themselves creditably in time of disaster."

In looking for the source of disease among the members of a household, one would hardly suspect the carpets of the domestic establishment, but a German physician, Dr. Kuttner, declares that he has found it there. He had his attention called to five cases of anæmia and the like, the cause of which he could not determine, but the disease disappeared on the removal of the carpets from the house. A further investigation disclosed the fact that the carpets in question contained arsenic in great quantities, which probably entered into the composition of the dyes. Traces of arsenic were also found in the blood of the persons who had been afflicted.

The Leeds briquet works at Hunslet has recently been making experiments to determine the possibility of the use of chalk briquets for fuel, according to Power. It is said that the company is able to obtain its chalk in the south of England at a cost of from 14 cents to 25 cents a ton, and that it is proposed to sell it in briquet form at from $3.75 to $5 a ton. The briquets are five inches long, four inches wide and 2½ inches thick. It is said that they burn with little or no smudge, with an exceedingly small amount of ash, and that they give off from 40 to 50 per cent less smoke than coal.

The noted span over the Thames, known as the London bridge, was until 1769 the only one. The Romans and the Saxons built various wooden bridges near the site of the present London bridge, but these were destroyed by fire or flood. In 1176, Henry II started the construction of a stone bridge at this point, but the work was not completed until 1209. A row of houses was built on either side, so that it resembled a street with fortified gates at each end, on which the heads of traitors were displayed.

The newest thing in transportation facilities is the electric canal boat. The New York & Buffalo Stemship company is planning to construct a fleet of 30 self-propelled freight barges, possibly with accommodations for a few passengers, which are expected to make the trip between New York and Buffalo by way of the Hurson river and the canal in three days. The boats will be built of steel, 275 feet long, and will have a capacity of 1,500 tons.

Excepting the inter-Andean plateau and a few arid spots on the Pacific coast, Ecuador is a vast forest. Roughly estimated, 10,000 square miles on the Pacific slope extending from the sea to an altitude of 5,000 feet on the Andes, and the Amazon basin below the same level containing 80,000 square miles, nearly all virgin forest, are rich in dyewoods, cinchona trees and other valuable timber.

After eight years' work, Miss Irma Coxe has completed the task of copying 150,000 diagrams of real estate surveys which were partly destroyed by fire in 1906, thereby giving a complete history of original surveys of every lot in San Francisco from 1862 to 1906. Miss Coxe found it necessary to split every sheet of the paper by hand and to mouth each separate sheet on a linen slate so it could be handled.

Of late years there has developed in Germany, and especially in Saxony, a theory that the cow, and not the milk, should be the subject of first care Germany is proud, not only of its high birth rate, but of its growing ability to make the births effective by caring for the infants through the period of greatest mortality. Proper nourishment is recognized as the largest factor.

There is a big difference in points of view. A learned bishop was once taken to task by some of his denominational brethren on the charge of exhibiting conceit at variance with the spirit of humility. "It is not conceit," replied the bishop, with that ponderous bearing that silenced opposition. "It is not conceit, brethren. It is the consciousness of superiority."

The following were the first lines of Lincoln's announcement of his candidacy for the legislature, delivered by him in the year 1832: "Fellow citizens: I presume you all know who I am. I am humble Abraham Lincoln. I have been solicited by many friends to become a candidate for the legislature. My politics are short and sweet, like the old woman's dance."

Woman suffrage proved the most popular of 1,167 subjects treated in the package libraries sent out by the department of debating and public discussion of the university of Wisconsin from last July to April of this year. Restriction of immigration, the minim Restriction of immigration, the minimum wage and commission government ranked next in popularity.

For the heating of the houses the Romans used a form of furnace, known as the hypocaust, which was placed in a chamber beneath the floor and the heated air was made to circulate around the walls and under the floor by means of hollow tubes or a hollow lining, and was also by way of pipes transported to other rooms.

Axel Swanson, of West Concord, N. H., a granite cutter, possesses two peculiar characteristics. His hands work in unison, that is, a movement of one involuntarily cause the other to perform the same function, and while he has an abundance of hair upon his head, he has never had to use a razor on his face.

DEATHBED STATEMENT, FROM FATHERINLAW INCRIMINATES YOUTH

Aged Man Protects Daughter From Husband—Is Shot By Infuriated Farmer.

Davenport, Ia., Aug. 8.—Ed. Hoffman, a young farmer who shot his fatherinlaw through the abdomen when the latter remonstrated with him for beating his wife, may face a charge of murder in the first degree, as Fritz Erps, who was shot, is not expected to live longer than 12 hours.

County Attorney Fred Vollmer has obtained a deathbed confession from Erps, the fatherinlaw, and a confession from Hoffman. Mr. Vollmer claims the two unite to prove such a clear case of murder the warrant has already been made out and will be served shoud Mr. Erps die.

Just before lapsing into unconsciousness, from which he has not since recovered, Erps said: "Monday night my daughter came to my house. She said Ed had beaten her and I could see that it was so as her face was bruised and bloody and she could hardly walk. She was frightened, afraid to go back unless I went with her. So I went along. We met Ed. He was carrying a heavy piece of pipe. I begged Ed to lay it down. He did and then I stepped on it. He pulled out his gun and shot me."

Hope for Erps' recovery was given up by his family.

Hoffman in his confession is said to admit that he had trouble with his wife because he sold his wheat at a low price instead of holding it for a raise and declares that he was not intoxicated when the shooting occurred. He admits that he had been drinking the afternoon preceding the shooting.

DYER APPROVES COUNTY HOSPITAL MOVEMENT

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 8.—"Iowa through the activities of public spirited men all over the state, is furnishing an important contribution to one of the most important movements of our times—the organization of country life," said Walter A. Dyer, who is in Des Moines in search of editorial material for The World's Work.

"In the past the city has been the most desirable place in which to live simply because its life—social, political, economic—has been better organized than that of the country. The supply of facilities for comfortable living has fairly well kept up with the demand. In the country people have lacked these advantages since the pioneer days which explains the exodus of young people from the farms and rural districts, which has so alarmed economists.

"The particular thing that has brought me to Iowa is the county hospital movement, which had its inception here. Four or five years ago Dr. E. G. Munger, of Spencer, conceived the idea or establishing tax-supported rural hospitals in every rural county in the state of Iowa, in order that the sick and injured in the county might have as good a chance for life as if they lived in the city. Through the efforts of Dr. Munger and friends in the assembly, an act was passed enabling the counties of the state to establish and maintain such hospitals. This was the first law of the kind to be passed in the United States."

ALL IOWA COUNTIES MAY HAVE GOOD ROADS

Iowa City, Ia., Aug. 8.—The majority of counties in Iowa are amply supplied with materials suitable for one or more types of roads that are believed to be practical under existing conditions. This is the conclusion reached in a report just printed by the Iowa geological survey, of which Prof. George F. Kay, of the University of Iowa, is director. The authors of the report are Prof. S. W. Beyer and Prof. H. F. Wright, both of Ames.

GRAIN STORAGE PLACES TAXED TO UTTERMOST

Council Bluffs, Ia., Aug. 8.—Every grain elevator in Council Bluffs, several of more than 1,000,000 bushels capacity, is using all of its facilities to handle the grain that is daily concentrating here in increasing quantities. With facilities of loading cars at a speed of one every four minutes, the crews are taxed to the uttermost to keep the grain moving. It is being consigned to the various roads in trainload lots.

RAILROAD DETECTIVES BEAT UP WRONG MAN

West Liberty, Aug. 8.—Detectives Baumgardner, of Cedar Rapids, and Erickson, of Des Moines, in the employ of the Rock Island Railroad company, are alleged to have attacked Ambrose Tucker, a young farmer of West Branch, and beaten him so severely that his face will be permanently disfigured.

Tucker has entered suit against the Rock Island company for $1,500.

Officer Baumgardner came here recently from Cedar Rapids as the head of a crew of railroad detectives, bent on ridding the town of tramps, who have been unusually plentiful this year. Several of these roamers have been roughly treated it is said and shortly after the affair with Tucker, a tramp is claimed to have been severely beaten about the face.

Tucker was dressed in rough clothes and it is presumed that the officers thought him a tramp, when they found him about the railroad yards.

CUMMINS TOO BUSY FOR CHAUTAUQUA WORK

Iowa City, Ia., Aug 8.—United States Senator Albert B. Cummins, who was to have spoken at the Iowa City chautauqua Saturday, has been compelled to cancel the date on account of his duties at Washington.

Howard Clarke of Des Moines will take Senator Cummins' place. He will be introduced by Harry Hull of Williamsburg, republican candidate for congress from the Second Iowa district.

Maurice Connolly, democratic candidate for senator, will be the speaker for "democratic day," Friday. He will be introduced by W. J. McDonald, democratic candidate for congress.

Churchill Issues Denial of Naval Battle in North Se

London, Aug. 8.—Winston Spencer Churchill, first lord of the British admiralty, announced today in the house of commons that there had been no fighting and no loses of any kind other than had already been officially made public.

The first lord said:

"Apart from the loss of the small British cruiser Amphion and the German mine layer Koenigin Luise there has been no other fighting and no other loss as far as we are aware.

"On Wednesday a flotilla of torpedo boat destroyers while patrolling the upper reaches of the channel found the Koenigin Luise laying mines. A destroyer pursued and sank her. About 50 of her crew, which probably numbered 120 or 130 men, were humanely saved by the crews of the British destroyers.

"The Amphion continued to scout with the flotilla and while on the return journey was blown up by a mine.

"The indiscriminate use of mines not in connection with military harbors or strategic positions and the indiscriminate scattering of contact mines about the seas might, of course, destroy not only warships, but peaceful merchant ships under a neutral flag and possibly carrying supplies to a neutral coun

This use of mines is new in war and deserves the attentive considera not only of those of us who are eng in war, but of the nations of the c ized world.

"The admiralty is not at all ala or disconcerted by this incident."

Mr. Churchill added that arra ments had been made such as w reduce the possibility of acci caused by mines to a minimum.

Referring to the disconcerting rumors spread by the newspapers Churchill said they were probably to strict censorship prevailing and caused the papers to fill their colu with reports from irresponsible nervous persons on the coast.

Mr. Churchill announced that British government had decided establish a press bureau presided by Frederick, E. Smith, a membe parliament, and from this bureau be issued a steady supply of tr worthy information from both the miralty and war offices, without ever placing in danger the naval military interests of the country. this way, he said, the country be kept truthfully informed of state of affairs.

St. Petersburg, (via London), Aug. 8.—11:20 a. m.—The Austro-Hungarian ambassador to Russia, accompanied by his staff and Austrian subjects who were resident in St. Petersburg, left this morning. He is proceeding to Vienna by way of Finland and Sweden.

AUSTRIA REALIZES SHE MUST GIVE CZAR BATTLE

London, Aug. 8.—How great are Austria's preparations for war, not merely on the Danube, but for war with the great powers, is shown in a letter received by a London commercial firm from a Bohemian firm with which it has intimate dealings.

The letter says:

"We are fully at war. For Austria it would be easy to blow Servia off the map, but Servia does not go to war without being encouraged by Russia. This means that we have to deal with a greater enemy than Servia. It means the whole Slav race, which wants to cross Europe from east to west through Austria-Hungary.

"All the fighting men in our country got orders on Sunday night to present themselves for service within 20 hours—not only the reservists, the Landwehr, and Landsturm men up to 42 years, but men up to 50 years of age, have been called to the colors.

"On Monday morning we could do no business. We had only to say good-by to all our workpeople. Hardly any one left except the girls of the button, crystal, and other departments."

The letter proceeds to give countermanding instructions consequent on this paralysis of business. The writer tells of one man who, though convalescing after a severe illness, had to equip himself and set out. No excuse is accepted. He goes on:

"One of our packers wished to take a train two hours later than the others. He was told that he would be severely punished if he did so."

An important fact is contained in the casual mention that all these troops are being sent, not to the lower Danube but to the Galician frontier—the border of Russia.

The tremendous force being called out may partly be measured by the fact that the Landstrum, and even older veterans, are being summoned. Even at the time of the Franco-German war the Landstrum was not called on. It is the arm reserved for the very last resort. There has been no call on the Landstrum, either in Austria or Prussia, since the war of 1866.

The French army authorities have also a heavy screen to hide the de- velopments in their war moves. They seem entirely satisfied with the man- ner in which the men of the nation re- sponded to the call to arms and they declare every preliminary move to have been carried out according to the plans drafted by the popular com- mander in chief, Gen Jos. DUNTRY BANKERS SAY THERE ARE TWO VIEWS scuss George M. Reynold's Plea to Small Banks—Big Cities Want All Money.

Chicago, Ill., Aug. 8.—The Chicago ve Stock World says country banks ich have made loans in Chicago on l through their Chicago correspond- s began Wednesday to accept the nation and permit their loans to stand.

George M. Reynolds, president of the ntinental and Commercial National nk, said:

"We wrote nearly all the country nks in which we have loaned money explained to them that this was no e to call loans and that the banks ght to cooperate in preserving the nation. Today we had perhaps banks ask us to call loans but explained by telephone why such ion was not desirable.

"We told them we would look after rgins and that there was no occa- n for disturbing the loans that are standing. This in every instance ved satisfactory to the banks and are not going to have any trouble r our country bank loans."

Action of some big city bankers in ling in money loaned in the smaller ters, while at the same time asking all town banks not to call loans de to the big city banks until the ent money stringency is past, is g discussed critically by country kers of Iowa and South Dakota.

"This isn't a fair proposition on the of it," said a country banker in ur City today. "It is important that money markets of the entire coun- be relieved in every way possible at time, but I do not see that the big es have the right to claim all the re- available."

AURETANIA BREAKS WORLD'S RECORD IN TRANS-OCEAN FLIGHT

Halifax, Aug. 8.—When the Cunard r Mauretania which put into port yesterday with 2,400 passengers ing from Europe, again sails from erpool she will be fitted as H. M. S. uretania and prepared to destroy hostile shipping of Germany. The uretania broke the world's record a trans-Atlantic trip and she made four days and 10 hours.

Under the highest pressure of her turbine engines with all ports blanket- ed and not a light showing, she sped over the 140 miles that lay between her and safety from German cruisers Be- hind her came the Essex, whose search lights could be seen flashing at night across the horizon as she scanned the waters for the enemy

The Mauretania's passengers were curred They had received no intima- tion of the declaration of war The Mauretania sailed from Liverpool at 4 55 p m August 1, amid the utmost excitement Many would-be passengers were left behind on the piers. This distance was lengthened by the steamer having first taken the New York route and having to change her course when warned by the Essex The actual time to Halifax could have been reduced six hours had a direct route been taken Six hours more were lost in fog and in dodging steamers and cruisers, thereby bringing down to three days and 20 hours the time in which the fleet Cunarder could have covered the distanace from Liverpool to Halifax

CUSTOMS COLLECTORS TO RESTRAIN SAILINGS OF VESSELS OF WAR

Repainting of Vessels, Loading of Coal Cargoes, or Making Up Passenger List Of Nationality Forbidden.

Washington Aug 8—Foreign mer- chant ships being converted for war purposes, or carrying foreign reservists in organized manner, will not be per- mitted to clear from ports of the Unit- ed States

Instructions to aid the customs au- thorities at New York in enforcing President Wilson's neutrality procla- mation were telegraphed today from the department of commerce

"Wire the department before issuing clearance papers to foreign vessels, un- less you are satisfied after careful in- spection that the ship has not made any preparations while in port tending in any way to her conversion into a vessel of war," said the department.

"Taking on an abnormal amount of coal except in the case of colliers would indicate such conversion Unpacking of guns already on board would be con- clusive Painting of vessels a war color would indicate conversion. It must be clear that she is not to be used for transportation of reserves or recruits for a foreign army or navy. This does not prevent transportation of passen- gers in the usual sense as where there are women, children and men of dif- feren nationalities, even though among them there were a few reserves without knowledge

"If the passengers are nearly all men and practically all of the same nation- ality, clearance cannot be granted. It must be unquestionably known that she has no arms or munitions of war abroad. Have representatives of each foreign vessel in your port certify to this department whether she is a mer- chant vessel intended solely for the carriage of passengers and freight, ex- cluding munitions of war, or whether she is a part of the armed forces of her nation. This information is for the purpose of maintaining the neutrality of the Untied States under the recent proclamation of the president. Clear- ance will be refused in absence of this certificate."

FIRST LADY OF LAND DIES AT WHITE HOUSE

MRS. WOODROW WILSON.

Mrs. Ellen Wilson, wife of the pres- ident of the United States, was, prior to her marriage, Miss Ellen Louise Axsen, of Savannah, Ga., a prominent southern society girl. She was mar- ried to Woodrow Wilson, then a col- lege professor, at her home on June 24, 1885.

After a primary education at her home, she was matriculated at Wom- an's college, Rome, Ga., and later she studied at the Art Students' league, New York. As a painter she has achieved fame not influenced by the popularity of her husband. The Na- tional academy, of New York, the Phil- adelphia Academy of Fine Arts and the Chicago Art institute have ex- hibited her landscape paintings. She has been actively associated with the woman's department of the National Civic association and other clubs. Both she and her husband are members of the Presbyterian church.

WIFE OF PRESIDENT CALLED BY DEATH

End Comes to Mrs. Wilson After Long Struggle With Bright's Disease.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 7.—Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, wife of the president of the United States, died at the White House Thursday at 5 p. m. of a complication of diseases.

The end came after two serious sinking spells. The president and her three daughters and Francis B. Sayre were at the bedside at the end.

President Unnerved.

The president was completely un- nerved by the shock, and his grief was heartrending. He bore up well under the strain, however, and devoted him- self to his daughters.

The end came while Mrs. Wilson was unconscious. Her illness took a turn for the worse shortly before 1 o'clock in the afternoon and from then on she grew gradually weaker.

Kneeling at the bedside at the end were the president and their three daughters. Dr. Cary T. Grayson, U. S. N., and a nurse were in the room, and just outside the door were Secretary McAdoo and Francis B. Sayre, Mr. Wilson's sons-in- law, and Mr. Tumulty, his secretary.

Both houses of congress adjourned when Mrs. Wilson's death was an- nounced, and for a brief time the wheels of the government practically stopped while everyone paid respect to the loss of the president.

All Hope Lost.

The beginning of the end came yes- terday morning, when Dr. E. P. Davis, of Philadelphia, who had been called in for consultation, realized that the time for hope had passed. He took the president into the red room of the White House and there, in a broken voice, told him the truth. Mr. Wil- son's face blanched, but be bore the shock well. He was informed the end was only a questioon of hours.

Mr. Wilson then took his daughters, Mrs. W. G. McAdoo, Mrs. Sayre and Miss Margaret Wilson, aside and told them of their mother's conditon. Until then they had thought there was hope for recovery.

From that time on the president and his daughters remained constantly at Mrs. Wilson's bedside. The president held his wife's hand and the three daughters were grouped nearby. Un- til she became unconscious Mrs. Wil- son frequently nodded to one or the other and smiled cheerfully.

During the day Mrs. Wilson spoke to Dr. Grayson about the president, whose health she thought more about than she did of her own.

Last Thought of Husband.

"Promise me," she whispered faintly, "that if I go you will take care of my husband—" It was the same touch of devotion which she had so many times repeated, her constant anxiety having been that the president might not worry about her nor be disturbed in his official tasks.

The president returned to the sick room after the last conference with the doctor, his three daughters leaning on his arm. Francis Bowes Sayre and Secretary McAdoo and Secretary Tu- multy stayed outside the door. Mrs. Wilson lapsed into unconsciousness, but rallied. By 1 o'clock she began to sink rapidly. She could still recognize those about her, however, and looked cheerfully toward them with the same sweet smile that will linger long in the memory of the many who knew her. It was a characteristic expression of sweetness which officials and their families, as well as people in the slums, whom she had befriended, had learned to love.

At 2 o'clock Mrs. Wilson was still conscious, but her strength had almost departed, and a few minutes later she sank into the sleep of unconsciousness from which she never awoke. For three hours the president and his three daughters gazed longingly into her eyes in the hope that she might speak to them again, but she could not.

The sun was casting its long shad- ows from the Potomac to the south grounds, coloring the fountains, gar- dens and elms.

There was a hushed stillness in the upper apartments. All eyes were turned toward the southwest corner of the house.

And Then Death Came.

Just at the hour of 5 death came. The president and his daughters were in tears. Secretary Tumulty walked slowly to the executive offices, his head bowed. Quietly he announced to the correspondents that the end had come.

A pall of gloom settled over the exec- utive mansion and the offices. Pres- ently Dr. Grayson, his face haggard and worn from day and night vigil, came to the offices. There was an impres- sive silence everywhere. Secretaries, attaches, clerks and servants seemed overcome. Vice-President Marshall and members of the cabinet and the leaders in congress were notified. Both houses promptly adjourned. The flag on the Whitet House was dropped, gates were closed and the silence of death spread over the White House for the first time since 1892, when Mrs. Benjamin Harrison passed away.

Members of the cabinet, justices of the supreme court and members of the diplomatic corps telephoned their con- dolences and sent cards. From many humble homes came flowers, as Mrs. Wilson had made many friends in the slums of the city in her endeavors to help the friendless and poverty stricken. She had told the president yester- day morning she would more cheerfully "go away" if the bill for the improve- men of the alleys was passed by con- gress. A word to the leaders from Secretary Tumulty and the measure was adopted in silence by the Senate and soon reported to the House, where it will be passed. She learned that the measure would be a law in another day or so and expressed satisfaction. She had become deeply interested in the social welfare of the community and had worked always without seek- ing the aid of the president. It was the strain of this, the duties of enter- tainment and the kidney trouble which became chronic last autumn that sap- ped her life. Mrs. Wilson took an ac- tive interest in the career of her hus- band, in the contests in congress over legislation and the numerous official duties with which he is burdened.

Husband's Real Helpmate.

Throughout life she had been his con- stant helpmate and companion. Her clear judgment on political affairs and broad views of educational questions had been a source of gratification to him for years.

With her help he wrote his books and on her judgment he relied. Her devo- tion to him, according to those who have known the family intimately, was of remarkable depth. Her one thought was of him. Every morning and every evening during her illness she cau- tioned Dr. Grayson not to tell the pres- ident if she had spent an uncomfort- able hour. Her anxiety was that he should not be worried or disturbed. However painful her suffering, it was her one aim to keep the president from being affected by her condition.

But the president watched her sor- rowfully for weeks and realized that she was slowly growing worse. He spent every moment he could by her side, and if he was not there she was constantly calling or speaking of him.

Mrs. Wilson was a woman of simple ways, possessed of a naive, magnetic manner. She had a faculty of putting her guests promptly at ease and was a charming hostess. She was ever demo- cratic and modest in her tastes.

HEAVY TOLL OF LIFE TAKEN IN RAIL WRECK

Joplin, Mo., Aug. 7.—Thirty-nine known to be dead, eight still missing and 25 dangerously injured, was today's revised total of last night's wreck be- tween a Kansas City Southern pas- senger train and a Missouri and North Arkansas railroad gasoline motor car at Tiptonford, Mo., 10 miles from here.

A coroner's inquest into the wreck will be held late today at Neosho.

News of the wreck spread through the city and when the relief train ar- rived the streets around the station were crowded with people.

A cheer was given when W. M. Drury of Webb City, Mo., was taken from the relief train. Drury who, with his wife and three children, was aboard the wrecked motor car was not badly hurt by the first crash. He quickly removed the wreckage which covered him and began a search for his family, which included a 9 months old baby.

He found them buried under the back of a seat which was suppored by a second seat. One by one he brought them from the car, crawling on his hands and knees through the fire which was rapidly consuming the wreckage. All were severely burned but physicians said they would re- cover. Later, although his face and body were covered with blisters where his clothing had been burned away, Drury crawled back into the wreckage and rescued three other persons.

Then there was J. J. Lauderback, of Joplin, who crawled through a window and saved nine persons pinioned under the debris. He was obliged to fight with one woman, whose child was lost, to make her leave the burning car.

Story of Wreck.

The wrecked train, northbound, was late and was running on a freight train's schedule. The motor was run- ning on the Kansas City Southern tracks and evidently its crew mis- understood the orders to meet the pas- senger at Tipton Ford, for it ran past the station without stopping. A mile south of the town it met the passen- ger headon.

Drury told the story of the wreck here today:

"We were running about 35 miles an hour," he said, "when suddenly there was a terrific impact. This was followed almost immediately by the explosion of the gasoline reservoir. By the time I crawled from the wreck, both the motor car and the train seemed a mass of flames. Added to this there were the shrieks of the in- jured and dying. Many persons, pinned beneath the wreckage, cried to be re- leased or killed rather than face a slow death by fire. Fourteen men were riding in the smoker and I heard of only one who escaped."

The huge gasoline supply tank for the car's big motor burst, saturating the imprisoned passengers. Then the gasoline caught fire.

Bodies of many of the dead were almost consumed by the fire and many persons pinioned beneath wreckage re- ceived severe burns in addition to wounds.

Complete identification of the dead will have to await a canvass of those who escaped, as a number of bodies are unrecognizable.

The wreck was said to have been caused by the crew of the motor car disregard- ing orders. The car was in charge of Engineman Herbert Ratliff, of Eureka Springs, and Conductor S. A. Nichols, of Harrison, Ark. Frank Bradley, of Eu- reka Springs, was the brakeman. All three are among the dead.

James E. Verrall predicts that England could wage a war much cheaper than could Germany, and gives this as his reason: Place all the suffragettes in jail. All of the women over there are suffragettes. When in jail they refuse to eat, consequently the nation could get along with half the food stuffs that would be required to feed the population of Germany.—Britt News.

Father Opava, the Bohemian priest at Duncan, says he thinks Russia is primarily the cause of the war in Europe. Father Opava was educated in Austria and thoroughly understands the political situation. He says that the anarchists of Servia are a determined set and must be brought to respect the law or there will be no security for society or any one else, which we beleive to be a fact.—Britt Tribune.

The base ball tournament at Garner comes to a close today with Albert Lea and Austin battling for the championship and a record breaking crowd likely be present to root for their favorite team. The attendance so far has been the largest in the history of the tournament. The result of the games Tuesday were: Fort Dodge 3, Austin 0; Albert Lea 8, Mason City 6. Wednesday's results were: Austin 5, Mason City 3; Albert Lea 9, Fort Dodge 8.

All is fair in love, war, politics and base ball is sometimes hard to believe, but is a fact nevertheless. Under the law but one can have the girl and he has to watch his p's and q's pretty close or he may lose her too. One side is bound to stick to the other in war, fair or unfair. In politics one fellow will be beaten, possibly both of them, fair or unfair. In baseball the umpire decides and the devil take the hindmost. Lord bless our home and damn the cook.—Britt Tribune.

The Klemme ball team lost at Woden in a well played game, Sunday, by the score of 5 to 2. Everything was in Klemme's favor up to the sixth inning when 2 hits and 3 errors netted the Woden team 4 runs. Scuerf pitched an excellent game for Klemme, while Thomas who pitched for Woden was practicly invincable. The Woden team have a nice clean bunch of players and put up a stiff game, showing better team work than any team Klemme has played with this season. The count now stands one game each and another game will likely be played with them before the season closes.

Swea City is planning a fine "White Way", the money to be raised by the business men. It is planned to purchase nine electroliers and they are making much over the matter. Klemme has had a "White Way" ever since early spring and we are not satisfied with only nine electroliers but have fourteen, besides we have thirty-four residence lights and the money came out of the town treasury and the town is not yet "broke" or even "bent." Swea City is one of the good little towns in Northern Iowa but you will have to go some to find a town that will equal Klemme, for it's size. We are doing more improving to the square inch than many towns whose population run into the thousands.

"The ball game last Sunday afternoon between Klemme and Belmond resulted in a victory for the local club by a score of 9 to 3. Quite a good sized crowd witnessed the contest, there being people from Klemme, Goodell, Meservey and Rowan. It is reported as being a good game, the absence of rough tactics boisterous conduct and rag chewing being a noteworthy feature. These ball games seem to furnish recreation for a certain element of people who might otherwise spend the day in more questionable persuits"

The above taken from the Belmond Herald Press is not quiet clear to our mind. Either all of the people who attended the game were a bunch of rough necks who happened to be under a spell of good behaviour or the article is rather misleading. The Belmond paper seems to greatly disfavor Sunday ball, but at the same time seems to lack the nerve to come right out and say so, as some of her leading citizens are lending their support and attendance.

Inspect Shocker

A shocker invented and built by Whittemore men and is attracting the attention of the leading implement manufacturers of the country, according to the Whittemore Champion which says:

That the shocking machine invented and built by Whittemore parties is attracting the attention of the big farm implement firms has been fully demonstrated during the past couple of weeks. The International Harvester Co. has had no less than four men here inspecting this machine in its field work. Monday several men from Humboldt were here looking the machine over. Wednesday a represenative from the John Deere company of Moline, Illinois, arrived and went out to watch the machine build grain shocks better than it can be done by hand. The machine has behaved in a remarkable fine manner this season and all who have seen it in operation must agree that the owners, Keene Bros., T. A. Swanson and Tom Carmody, have a great thing in this invention.

In the haying or harvest field or around the home nothing more refreshing than

Better Than Castor Oil

Children detest castor oil and who can blame them—you do yourself and why expect them to take it?—it is entirely too harsh for a tender stomach.

What they need is something that is mild in action—does not gripe and at the same time is effective in all cases of constipation and troubles arising from indigestion—something they will like to take.

Nyal's Laxena can be given the younger ones with perfect safety—pleasant to take and sure in it's action.

It does away with the use of castor oil and other nauseating laxatives.

Always give your children Nyal's Laxena

Memoirs of Napoleon

In Three Volumes

The personal reminiscences of Baron de Méneval, for thirteen years private secretary to Napoleon Bonaparte, bring out, as no history can, many enlightening and interesting side lights on the character of that greatest of leaders. De Méneval's descriptions have the piquancy and interest possible only because he was an actual eye-witness of the scenes and incidents of which he writes. Their reliability and historical interest can be judged by the fact that the very conservative French Academy publicly recommends them.

ENGLAND PROMISES TO SUPPORT FRANCE

Invasion of Belgium Is Breach Which May Cause Britain to Draw Sword.

London, Eng., Special—Sir Edward Grey told the house of commons that he had given France the assurance that if the German fleet came into the English channel or through the North Sea to undertake hostile operations against the French coast or shipping the British fleet would give all the protection in its power.

It was officially stated here today that the British army would mobolise tomorrow.

The foreign secretary stated that the British fleet had been mobolized and the mobilization of the British army was taking place but that "no engagement had yet been made by the British government to send an expedition abroad.

"The French fleet is in the Mediterranean and the northern coasts of France are defenseless.

"We felt strongly that France was entitled to known at once whether in the event of an attack on her unprotected coasts she could rely on our support.

"I gave the information to the French ambassador last night that if the German fleet goes into the English channels or into the North Sea to attack French shipping or the French coast the British fleet will give all the protection in its power.

"That answer is subject to the approval of parliament. It is not a declaration of war."

Dealing with the question of Great Britain's obligations Sir Edward said:

"Up to Sunday we had given no promise of more than diplomatic support. I was asked at the time of the Algiers crisis if we would give armed support and I said I could promise nothing to any foreign power unless it received the whole hearted support of public opinion.

"I give no promise but I told both the French and German ambassadors that if war was forced on France, public opinion in the British Isles would rally to France."

This part of the speech was received with loud cheering.

London, Aug. 4.—It was asserted in authoritative quarters that due warning had been given to Germany yesterday of the intention of the British navy to take instant action in case a German soldier should set foot on Belgian soil. In spite of this and of the prompt refusal by the Belgian government to accept the agreement offered by Germany as the price of the violation of Belgian neutrality, German forces penetrated the little buffer state at two points on their way to the French frontier.

The position to be taken by the British empire remained still to be defined but it was feared that Germany's seizure of Belgian territory would be a deciding factor which would lead Britons to take the sword in hand as under the treaty of London of 1839 Great Britain stands pledged to maintain Belgium's neutrality

Kitchener to Cabinet.

Evidences were not lacking of the grave view of the situation taken by all classes in the United Kingdom.

The leaders of the opposition parties were called into council by the cabinet and it was reported that the cancellation of Field Marshal Earl Kitchener's return to Egypt was a prelude to his appointment as minister of war

The German army violated the neutrality of Belgium, of which Great Britain is protector German troops occupied the Belgian town of Arlon

Belgium had previously refused to consider an ultimatum offering a certain agreement with Germany in case Belgium agreed to facilitate the movements of the German army

Profanity Among Golf Players.

In the American Magazine James Montgomery Flagg, the celebrated wit and artist, does a piece about golf. Following is an extract concerning the use of swear words on the golf course

"What incentive would it be for the tiresome business man to skip out onto the links in the spring if he couldn't feel that at least there was one spot where he could unload some outdoor language that he had been accumulating all through the long winter?

"As some one has said: 'Breathes there a man with soul so dead that to himself (or even before relatives) he hath not said."—— —— —— ! ? $! ! ? & !"'

"Restraint and artistry should always be used. In other words, make the cuss fit the shot! The truly great golfer knows just what language to use for each shot or mishap. He doesn't waste a night letter size anathema where a 10-word blight would answer. Below is a table of carefully selected epigrams for the man who takes his game seriously. As you see, these are necessarily in cipher. I might send translations to readers who are on the level, on receipt of two dozen new $9 per dozen golf balls. No agents.

"Swinging over the ball ——— ——!
Swinging over the ball in presence of witnesses ——— ——— ——— ——!
Slicing when you have advanced your right foot to correct the tendency ——!

Topping your drive for the third time ——!

Lofting the ball out of sand pit over bunker into another sand pit —— —— ——!

Hitting elm tree and having to go back 200 yards for ball —— —— ? ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ! ? ?

Driving ball into pond and head of club coming off —— —— ? 9 0 8 3 7 3 1 d h j e u t ! ? !

Own caddie nudging opponent's caddie when you address ball O—O T K J O U R T !—!

Opponent holding his watch on you when you have lost your ball. O Scrumthound Blawrentijam Fridenzo! ! ! ! ! ! —— —— ——!

When you start out with a joyous private hunch that you are on your game and you foozle every shot in 18 holes. O Prowg the Flugebectial Bolofeathered Snorcken to Eternal Gadunkensloam —— —— ——

"See what I mean? President Wilson could have done much better than 'Tut, tut!' A man of his education and advantages! He probably didn't realize that it was a snobbish thing to do—holding back the correct expression when everybody had a right to expect so much more of a man in his exalted position!"

Pushing, crashing, staggering through he came into a strange place. It was as if a giant had taken a huge spoon and scooped out the top of the earth deep—very deep. All of this great hollow was filled with trees and tangled undergrowth. It was full of vague shadows in the glimmer of earliest dawn. Francois, standing there sobbing, ghastly with paleness, with matted hair and wild-staring eyes and gasping mouth and wet torn clothes, was a fit demon for the haunted spot. He saw nothing, no one; with that there was a soft snapping of twigs and a movement in the darkness farthest from him; a movement toward him. Tottering he crawled to meet it; in another second the shadows had shaped into figures—a peasant boy on a horse, leading another horse.

Then he stood close to them, and the boy, leaning over without a word put something into his hand, and Francois, swaying with exhaustion, saw that it was a flask. He took a long swallow of cognac and his chilled blood leaped, and with that he had caught the bridle from the lad and was in the saddle.

Silently, without a word spoken, they climbed the shadowy slope under the overhanging trees of Riders' Hollow. Silently, fast, they rode through the pale darkness, through the slow-coming day, down wooded roads, across fields, always toward the sea. Steadily the day came; now they were galloping most of the time, only pulling to let the horses breathe going up a hill, or to guard them from stumbling down one.

In the shadow of trees, in a lonely lane, the peasant boy stopped his horse suddenly and made a short gesture toward the flask sticking out of Francois' coat pocket. His strength was going again; it was exactly the right moment. Another swallow of brandy and he rode on with fresh courage. But something in the gesture of the peasant boy; something about his seat in the saddle, about the touch of his hands on the rein, gave Francois a curious undefined shock. In the growing daylight he turned toward the silent rider. The coat collar was up and the broad-brimmed soft hat drawn down. The slim figure, outlined against the cool pink vastness of the morning sky was clad like an ordinary young peasant—yet! There was a poise, a sure grace, which seemed unlike a peasant, which seemed like—

"Have we far to go?" Francois demanded suddenly in French.

The head turned swiftly; black exaggerated lashes lifted and under them were the blue eyes he knew.

"Alixe."

He cried it out loud, reckless, forgetting everything. But she did not forget. In an instant her hand was on his mouth, and she was whispering in terror.

"Francois, dear Francois, be careful. We are not safe yet. We have a village to ride through—see, there is a house. It is almost time for them to be awake. Ride fast. It is two miles yet."

They were racing again over the soft ground, the horses' unshod feet making little noise, and Francois' heart was playing mad music. No need now of cognac. Then they were galloping down the sand of a lonely beach, and with that there was a little group of people and a boat drawn up; and they had pulled in the horses, and Francois felt himself lifted off like a child and lying like a very little, worn-out child in the general's arms; and the general was crying, swearing, hugging him without shame. Pietro was there; Pietro was rubbing the thin hands in a futile useless sort of way, and holding them by turns to his face. Alixe, her peasant hat off now, bent over them, lovelier than ever before, not minding her boy's dress, and smiled at him, wordless. There was a huge man also who took the horses, and Francois wondered if he had heard aright that Alixe called him "little Battista." Wondering very much at everything, the voices grew far away and the faces uncertain, and he decided that it was without doubt a dream and that Battista would unlock the door shortly and bring in his breakfast. And with that he knew nothing more till he awoke in a boat

CHAPTER XXIII.

REST AND SAFETY.

He heard the sound of waves outside, the slipping of ropes, the flapping of sails. He kept his eyes closed a few minutes, not daring to open them. There was a blessed atmosphere of rest and safety about him; he feared to find it unreal if he opened his eyes. He feared to find himself in the straw of a dungeon. He listened attentively—surely sails and cordage and slapping waves—and then he was aware of the motion of a boat. Cautiously he peered from under half-closed lids. A small room, a boat's cabin; nothing to tell if he were in the hands of friends or of enemies. Yet—was it a dream that he had seen the general and Pietro, had ridden long miles in the dawn with Alixe? Such dreams come to comfort poor prisoners—he knew that. But at that point his eyes flashed wide and his arms flew out. Something more had crept into that circumscribed field of his vision—a quiet figure sitting in a dark corner of the little room.

"Alixe!"

Not a dream, not another world; just the close sweetness of her face bent over him, of her hands holding his, of her courageous soft voice speaking to him caressingly as if he were a child, as if he were dear to her.

"You must not talk, Francois. After a while—not yet. You are very weak."

So he smiled and lay happily, clutching her hand with his long, hot, shaking fingers, like a bird's claws for tainness. But a hunted beast may not rest absolutely till it knows if the bloodhounds are distanced. The cavernous eyes turned on Alixe with a question, and she understood.

"You want to know if you are safe, dear Francois?" and she stroked his hand. "Yes. You are on the boat of little Battista—Luigi's boat it is now. Little Battista gave it to Luigi when he went to France, and Luigi is his friend and also one of Pietro's people. You will hear about that later. We are going now to the harbor of Commachio, 60 miles from Castelforte. You are to be put on board a big ship there, and taken away to safety. You are safe now—rest in that, for it is true."

When he opened next his eyes opened swiftly and turned to the corner where Alixe sat. It was not Alixe there this time, but the general. And the general came and sat down by him and patted his hand and swore softly at him, saying, "sabre de bois," and "nom d'un chien," and such things; and called him his own boy, and told him how his mother and father were well and confident of his rescue; yes, and told him also how it was Alixe who had waited every night for him in Riders' Hollow, and would let no one take her place.

"It was the best arrangement," said the general. "For Pietro is too well known—it would have been unsafe for you both. And I am so much the old officer that I should have been remarked instantly; also I am heavy in the saddle. But Alixe passed easily for some peasant lad with a led horse for his master; also she rides light and so could save the horses, which was important, for only two horses could we have and they were to be in service one knows not how long.

Francois asked a feeble question.

"Ah—Pietro. He is a fine sort, our Pietro. They adore him here in his country. There is a farmer back there who owed life and home to the Zappis, to Pietro's father and mother. The horses were his. They were brought after dark and returned before sunrise, but it was far, and hard on the beasts. And a risk for the good Giuseppi; but he was glad to serve Pietro; they adore Pietro.

Quite malapropos, the general leaned over at this point and stretched out a heavy hand and patted Francois' pale cheek and smiled and said, as he had said so many years ago on that morning when the news came of the marquis' death, "It is a good thing to have a son, my Francois." And Francois, being fed shortly after, fell asleep like a tired baby.

And the next time he awoke it was with a new feeling; with a desire and a hope to live. Pietro sat watching him and brought him warm milk and held his head up as he drank it, like a woman. Then, in quiet slow tones, he explained all the puzzle which Francois had by now begun to wonder over. It seemed that just before little Battista had brought Francois' letter to Vicques, Pietro had received another unexpected letter, from a Colonel Hampton in Virginia, whose estate lay next the 6,000 acres of land which the Marquis Zappi had bought 15 years before. Colonel Hampton wrote with two requests. The first was that the Marquis Zappi should come to Virginia, or send some one with authority to look after his property. The land was going to rack and ruin for want of management; the uncontrolled slaves on the place were demoralizing to the neighborhood. Colonel Hampton had done what he could but he had not the power of a master, and moreover he was busy with his own large estate. The marquis should come or send a qualified agent at once.

The next object of the letter was to ask that the marquis should receive and entertain the nephew of Colonel Hampton, Mr. Henry Hampton, who, sailing on Colonel Hampton's ship, the Lovely Lucy, would bring this letter to the marquis. The ship would go first to England and discharge there her cargo of tobacco and after that it was to be at the service of young Mr. Hampton, to visit such countries of Europe as he might choose, for six months. Mr. Hampton had many letters to people in England but none elsewhere, and Colonel Hampton would be obliged if the marquis would receive him at his estate of Castelforte and let him see something of Italy from that point of vantage. The marquis might then, if he thought good, return to Virginia in the Lovely Lucy, and either set matters on a firm enough footing to be left, or else—which the colonel thought the better plan—stay with them and become a country gentleman of Virginia. The colonel had heard that there had been political trouble in Italy, but hoped that at this time the country was at peace and the marquis comfortably established in his own castle.

All this the young marquis, an exile of five years from his native land, had read at the chateau of Vicques. He had considered deeply as to what he might do about Carnifax, his estate in Virginia. He could not go himself, for he was in close connection with the work of Italian patriots outside and inside of Italy; with Mazzini in London; with others in other places. And he did not know any one whom he could send.

So the matter stood when the big little Battista had brought Francois' letter to Vicques. And when Alixe had appealed to him to take Francois' liberation on his shoulders, with the thought of the secret passage and the vaguely outline plan of escape had come to him the recollection of Colonel Hampton's letter and the long sea voyage to Virginia.

So when Mr. Henry Hampton landed at Calais, a tall and very handsome and very silent young man took quiet possession of him and told him that he was the Marquis Zappi and that Mr. Hampton was to go with him to the chateau of Vicques in the Jura. There was a certain gentle force about this young marquis which made opposition to his expressed wish something like banging one's head against a stone wall. Mr. Henry Hampton had planned going direct to Paris, but he went to Vicques. And on the journey down the Marquis Zappi opened out a plan which richly rewarded him for his pliability. Mr. Hampton had somewhat clearer ideas on Italian politics than his uncle; he knew enough to detest the Austrians and to have a keen sympathy for the long, heroic, losing fight—so far losing—of those devoted men who were counting their lives as nothing for a united Italy. The scheme of helping to rescue a prisoner out of an Austrian fortress was an adventure such as made his eyes dance. Mr. Hampton was 21 and full of romance, romance as yet ungratified. So, Pietro told Francois, this long explanation over, the Lovely Lucy was anchored at an unimportant island outside the port for which they were bound, and Francois and the others were to go on board and set sail promptly for some port of France. There the general, Alixe, Pietro and little Battista were to be put ashore, and Francois was to sail across to Virginia with Mr. Hampton and take possession for Pietro of his American estates.

Francois, lying in bed with his eyes glowing like lanterns, listened. But as his friends finished he broke out, with a sharp pain in his voice.

"Pietro! I want to see my mother."

And Pietro was silent, laying a quiet hand over the unsteady one. Without a word he sat so and let the sick man think. The line of red which came into the pale cheeks told that he was thinking intensely, and at last, with a shivering sigh which went to the other's heart:

"You are right, Pietro," he said. "It is a wonderful plan for a broken man. It is like you to do everything right without a word said. The sea voyage, the healthy life in Virginia—that ought to make a man of me again soon, ought it not, Pietro?"

Pietro could not speak as he looked at the wrecked figure, but he nodded cheerfuly.

"As for your place, I'll have that in order in a month, and in a year it will be a model for Virginia; and then I'll come home."

Pietro smiled.

"Come home and fight for the prince—for our Prince Louis. Do you remember that afternoon at the chateau, Pietro, and the strange boy, and how he fascinated us and how—" the weak voice stopped at every few syllables, but slipped on again cheerfully. The familiar charm of the boy Francois was strong as he talked. "And how he was not to be frightened by any danger of an old wall—" and Francois stopped, smiling.

"And how you saved him," Pietro added.

"That was a chance," said Francois quickly. "But, Pietro, do you remember how Alixe turned on you because I had done it? Droll little Alixe!"

"She always scorned me because I was not wonderful like you, Francois. You were always the hero," Pietro said gently, and pressed the skeleton hand under his own.

Francois' eyes blazed up at him then as they had done so often in boyhood. "Not that, Pietro. You do not understand. It was because Alixe wished always to see you first. I was older and had a certain quickness—she wanted you to have my poor facility as well as all of your own gifts."

Pietro smiled his kind quiet smile. "My Francois, I have no gifts. And if Alixe is more proud of you it is right, for you are a pride to all of us and I am the last to grudge one particle of honor or love to you. Francois"—Pietro's deep voice stopped, and then he went on in his straightforward, simple way—"Francois, it is not possible for me to tell you how glad I am to have you, my brother, back from the dead."

And weak, nerve-wrecked Francois, holding tight to Pietro's hand, turned his face to the wall and cried.

Now that the end of effort was over, the strain of the long years showed their effects in a collapse; the streched chord had fallen loose, relaxed as if it might never make music again. When the time came to leave the sail boat of Luigi and go aboard the Lovely Lucy, the effort was too much for the man who, two night before, had shown the nerve and agility of an acrobat. When he must leave the boat and make the change, he fainted, and, wrapped in a blanket, ghastly white, unconscious, the little Battista carried his light weight up the ladder of the American ship.

CHAPTER XXIV.

THE SACRIFICE.

Young Henry Hampton, thrilled to the core at this drama, bent over him, as Battista laid him on the deck, and looked up anxiously at Pietro.

"Is he living?" he asked.

He was living, though for an hour or two the devoted friends who cared for him doubted if they had not got him back only to lose him. But that last effort of the chango to the ship being past, when consciousness came again he grew strong more rapidly.

"I thought—the Austrians—would nab me—as I came aboard," he whispered, smiling gaily as he gasped the words to Alixe. "It was—firm in my mind."

And Alixe laughed at him and told him that they were far out on the Adriatic now, safe under the American flag, and the Austrians left 200 miles behind.

"Even if they had—nabbed me," whispered Francois, "those two days with you would have paid."

And Alixe shuddered a little and told him to go to sleep and stop thinking of Austrians, for they were out of his life now forever.

"My Seigneur," said Francois, next day when the general took his turn at sitting by his bed, "may I ask a question?"

"Any question in the world, Francois, my son," the general growled at him, as if the tender words were a defiance to an enemy.

Francois hesitated. "About Alixe and Pietro."

The general shook his head. "Ah, that! That I can not tell you, Francois. Sometimes I believe that I have been mistaken, that—" the general as he stopped looked oddly at Francois and smiled. "Sometimes I believe that even I, even Gaspard Gourguad, might make a mistake in trying to play the good God, and arranging lives. That might be—yes. In any case I cannot tell."

Francois, thinking deeply, hazarded another question. "He loves her?"

"I believe so, indeed," said the general. "He cares most to be with us—with her. Ah yes, I have no doubt that he loves her. But why it goes no farther—sapristi! It is beyond me—that! I would knock their foolish heads together, me—but that is not convenient."

"Does she love Pietro?"

"Mon Dieu! How can a mere man say that? She is a woman. I do not Carlyle's Caustic Tongue.

A delightful Carlyle story is told in connection with the painting of a portrait of Carlyle by Sir John [illegible] which was slashed by a militant suffragette in the National Portrait Gallery, London.

The portrait was painted in 1877 at the home of Millais. Carlyle and his niece, who accompanied him, were both impressed with the magnificence of the furnishings and the objects of art with which it was filled.

"And does all this—er—come from paint pot?" queried the niece. The artist replied in the affirmative. Then the characteristic comment came from Carlyle:

"Ah, well, it shows what a number of fools there are in the world."

Only three sittings were given and the picture is classed as "unfinished." Maybe that remark is the reason why it was never completed.

Her New Device.

He stayed too late and accepted no hints.

Then the lovely young girl resorted to a new device.

"Taking any interest in the Mexican language?" she asked as she did not hid a yawn.

"No," he replied.

"Buenos noches," she said. "I learned it today."

"What is it?"

"Why, that's 'good-night.' Adios. "What's that?"

"Good-by. It's very simple. Do you go? Gracious. Bueno. Con mucho gusto. Adios."

And he went down the steps without telling her he had lived two years in Mexico City.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Needful.

The shades of night were falling fast when through an Alpine village passed a youth who bore mid snow and ice a banner with this strange device:

"Safety first!"

The maiden didn't ask him to explain. Instead of that she laughed satirically.

"You've sure got 'em all backed off the boards!" she exclaimed, with impalpable irony.

"But Pietro loves her?" Francois asked again his wistful smiling eyes searching the general's face.

Then she told him about the animals —how the great gray horses he had known still drew the golden loads of hay in from the fields with their grandchildren driving the next wagon. How the ducks in the pond were hundreds now and were sent to the market and made much money for Le Francois. And how that old gift of his in choosing oxen was making a fortune for him—only now he never played cards coming home from market day—or at any other time. In fact, the gentle mother had made one stern rule for her family ... one of them ever played since that time a game of chance.

And then Alixe told Francois about the castle. She told him about ... Moison and his brazen curiosity in staying to hear the prisoner's letter, and his address of thanks to the Almighty when he knew that Francois was alive. And she told him about little old Coq—now an aged horse of 25 years, spoiled and naughty, but yet beloved and used only for his own health's sake, she told how Coq would run to her for sugar and burrow his bold nose into her coat pocket, snorting impatiently and how he had thrown Moison's little girl over his head two months before as he used to throw all of them.

So on ... long, bright calm morning at sea Francois lay in the hammock and watched the million little waves glisten and break for unknown miles over the sunlit water, and listened to the voice he loved best in the world as it told him of those others whom he loved also and of the places dear to him and he wondered that he had indeed come through the long nightmare of prison to this happiness.

"Mr. Hampton has been talking to me about Virginia, it must be a beautiful country," said Alixe. "I should love the free friendly life of those great domains. I believe I could leave France and Vicques for such a country as that, where there are no political volcanoes or top of which one must live. With us it is always plotting and secrecy. Always a war to look back on or to look forward to. I should like to go to Virginia."

"But," said Francois, with his great eyes glowing, "the war one now looks forward to in France will be short and glorious. And after that will be peace, for there will be a Bonaparte ruling, and that means strength and good government."

"How you believe in the Great Captain and in his blood," and Alixe smiled down at the pale face on fire with its lifelong enthusiasm.

"One must," said Francois simply, and paused, and went on. "For me—you know, Alixe, how it is. How the star of the Bonapartes has always seemed to be my star. I believe that. I believe that my life is tied to that house. Napoleon was more than human to my mind, and his touch set me aside for his uses in my cradle."

"And made you a chevalier," Alixe considered. "That was a true accolade, Francois. You would have a right to that title under another Bonaparte."

"I believe so, Alixe."

"And my father believes it. So you must hurry and get well and come back to France and be fit for work when the prince needs you, Chevalier Beaupre. My father has told you that a movement is preparing? He is reckless, my father, and it troubles me. It might be unsafe for him to live in France if his part in these plots were known."

"Then you could come to Virginia—to Carnifax," and Francois smiled.

But Alixe flushed. "That is Pietro's estate, not ours," she said quickly; and then she rose and bent over the sick boy. "I must go to my father now," she said, and caught the pitiful hands suddenly in both hers. "But oh! Francois, I wish I could tell you how it changes all the world to have you back again"—and she was gone.

Francois, trembling with a rapture he could not quiet, lay, not stirring, because he feared to break the spell of the touch of her hands; feeling within him a rebel hope that yet he would not let take hold of him. Could it be? Was it true? Did she care for him and not for Pietro? Was that the reason that in all these years she and Pietro were still only sister and brother? Yet, he caught and choked at the thought. Even then he had no right, he could not, would not tell her what she was to him. He would be Pietro's friend always as he had promised long ago; more, 1,000 times more now, when Pietro had given back to him freedom and life and hope. Pietro loved her; she would come to love Pietro in time; he would never take her from him, even if he could. What was his own happiness compared to that of these two so close and dear? And also it was a bitter bliss to sacrifice his joy for that of his seigneur, for the man who had given him everything. To Francois, smiling out at the sunny ocean, giving up the love of his life, came that other blessedness of renunciation, and he was happy.

The next day the general and Alixe and Pietro and the little Battista were put ashore in France, and the Lovely Lucy sailed on with young Henry Hampton and Francois to Virginia.

CHAPTER XXV.

A SOCIAL CRISIS.

On a day the ship sailed into a splendid roadstead, big enough to hold the ships of half the world. Then into a wide flashing river, the James river, four or five miles wide down there at its mouth. And up and up the bright river, the narrowing river, between its low green banks, with now and again a glimpse of a large house and of gardens and lawns green with June, as one sailed past.

Harry Hampton told Francois who lived in them as they went by—Harrisons and Carters and Byrds and Randolphs—strange sounding, difficult, English names in the ear of the Frenchman. Young Mr. Hampton knew them all, it seemed; many of them were his cousins. Francois listened, surprised, interested, to the word picture which the Virginian unconsciously drew, as he talked of every day happenings, of a society and a way of living quite different from any the Frenchman had ever heard of.

With that they were in sight of Roanoke house—one might see the roofs of the buildings over the trees—Harry Hampton pointed it out with a touch of excitement in his grave manner. Then, as one slipped along the sparkling water, there was a sharp bend in the stream, and as they turned it the large silvery green slop of the lawn lay before them, with its long wharf and barges lying at the waterside, and a ship unloading its return cargo from England.

"It is the Sea Lady," called young Hampton. "She is in before us—and she sailed so long after."

He made a quick movement forward with him pathetic broken step—for this only son of the Hampton family was a cripple.

There were people gathering on the lawn, negroes drawn up in line; the women in bright-colored turbans, men and women both showing white teeth as they grinned with the pleasure and the excitement of watching the ship come in. Then a white light figure ran down the broad greenness, and a girl stood, golden curls on her shoulders, a straw hat with blue ribbons tying down some of the golden curls, but not all—stood and watched and waved an eager friendly hand.

"It is my cousin, Lucy," Harry Hampton said, and Francois, looking at him, saw his eyes fixed on her intently.

In a few minutes more, leaving the ship with his halting careful step, Francois saw him kiss her cousinly—yet it seemed not altogether cousinly—and with that he was saying a word about "My new friend, the Chevalier Beaupre," and the girl's quick hand clasp and the warm welcome in her voice of honey, made Francois feel as if a place in her friendship had been waiting for him always.

Then, from back of her, from somewhere, towered suddenly a tall man, with large features, and first seized Harry Hampton's hand and then turned to the stranger with the same air of entire pleasure and hospitality.

"My nephew's friend is welcome at Roanoke house," he said, and Francois, with his few words of English, understood enough to be warmed to the soul at his first contact with southern hospitality.

"It is my uncle, Colonel Hampton," Harry's voice was explaining.

They would not hear of his going to Carnifax—not for days, not for a month; why should he go at all?—Colonel Hampton asked. If he were to be only a year or two in Virginia, why trouble to set up housekeeping alone in that big house, when Roanoke house was here and in order, and only too glad to keep him. So Francois for a week or two stayed. And found himself, shortly, a notability. Harry Hampton, his boyish ambition for adventure and daring denied every personal outlet, because of that accident in babyhood which had started him in life hopelessly lame, was as proud of his salvage from the Austrian bird of prey as if Francois' record had been his own. Much more frankly proud, for he could talk about it, and did. Alixe had told him a great deal, and the episode of the headlong rescue of Prince Louis Napoleon, the capture and imprisonment and final theatrical escape, went like wild fire, about the countryside, and stirred all the romance of the warm-blooded southerners. Every house wanted the hero to break bread, and under young Harry's proud wing Francois went gladly to meet all these friends of his friend. As the general had said years ago, his simplicity struck the finest note of sophisticated high breeding; moreover, he had lived with high-bred people in more than one country; the aristocrats of Virginia were delighted with his young nobleman, as they thought him—with his charm of manner and his stirring history, with the lines of suffering still in his thin face and the broad lock of gray—the badge of that suffering — in his dark hair, with the quaint foreign accent too, and the unexpectedness in the turns of his rapidly increasing English.

Francois accepted the title of Chevalier, which Alixe had given him in speaking to Henry Hampton, and which Henry Hampton used in introducing him to the noblesse of the south, partly because he believed it his, partly because it pleased the child-like French vanity in him. He had no thought of claiming a social position not his own; no thought that a social position might count with these hospitable new friends. Names known in American history were spoken at the dinner table of those days in Virginia.

"It is the Chevalier Beaupre, Mr. Clay," Lucy Hampton answered a question from a tall man with a great domed head.

She was placed next him at a dinner at Martin's Brandon, the old home of the Harrisons. "The young man with the band of white in his hair—it is the Chevalier Beaupre—of France. He is staying at Roanoke." And she went on eagerly to give a quick summary of the history of this stranger, whose personality attracted the interest of so distinguished a person. As she talked, Henry Clay, of Kentucky, bending to listen to her sliding speech, watched, under his deep brow, the man across the table.

"It is a good deal of history for a man of 26," Clay considered, and with that his resonant assured voice lifted across the talk of the dinner table. "Chevalier Beaupre!"

Francois turned swiftly and his great dark eyes met the piercing look of the great statesman. "Mais oui, Monsieur"—dropped back into his own tongue at a sudden touch, always.

GETTING THE MATTER RIGHT

Little Story of Colonel Goethals That May Explain How It Is He Gets Things Done.

The repeal of the much argued-about Panama canal tolls brings to mind an excellent story of Colonel Goethals, the moving spirit in the construction of the great canal.

One morning a rather fidgety subordinate came in to the colonel's office.

"I got your letter, colonel," he began, "and I came to—"

He got no further, for the colonel with uplifted eyebrows cut in:

"Letter? Letter? There must be some mistake. I have written yo uno letter!"

"Oh, yes, colonel," replied the man, "I've got it here. It's about the work down at Miraflores. Now, you see—"

Again the colonel cut in.

"Oh, I see! But you misled me. You spoke of my letter. You meant, of course, my orders."

The colonel's blue eyes stared coldly at the argumentative man, who, suddenly feeling that the conversation was at an end, "faded away."—London Answers.

The Trouble.

Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, the well-known suffragist, recently refused to marry a young man who wanted the phase "to obey" used in her wedding ceremony. Doctor Shaw believes that the vow to obey, made by the modern woman of culture and action, is both impossible and degrading.

"But don't think," said Doctor Shaw the other day in Philadelphia—"don't think I'm a cynic as regards marriage. Oh, no! If you're looking for cynics, go to the other camp, the camp of the antis and reactoinaries.

"I heard an anti say the other day: "'The trouble with marriage is that a woman believes all a man says to her before the wedding, and nothing he says after it.'"

And He Did.

An enthusiastic citizen, on the verge of a trip to Europe, was rejoicing over the fact and descanting on the pleasures to come.

"How delightful it will be," said he to his wife, "to tread the bounding billow and inhale the invigorating oxygen of the sea! The sea! The boundless sea! I long to see it! To breathe in great drafts of life-giving air. I shall want to stand every moment of the voyage on the prow of the steamer with my mouth open—"

"You probably will, dear," interrupted his wife encouragingly; "that's what all ocean travelers do."

He Was Celebrating.

"You ought to be ashamed of yourself," observed the Sunday school teacher, severely, to the small girl who had but too obviously omitted to wash her face that morning. "Look at your little brother; see how nice and clean he is."

The small girl sniffed. "Well," she replied, "it's 'is birfday."

Last Great European War

History repeats itself—but with variations. A hundred years ago, France alone, under the leadership of Napoleon, faced Germany, Austria, Italy, Russia and Great Britian and won.

At thirty-six, Napoleon had conquered every nation of Europe and in the battle of Austeritz in 1905, practically brought the continent under the subjection of the French Army. Then Austria, Germany and Russia formed the great coalation against France, only to be beaten in battle after battle until they were forced to sue for peace. England, thanks to her impregnable navy was the only nation not forced to acknowlege Napoleon's rule.

It was the snow covered steppes of Russia rather than the military science of Europe that finally turned the tide against him.

The present European crisis gives a particular opportuneness to the offer of Napoleon's Memoirs, announcement of which is made in another column of this paper. Few books throw a more illuminating and interesting light on the underlying causes of those years of conflict than the fascinating story of the man, whose meteoric career left Europe sown with the seeds of discontent.

"Eventually" said Napoleon, "Russia will rule the world." The present conflict will go far towards determining the truth of his prophecy and day by day it will form an absorbing illustration of the advance which has been made in the art of warfare since the days, only a century ago, when France had all of Europe at her feet.

Napoleon's Memoirs, written by his private secretary, Baron von Meneval, will give you a clearer insight into that tremendous upheaval of Europe which the present crisis seems destined to produce.

Transferring Box Kites.

The United States experts use box kites in many meteorological experiments, but have hitherto found difficulty in transporting them across the country from one station to another by reason of their shape and size. A novel type has been devised which, by cutting a few strings and loosening four bolts, permits the kite to be knocked down into flat, compact form, very much like a collapsible box or carton.

SENT HOME THE BAIT?

J. V. McMillin has always been known to be a fisherman of no mean ability. He has been spending some time in Wisconsin on an outing trip and writing back to Britt friends about the whoppers he lost and various other fish stories, but on Monday morning's express came the best one of them all, and he sent the proof right along. The story consisted of a big ten pound "muskie" sent to his son Lloyd. Mac said that the fishing was somewhat poor and he was merely sending a sample of the bait they were using to catch the "big ones." Hereafter Mac can tell some pretty good ones and get by with them too, on the strength of that sample that he sent home.—Britt Tribune.

Filtered Gaslight For Rural Homes

Acetylene Gaslight is a natural light. In fact it is plain, everyday, world-old Sunlight. But it is Sunlight muzzled so that you can use it as "soft" or as brilliant as you choose, by the mere turning of a tap on the chandeliers, or by the use of plain white glass globes.

Moreover, Acetylene is practically filtered light from which all useless or injurious color, soot, or excessive heat factors are eliminated.

On this account an Acetylene flame, one-tenth the size of that from Kerosene, Gasoline or City Gas, gives as much reading light as ten-tenths of these other illuminants. Which means that Acetylene produces only a fraction of the heat, air-consumption and Carbonic Acid Gas poisoning which other lights produce.

About two days' labor will install a PILOT Country Home Acetylene Plant and forever dispense with the dangerous lamp cleaning, filling, wicktrimming and chimney-wiping needed 365 days a year with kerosene lamps.

You can use Pilot Acetylene too as fuel in your kitchen range—clean, concentrated gas fuel that will do away entirely with coal and ashes.

Write me today how many rooms and how many barns and outbuildings you've got—then I will tell you how little it need cost you to install a suitable Pilot Outdoor Lighting Plant—an Automatic Pilot to set out in your back yard and which will be good for many years' steady use afterwards, and pay for itself in the labor it saves. (CHAPTER XXVIII—(Continued).

Francois stood regarding her, with frank admiration in every muscle of his face. He smiled, the same gentle amused smile with which he had addressed the portrait. "You never talk too much for me, Mademoiselle. It is a pleasure to me always to hear your vocie," he answered in the deep tone of a Frenchman, the tone that has ever a half not of tragedy, as of some race-memory which centuries do not wipe out. "Only," he went on speaking in French, "one must not talk English. That is breaking the law, you remember, Mademoiselle."

She answered very prettily in his own tongue, in words that halted a little. "Very well Monsieur. I will do my best." He still gazed at her smiling, without speaking. One could understand that, to a girl of more self-contained people, this open homage of manner, this affectionate gentleness, might seem to mean more than a brotherly loyalty The girl's pulse was beating fast as she made an effort for conversation. "What were you thinking of as you looked at the fire when I came in, Monsieur? It had an air of being something pleasant. Did I not say all that beautifully?" she finished in English.

He corrected a lame verb with serious accuracy and she repeated the word, and laughed happily

"But you havent's said yet what you were thinking about."

The large brown eyes turned on hers. "It was of my old home in France, Mademoiselle, when I was very little," he said simply "A large fire of logs makes me think of that."

"Tell me about it," she begged with quick interest. "Will you? Was there always a fire at your house?"

"But no, Mademoiselle—not, of course, in the summer. It was of the winter time I thought, when the neighbors came, in the evening, and we sat about the hearth, sometimes 20 people, each at his different duty, and my brothers and sisters were there, and the dear grand-mere was there and—" he stopped "Le Mademoiselle really wish to hear how it was in that old farmhouse of ours, in the shadow of the Jura mountains?"

"Indeed, Mademoiselle wishes it," she assured him "It will be a trip to Europe I am sure I shall speak better French for going to France for 10 minutes, and being among the French people, your friends Wait now, till I am comfortable!" She turned a deep chair so that it faced him, and dropped into it "Put a footstool for me," she ordered, as southern women order the men they care for—and the men they do not. And she settled back with her little feet on it and smiled at him. For a moment the man's brilliant gaze rested on her and the girl saw it and thrilled to it. "Now, monsieur, racontez-moi une histoire," she spoke softly.

Francois Beaupre's look turned from her to the fire, and the air of gazing at something far away came again. "It is a picture I see as I think of that time of my childhood," he began, as if speaking to himself "A picture many times painted in home-like colors on my brain. Many a night in the winter I have sat, a little boy, by the side of my grandmother, at that great hearth, and have looked and have seen all the faces, harve heard all the voices and the fire crackling, and the spinning wheel whirring, even as I see them and hear them tonight. I was always close by the grandmere, for I was the dearest of the children to her. Sometimes long after my bed time I sat there, but very quietly, for fear that my mother might remember and send me to bed, yet she liked to please the grandmere, so I stayed often longer than the others. It was a great room, and across one corner was the hearth which was raised like a throne, mademoiselle, from the floor, 12 feet wide. One burned logs six feet long within it, and from up the chimney swung the cremaillere—the chains from which were hung the kettles. It was the house of a peasant, mademoiselle knows, yet it was the best house in the village. Often, of a November night, the neighbors would come in, perhaps a dozen, perhaps more, and the young men had their work—they arranged the flax for spinning, it might be—and the young girls prepared apples to dry, and the mothers' knitting needles flashed back and forth on the stockings for our winter wear, and the grandmere would be spinning linen threads for our clothing—whirr, whirr—I can hear the low sound of her wheel. And always I, Francois, would be on the stool at her side, watching and listening. For my father was a great reconteur, and he told stories of the war and of the legends of that country. It was an ancient country you must know, mademoiselle, and the name of our village itsef was from the Romans. Vicques was the name, and that as you know, mademoiselle, comes from the Latin word vicus, a village. So that there were old castles in ruin in those parts and tales of buried treasure, and ghosts in armor guarding it, and great dogs that breathed flame, and other things pleasantly horrible to the ear of a little boy. On the cold nights, as the fire roared up the chimney and the grandmothers' wheel whirred softly, my father and the other men told these tales, and I listened, quiet as a mouse in my corner, and from time to time I saw a young man lean over and whisper in the ear of one of the girls, and I wondered why her face became red as the firelight.

"And from time to time one of the men, as he talked, rose up and strode across the room to the great oak table where lay always on a wooden plate a long loaf of black bread, with a knife, and always a glass and a bottle of eau-de-vie—brandy. And I remember how manly it looked to me, watching, when I saw him take the loaf under his arm and hold it, and slice off boldly a great piece of the fresh rye bread, and pour out a glass of brandy and toss it off as he ate the bread. The stories seemed to grow better after the teller had done that.

"And always I waited, even through the tale of the ghost and the fire-breathing hound, till the talk should swing round, as it did ever toward the end, to the stories of Napoleon that were fresh in men's minds in those days. It was as if I sat on needles before my bedtime came, yet I did not dare to be restless and move about for fear that my mother might send me suddenly to bed. But I always gave a sigh of content and always the grandmere patted my head softly to hear it, when my father cleared his throat and began—

"'There is a small thing that happened when the emperor was marching'—and then he was launched on his tale."

A great hickory log fell, rolled out toward the hearth. The carved nymphs and shepherds seemed to frown in deep disapproval at this irregularity, and the girl in the deep chair smiled, but the man sprang up and put the log back in place with quick efficiency. He stood silent by the tall mantelpiece, deep yet in his reverie, as the flames caught the wood again and sparkled and sputtered.

"Did any of them ever see Napoleon—those men who talked about him?" the girl asked.

The Frenchman turned a queer look on her, and did not answer.

"Did any of your family ever see him, monsieur?" she asked again.

The alert figure stepped backward, sat down again on the gilded chair and leaned forward consideringly. Francois nodded as if to the fire. "But yes, mademoiselle," he said, in a whisper.

"Oh, tell me!" the girl cried, all interest. "Who was it? How was it? It couldn't be"—she hesitated—"yourself! If you, whom I know so well, should have seen the emperor!" She caught a deep breath of excitement. This was another Lucy Hampton from the serious young mistress of Roanoke House whom the country people knew. "Quickly Monsieur, tell me if it was yourself!"

Francois turned his eyes on her. "Yes, Mademoiselle" he answered.

A log slipped and slid and the sparks caught a new surface and flew aloft in a crackling uproar; the elfish light showered brilliancy on the girl's fair hair as she bent forward with her white teeth gleaming her blue eyes shining, stirred with the dramatic air of the Frenchman. With a catch of her breath—

"You have seen Napoleon!" she said, and then, impetuously, "Tell me about it!" But, though he smiled at her with that affectionate amusement which she seemed, of all sentiments, oftenest to inspire in him, he did not answer.

"Monsieur! you will not refuse to tell me when I want to know so much!" she pleaded, and went on. "How old were you? Did he speak to you? What did he say to you?"

And the Frenchman laughed as if at a dear child who was absurd. "Mademoiselle asks many questions—which shall I answer?" he demanded, and the tone to her ear was the tone of love, and she trembled to hear it.

"Answer"—she began, and stammered and flushed, and stopped.

Francois went on, little thinking what damage he was doing with that unconscious charm of voice and look.

"It is as Mademoiselle wishes, most certainly. I will even answer Mademoiselle's two questions at once to please her. It was when I was not quite three years old, Mademoiselle, at home in the farm house in the valley of the Jura."

"And he spoke to you, to your own self? Are you sure?"

"But yes, he spoke to me, Mademoiselle."

"What did he say?" The smile on Francois' face went out and into its place swept an intensity of feeling: he answered solemnly: "There were but few words, Mademoiselle, but they have been much to my life. They shall lead my life, if God pleases, those words shall lead it to the fate which they foretold."

"What were the words?" whispered the girl, impressed with awe.

Francois suddenly stood erect and stretched out his arm as if to hold a sword. "'Rise Chevalier Francois Beaupre, one day a Marshal of France under another Napoleon,'" he repated dramatically. "Those were the words the emperor said."

CHAPTER XXIX.

THE STORY AGAIN.

The girl, her face lifted to him, looked bewildered. "I don't understand."

The visionary eyes stared at her uncertainly. "I have never told this thing," he said in a low tone.

"Ah—but it's only me," begged the girl.

"Only you, Mademoiselle!" His voice went on as if reflecting aloud. "It is the guiding star of my life—that story: yet I may tell it"—he paused—"to 'only you.'"

Again the girl quivered, feeling the intensity, mistaking its meaning. "I should be glad if you would tell it," she spoke almost in a whisper, but Francois, floating backward on a strong tide to those old beloved days, did not notice.

In his mind was the memory of the great entry of the farm house, and the children crowding about the grandmother, and the gentle old voice, now gone into silence, which had told the tale. The sunshine lay in patches on the floor, the breeze tossed the red and yellow tulips in the garden, and through the open door he saw his mother move about the kitchen getting dinner ready before the father should come in from the fields. All the early life, long dissolved in the past, materialized before him, and his heart ached with a longing to speak of them, to relieve thus the pressure of the crowding thoughts of home.

"It may seem a simple affair to you, Mademoiselle—I can not tell that. It has affected my life. The way of it was this: Napoleon marched to Germany in the year 1813, and passed with his staff through our village. The house of my father was the largest in the village, and it was chosen to be, for an hour, the emperor's headquarters, and the emperor held a council of war, he and his generals, there. I, a child of three, was sleeping in a room which opened from the great room, and I wakened with the sound of voices, and ran in, unnoticed, for they were all bent over the table, looking at the maps and lists of the mayor—and I pulled at the sword of Marshal Ney. And the marshal, turning quickly, knocked me over. I cried out, and my grandmother ran to me, and I have often heard her tell how she peeped from the door under the shoulder of the big sentry who would not let her pass, and how she saw a young general pick me up and set me on my feet, and how all the great officers laughed when he said that the sword was in contest between Marshal Ney and me. And how, then, the young general suggested that, to settle the point amicably, the marshal should draw his sword, and give me the accolade—the blow of knighting. And so mademoiselle, to shorten the tale, it was not the marshal, but the emperor himself who chose to do it. He made me kneel before him, I—a baby—and he struck my shoulder the blow of the accolade, and said the word which I have told you."

Francois sprang to his feet and stood as he repeated once more the emperor's words. His voice shook.

"Rise Chevalier Francois Beaupre, one day a marshal of France under another Bonaparte," he cried, thrilled through with the words which he repeated.

The girl leaning forward, watched him; with a gasp she spoke. "Then—that is why you are really Chevalier Beaupre? Did the emperor have the right to—to knight you?"

"But yes, mademoiselle," Fancois answered with decision. "I have studied the question, and I believe that the accolade—the knighting—was always a right of the monarchs of France, disused, perhaps at times, but yet held in abeyance, a right. My family did not agree with me. My father, who was very practical, thought that it was a mere joke of the emperor's—or if not a joke, then a caprice which carried no weight. But the seigneur—the General Gourgaud, who was one of Napoleon's officers, and others, mademoiselle, believe as I do. And to my mind it is impossible that the emperor's word should carry no weight. There has never lived on earth a man of so enormous a force, and even the smallest acts of his were history. If the emperor ordained, then, that a little child of the people, a peasant, should be a noble—why, it was well within his power—it was done. And I am that child."

The glance of his brilliant eyes met hers with a frank calmness which showed that he claimed nothing which he did not feel; that this haphazard nobility had lived in his soul and grown with his growth, and come to be part of him. With a gentle humility, very winning as it sprang from his gentle pride, he went on.

"I know, mademoiselle, that I am a peasant and that I must be content with a small place in life at the present I know this. And even that position which I have is more than my brothers. For you must know, mademoiselle, that the others grew up to be farmers or tradesmen" He hesitated and then in a few words told her of General Gourgaud, the seigneur of Vicques, and how he had given the peasant boy all the opportunities which his own son could have had. And as he talked he remembered how, after his father's ruin, he had stood inside the bare, little, new cottage and watched through the window his mother standing at the gate and talking to the seigneur, who held Lisette's bridle. It seemed to him he could see the dark braided hair of La Claire, coiled around her head, and the deep point of her white neck handkerchief, as she stood with her back to him, and the big bow of the apron tied about her waist. The picture came vividly. And it opened his heart so that he talked on, and told this stranger in a strange land many things that had lain close and silent in his heart. He told her about the general's gruffness, which could not hide his goodness; and how he had come to be the child of the castle as well as of the cottage; something of Pietro also he told her; but he did not mention Alixe.

"You spoke of three children, monsieur; who was the third?" asked Lucy

Francois went on as if he had not heard the question. "It was a happy life, mademoiselle," he said. "And it has been so ever since—even, for the most part, in prison. I have wondered at times if the world is all filled with such kind people as I have met, or if it is just my good luck."

Lucy Hampton had been reading aloud to her sick black mammy that day, and some of the words of the book she had read came to her, and seemed to fit. "The kingdom of God is within you," she quoted softly, to Francois. Then she considered a moment.

"Monsieur, would it be impertinent for me to ask you—a question a personal question?"

"I think not, mademoiselle" he smiled at her

She went on, hesitating a little "Father was talking of how Prince Louis Bonaparte served, a few years ago, with the Italian revolutionists. I wondered if—if by chance you had fought under him."

He shook his head. "I had not that happiness, mademoiselle."

"The heir of the Bonapartes now is that Prince Louis Napoleon, is it not?" she questioned.

"Yes, mademoiselle."

"And he made an attempt on the city of Strasburg, a few months ago, and was tried for it—and all that—father talked about it so much I could not help knowing a little about it, but I don't remember distinctly."

"But certainly, mademoiselle. It was the prince."

"Then, haven't they just done something to him? Isn't there something people are interested in just now about that Prince Louis?"

The grave bright smile flashed out at her. "In truth, mademoiselle, there is. The prince was shipped by his jailers on the frigate Andromede more than four months ago, for what port is unknown. One has not heard of him lately, and there are fears that he may have suffered shipwreck. But I do not fear. It is the hope of France, it is France's destiny which the Andromede carries. It will carry that cargo safely. The young prince will yet come to his own, and I—and perhaps you, mademoiselle—wo knows?—will cry for him 'Vive l'Empereur!'"

The tone full of feeling thrilled through the girl. She flushed and stammered as she went on, but Francois, carried away by his enthusiasm, did not think of it. "If you will let me ask you just one question more, monsieur, I will promise not to ask any after."

The flicker of amusement lighted his face. "Ask me 1,000, mademoiselle."

"No, only one. Did that seigneur—that General Gourgaud—did he have any—any daughter?"

The Frenchman rose in a business-like way, the way of a teacher of language at the end of a lesson.

"One," he answered briefly in a matter-of-fact tone. And then, "Mademoiselle has talked enchantingly well this evening, but I have perhaps talked too much. I may have tired mademoiselle. I have the honor to wish you a good evening."

His heels together, he stood in the doorway and made his bow. "Au plaisir do vous revoir," he said, and was gone.

CHAPTER XXX.

THE PRINCE COMES.

The glittering morning sunlight of late March flooded the eastern dining-room of Roanoke House. As the bare branches of the trees outside moved up and down in the biting breeze, the shadows danced on brown blackness of wainscoted walls, and against that deep background Lucy Hampton's gold head shone as Madonna heads shine from dim canvasses. A fire blazed on the hearth; hot dishes steamed on the table; the girl's face, the cracking fire, the polished silver reflected from polished mahogany; the soft-shod, solicitous service of a white aproned negro; all this made the room fragrant with homeliness in spite of the fact that one could see one's breath in the air. But they were used to it—the hardy Virginians of those days of open fires and no furnaces, of many luxuries and few comforts, and in happy ignorance of world progress, they suffered cheerfully and were strong.

Colonel Henry Hampton faced a portrait of the first Henry Hampton, of Roanoke, stately with brass buttons and silver lace, set in the panels 75 years before. Lucy had concluded her broiled chicken and bacon and hot bread, and now as he, late for breakfast always, followed in her wake, he read the Norfolk & Portsmouth Herald, with which a colored boy had that morning ridden out from Norfolk, eight miles away. It was before the time of daily papers, except in a large city, or two, and this of once a week was an event; a boy was sent into Norfolk the day before its publication that the colonel might have it at the earliest moment.

The colonel's heavy-dragoon type of face was handsome and weak; a bushy mustache jutted from beneath his fine nose, as if in an effort to make it soldierly and masculine. The features were modeled on the big-boned, lean features of men who had done things; only the spirit was left out. It was as if a man who inherited his ancestor's massive silver platters had no meat to put on them. His uncertain eyes, under their splendid brows, wandered from column to column of the little sheet, leaving this and that article unfinished, and as he read he reported bits of news to his daughter.

"How would you like to see a live prince, Lucy?" he inquired. "The Herald states that we have one with us, not 10 miles from Roanoke. Prince Louis Napoleon was landed from the Andromede, in Norfolk, only yesterday. Poor young man," he went on condescendingly, "he has no money, I understand, and here he is stranded in a strange country with his fortune to make, and no assets but a title. It's little that will help him in the states!"

Colonel Hampton glanced over to see if she were listening to his words of wisdom he liked an attentive audience. He was enchanted with her expression. She had dropped knife and fork and, with her blue eyes stretched wide, her white teeth shining, was drinking his sentences.

"Father! Is Prince Louis in Norfolk? How can it be? Monsieur Beaupre was talking to me about him last night, and he did not dream of his coming here. Surely he would have known if the prince were expected."

Colonel Hampton smiled sarcastically. "You will find that your father occasionally knows more than even Monsieur Beaupre, and even on French questions, I may add," he announced, from a mountain height. "But in one point you are right, my dear. The prince was not expected by any one, not even by the great Chevalier Beaupre. He was exiled from France, as you may or may not know, some four and a half months ago, on account of his attempt on Strasburg, and was sent out on the Andromede, with sealed orders. No one knew his destination until he landed, on the 29th, in Norfolk. There"—the colonel got up and walked to the fireplace and stood with his back to the blaze, and his legs far apart, masterfully. "There my dear, I have given you a dose of history for a female mind. How are you going to amuse your little self today?"

The female mind paid no attention to the digression. Lucy had long ago, finally if unconsciously, put her father's personality into its right place.

"Father, is the prince really poor and alone in this country?"

"Poor—yes, I fancy—I am quite certain, in fact. Alone—that depends. The authorities of Norfolk received him with some distinction, the Herald states, but he is putting up at the inn—one would conclude that he was not an invited guest at many of our great houses."

Lucy flew like a bird across to the fireplace. Her hand went up to either side of the colonel's face. "Father, quick! Have Thunder saddled, and ride in—quick, father—and bring the prince out here to stay with us. Give the order to Sambo, or I shall."

Colonel Hampton's eyes widened with surprise. "Why, but Lucy," he stammered. "Why—but why should I? What claim have we—"

"Oh, nonsense," and Lucy shook her head impatiently. "Who has more? Aren't we Virginians of the James river princes in our own country, too? Hasn't our family reigned in Roanoke longer than ever his reigned in Europe? Haven't we enough house room and servants to make him as comfortable as in a palace? But that isn't the most important. It is a shame to us all, father, that no one has invited him before, that a strange gentleman of high station should have to lodge at an inn. Why hasn't Cousin George Harrison asked him to Brandon? And the Carters at Shirley, and the people at Berkeley—what do they mean by not asking him? But we won't let Virginian hospitality be stained. We will ask him. You will ride to Norfolk at once, will you not, father dear?"

The touch on his check was pleasant to the vain and affectionate man, but the spirit of the girl's speech, the suggestion of the courtesy due from him as a reigning prince, to this other prince forlorn and exiled, this was pleasanter. He pursed his lips and smiled down. "Out of the mouth of babes," he remarked, and drew his brows together as if under stress of large machinery behind them. "My little girl, you have rather a sensible idea I had overlooked before, that"—he cleared his throat and black Aaron standing tray in hand across the room, jumped and doller his eyes—"that," he continued, "a man of my importance has duties of hospitality, even to a foreigner who comes without introduction into the country."

"Introduction—bother" remarked the daughter. "The id a of a nephew of the emperor of France needing—" she stopped. This was the wrong line of argument "I think he will be delighted to come to Roanoke House," she went on. "It is so beautiful even in winter," and she looked proudly about the fine room and the portraits on its walls looked back at her proudly too.

"Many distinguished guests have been delighted to visit Roanoke Colonel Hampton answered stiffly The bankrupt sprig of a parvenu royalty—"

"Father—what horrid big words! I haven't any idea what they mean," the girl interrupted, "except that you're abusing Prince Louis who is probably having a bad breakfast in that stuffy inn. Go along, father, bring him out to Roanoke, and we'll show him what Virginia breakfasts are like"

Colonel Hampton's sense of importance was tickled by the thought of having for a guest a scion of so famous a house; his genuine instinct of kindliness was aroused, moreover, time hung on his hands these late winter days, and the plan appealed to him as a diversion.

"Aaron, tell Sambo to saddle Thunder," he ordered.

Prince Louis, in his dingy parlor at the inn, looked at his visitor from between half-shut eyelids, and measured him, soul and body. He considered the invitation for a silent moment. This was one of the great men of the country. The prince had already heard his name and the name of his historic home. It was well to have influential friends, more particularly as no letter awaited him as he had hoped from his uncle, Joseph Bonaparte, with the American introductions for which he had asked. A visit of a few days at this place of Roanoke could do no harm and might lead to good.

"I thank you very much, Monsieur le Colonel," he said gravely, yet graciously. "You are most good to desire that I visit you. I will do so with pleasure."

The people of Norfolk were awake to the fact that an exiled prince had suddenly dropped among them, and when an aquiline-faced, foreign-looking small, young man rode out from the city by Colonel Hampton's side, sitting his horse like an accomplished cavalryman, more than one citizen turned to look with comprehending interest To a southerner it would seem not out of proportion that the czar of Russia and the monarchs of England and France should together visit his city, and in offering them his best he would rest content as to their entertainment, which is surely the well-bred attitude. So that the good people of Norfolk who stopped to gaze a moment at the future emperor of France, the kinsman of one of earth's greatest conquerors, were not unduly impressed. One and another lifted his hat and bowed deeply to Colonel Hampton with a smile of approval. It was right, it was traditional, that the Hamptons of Roanoke house should take charge of a distinguished stranger, and, moreover, it was extremely pleasant for the stranger. And impassive Prince Louis, who appeared to look at nothing, missed neither the self-respecting interest of the citizens in himself, nor their profounder sense of the importance of his host. Very little passed within range of those dull gray eyes which was not filed away for reference in the mind behind the mask.

Out they rode through the sunlighted, wind-whipped country, dozing restfully through its last winter's nap, stirring already at the step of lively April on the threshold. The air was sharp, and nipped at the prince's fingers and toes, but it was exhilaration to be across a horse again, and the exile's spirit—the case-hardened heart of steel which failure and misfortune never broke till it broke forever at Sedan—grew buoyant. That "something about the outside of a horse which is good for the inside of a man" worked its subtle charm on this finished horseman and horse lover, and he was gently responsive as the colonel talked fluently on.

It was on his own affairs that the colonel talked, of his thousands of acres, his hundreds of slaves, his methods, his crops, his tobacco, and then of his family and their history here in Virginia, and at last, most absorbing topic of all, he talked of himself. He explained to the prince how it was that he came to speak French so well, and not a gleam in the filmy gray eyes betrayed the prince's opinion. But a pause came in the stream of words and Prince Louis' resonant voice filled it.

"Does it so happen, Monsieur le Colonel, that there is in these parts a Frenchman of—of instruction—a man whom I might use as a secretary? I shall have need tomorrow to write letters. Would you know of such a man, Monsieur le Colonel?"

Nothing pleased Monsieur le Colonel more than to be master of the situation. "Most certainly," he answered blandly, and felt that the prince must note how no demand could find Colonel Hampton at a loss. "Most certainly. My daughter's French master would be the very fellow. He is intelligent and well educated, and what is, more to the point, a most ardent adherent of your family, prince. He has talked to Miss Hampton with such a vehement enthusiasm that, by the Lord, Harry, I believe he expects to see you fly in with wings, sir—I believe she does," and the colonel laughed loudly and heartily. It was as good a joke as he had ever made.

A vague movement twisted the muscles of the prince's mouth, but it was a regretful smile. He was wondering if the inn parlor would not have been better than this fine landscape and good horse with Colonel Hampton's steady conversation. But he had plenty of French politeness. "It is good of mademoiselle to give me her favor," he said graciously. "Mademoiselle is young—a little girl!"

ETTING THE CAPTAIN RIGHT

ife Astonished That Husband Didn't Know That Osteopath Was Not a Fish.

When Mark Twain was at York Harbor, Me., an old fisherman, named Captain Brooks, because one of the humorists's best friends One day Mark dropped in on the old tar and said: "Captain Brooks, do you know whether there is an osteopath at the harbor?"

"Wal," said the old captain, "there's been, but I ain't never ketched one yet, and I've been fishin' here nigh onter forty years."

"Well," said Mark, "I guess I'll go and inquire at the drug store."

That evening when Captain Brooks reached home, he told his wife about it, and she said:

"You're a bright one, Jed Brooks; that ain't no fish; it's a bird."

FACE FULL OF PIMPLES

4240 So. California Ave., Chicago, Ill. —"About a year ago my face was full of pimples and red spots. To sleep one night without itching was almost impossible. Some of the pimples would get big and red and if I touched them they would pain, while others would get white heads on them and when they broke open some matter came out. They would burn and itch and I scratched them so that sometimes they would break and bleed. That always caused them to be worse. I bought all kinds of salves and creams and I found out that they did me no good. I noticed the Cuticura Soap and Ointment advertisement and sent for a free sample. I went to the drug store and bought a cake of Cuticura Soap and some Cuticura Ointment and I found the pimples were drying out. In two months I was well." (Signed) Chas. J. Peck, May 7, 1914.

Distinctly Suspicious.

It was during the maneuvers, a British weekly tells us, that a soldier was being tried for shooting a chicken in a prohibited ground.

"Look here, my man," said the commanding officer to the farmer who brought the accusation, "are you quite certain that this man shot your bird? Will you swear to it?"

"No, I won't do that," replied the canny farmer, "but I will say he's the man I suspect of doing it."

"That's not enough to convict a man," retorted the officer, considerably nettled. "What raised your suspicions?"

"Well, sir," replied the sturdy farmer, as he slowly mopped his forehead with his bandanna, 'I saw 'im in my property with a gun, then I heerd the gun go off; then I saw 'im putting the chicken into his knapsack; and it didn't seem sensible somehow to think the bird committed suicide."—Youth's Companion

"ON TO RICHMOND"

BY E. R. HUTCHINSON, ROCKVILLE, MD.

"On to Richmond" has been ringing in my ears for more than half a century, so the other day I went there. Instead of I capturing it, the city captured me. It is a mine of captivating historical interest.

Its site was discovered by Newport and Capt. John Smith. Until 1779 the capitol had been at Williamsburg. On this date it was moved to Richmond, and the model of the building was made in France for Thomas Jefferson, who was then governor. The building contains a vast number of priceless relics, but I mention but few. I saw the original coal stove or warming machine, three stories high, made by an Englishman in 1770. I sat in the "speaker's chair" used by the speakers in the House of Burgesses in colonial times. I saw the first Virginia newspaper published after the Declaration of Independence, dated July 26, 1776.

The collection of portraits in the state library is a superb one. There are 84 in all. To me the most interesting one is that of Pocahontas, and is the only one in existence taken from life. The princess was 21 years old when this was executed. Among this large number are those of Washington, Count Rochambeau, Burgoyn, Clay, Lee, Columbus, Marshall, Lord Spottswood, Henry and Jefferson.

A unique collection of souvenirs of antique and historical value called my attention to a strange blending of two wars. Here I saw Patrick Henry's sword cane and by its side a canteen from a dead union soldier on Spottsylvania's bloody field; a Revolutionary flag, and near it the confederate flag that flew from the capitol during the civil war; a horn drinking cup of Cornwallis' taken at Yorktown in 1781, and a pike of John Brown's at Harper's Ferry in 1859; the original parole of Cornwallis, written in 1778 at the surrender of Yorktown and signed by him, and the last letter written by Stonewall Jackson. What a disharmony, yet how full of a nation's life!

I read the bail bond of Jeff Davis, signed by Horace Greeley and Cornelius Vanderbilt, and also the marriage bond of Thomas Jefferson.

The park surrounding the capitol is beautifully graced with fine statues, the most interesting one being that of Washington, by Houdin, made from life, eight years before his death.

I walked about the streets, my objective point being the confederate museum, of which I shall write again. Suffice it to say that within its walls are the most interesting objects I have ever seen in this country. As I walked, I noticed the old home of John Marshall, and went in. Here I sat in chairs

POPULAR MISS MACY.

By A. Maria Crawford.

(Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Elizabeth Macy has a good time wherever she goes. I wonder why she is so popular?" Kity Manir turned to Louise Richmond questioningly. "She isn't pretty, is she?"

They looked across the room where Elizabeth was holding court. She was laughingly dispensing her charms with an impartiality that would have delighted her mother if she could have seen her, and at the same time filled the the hearts of the men about her with jealous curiosity. Her brown hair was parted and drawn low over a high forehead. Her eyes were blue as the sea in sunshine, and her white lace gown with its touches of sapphire velvet showed a slight, well modeled figure.

"Men like her because she is jolly," answered Louise. "She has my brother Fred in tow this afternoon, yet we both know that he is deeply in love with Mary Gaines. He has probably quarreled with his lady fair and gone to Elizabeth for comfort. She adapts herself to the individual needs of the men about her. That is the secret of her popularity."

"I don't think so," argued Kitty Manir warmly. "Men don't always need comfort. Why every man in this room just seems to gravitate toward her as if they were drawn that way."

"Well, she understands and discusses things with men from their own viewpoint."

"No, I think you are wrong again. A man doesn't care particularly for a woman with a masculine viewpoint unless he is very effeminate himself. A real man seeks the complement of his own thought in an essentially feminine woman."

"Well, I won't concede the point that men love Elizabeth. She has a host of friends, but mighty few lovers. Why don't she marry if men love her so?"

"What a question, Louise! I suppose she is waiting for the right man as I am now. Here comes Dick. I'll see you again."

"You know I had an idea that Mrs. Martin was giving this big party to announce her visitor's engagement to Peter," said Sidney Wilton to Elizabeth.

"I never thought of that," returned the girl. "The fact is, I never thought of Peter Martin wanting anything."

"He certainly has everything but a wife and he can pick and choose as he pleases."

"Peter is attractive, but it isn't just to the girls Sidney, and certainly not gallant of you to say that he can pick and choose as he pleases. Here he comes now. Don't tease him. He'll tell us if he wants us to know."

"This is my party, gentleman, so for once I am a privileged character," laughed the tall host who had somehow managed to keep the spirit of happy youth in his brown eyes, although he was nearly 40. "I realize that it is criminal to carry off the belle of the party, and that is Elizabeth's good fortune wherever she goes, but I would like to steal her away for 15 minutes, with your kind permission."

"A penalty for the deed!" cried Fred Richmond.

"All right! What is it?"

"When are you going to explode the bomb of your engagement to Miss Johnson, your mother's lovely visitor? I say old man, you've been a sly dog. Out with it!"

Peter never changed color. He would have allowed himself the pleasure of getting angry if the man had not been his guest.

"Miss Johnson," said Peter with quiet dignity, "is engaged to mother's nephew. That is why she is visiting us." He offered his arm to Elizabeth, who had flushed painfully at the personal question. Peter never indulged in gossip or petty presonalities.

They made their way through the crowded rooms to a conservatory where the waters of a fountain caught the colors of the hundreds of lights about it and flashed with the tints of airy fairy rainbows into the clear pool below, where silver and gold fish darted in and out beneath the lily pads.

"Here," said Peter, "is a nice quiet place where I can perhaps persuade you to do something kind and charitable for me."

"What it is?" asked Elizabeth.

"Mother and I want you to stay with us for dinner tonight. There will be just the three of us. Our visitor is going home with one of the girls. Please say yes!"

"I am delighted to stay. You were so serious that I thought you were going to ask me to take care of some orphan you had decided to adopt or to do something really charitable. I always welcome your mother's invitations and yours, too," she added, her eyes twinkling.

"I'll bet those fellows back there are watching every door for you," chuckled Peter.

"You are trying to flatter me for some reason. I believe there is an orphan after all. You see I have heard all about the little boys you pick up and send away to be cured of diseases. You do a lot of good with your money, Peter. What a pity all rich men are not like you!"

"Now you are flattering me. What's the reason?" mimicked Peter.

"You really are very good, Peter."

"And good men," sighed Peter, "are never loved by women."

Elizabeth laughed. "That doesn't worry you, does it, Peter?"

"Everybody wants to be loved," replied Peter evasively. "I don't like to be personal, but I—I am very fond of you," stammered Peter reddening, "and I wonder if it is true that you are going to marry Sidney Wilton. He is a fine fellow," he added generously.

Elizabeth stole a look at the man's bent head. "There is an engagement between us." Her voice was very soft and there was a tender ring in it that was new to Peter. "I think that every woman ought to marry. I don't want to flitter through life like a butterfly, without responsibilities or the hundred and one little duties to loved ones that make life worth living to a woman."

"How sensible you are. I hope you are going to be very happy."

When a servant had announced dinner and the two had rushed into the dining room, Peter began apologizing. "Your guests will think I am a boor. I didn't realize that it was time for them to go."

Mrs. Martin kissed Elizabeth. "Never mind, son. Probably nobody missed you in the crowd. I am so happy to have Elizabeth here. My dear, will you sit here?" indicating the foot of the table.

"Why that is your place."

"Yes, but it's your face that Peter wants to see there three times a day. Will you two excuse me until time for coffee? The party has tired me so. Make him happy for my sake," she whispered to the girl. "He loves you so."

She was gone before either of them could find anything to say.

"Mother knows that I love you, Elizabeth, although I have no right to tell you now," said Peter when he had found his voice. "Sidney is a lucky fellow."

Elizabeth's heart seemed to hold a bird that was singing a lilting love song. "You didn't ask me what kind of an engagement there was between Sidney and myself. It is to play golf—"

"Elizabeth!" Peter was out of his chair and bending over her. "What do you mean?"

"Well, you never told me you loved me and I was so tired waiting for you—"

There was another waiting while Peter motioned the butler out and took the capital of his own waiting with interest added from the lovely flushed face of the girl.

"You were so popular," began Peter, "that I didn't dare."

"Jealousy makes poor bait for you, doesn't it?" demanded the girl.

Peter had his chair moved around by Elizabeth. Even the round mahogany table put too great distance between them, he said.

"Is this your favorite kind of cake?" asked Elizabeth when the dessert was served. And when he answered in the affirmative, she added, "I'll get your mother to teach me how to make it."

It was an illuminating remark to the old butler. It was an unmistakable announcement.

DECADENCE OF VILLAGES.

Lamentable Loss of Old-Time Ways of Interesting Their People.

From the New York Post.

The typical American village, from New York to New Mexico, is often wanting in civic spirit. That fact is writ large upon its face. It has one focus of interest in the school and half a dozen in the churches and lodges. But it lacks the solidarity that would manifest itself in a genuine village pride. A population small enough to be really a unit and permanent enough to strike its roots deep, yet does not organize itself. This is not true of the towns of New England, which 50 years ago looked after their lyceums, their commons, shade trees and white palings. But the dreariness of most western, Atlantic and southern villages testifies to the rule, they bear an unkempt aspect which, as William Allen White wrote, requires the touch of twilight to give it kindliness. If the traveler glances about for a cause he may think he finds it in the rather sordid atmosphere. The country town seems preoccupied with the day's work. . . . The change must follow upon the birth of a new social spirit in the village itself. Wherever in the future we have a beautiful center we may be sure a set of social-minded people has been created.

Deep Knowledge.

From the National Magazine.

At an interval during a recent session of the supreme court of an eastern state, Judge ——, turning to an associate on the bench, said:

"By the way, you know everything; tell me so and so."

The judge addressed replied: "Why do you say almost?"

Whereupon the judge said: "I haven't told you everything I know yet."

GAME LITTLE SERVIA GIVES FREELY OF HER POPULATION TO WAR

Austrian Invasion Greeted As New Opportunity For Patriots To Win Glory—Army Model Of Military Proficiency.

Washington, D. C. Special: "If the United States should call to the colors as many men in proportion to the population as Servia has, it would mean an army of upward of 8,000,000 men," says a statement issued by the National Geographic society, at Washington, D. C., today, "and this does not take into account the fact that the recent wars in the little country have made such fatal inroads into the percentage of adult male population. Probably, if the United States called as many men to the colors in proportion to the adult male population, it would mean an army of 12,000,000 men.

"These figures show what a heavy hand Austria-Hungary laid upon the little country whose army gave such a remarkable account of itself during the two wars it has just passed through before this third one descended upon it. How terrible the ravages of the wars in the near east have been is indicated by the census of compared territory taken by Bulgaria in the early months of the present year. That count showed that where, previous to the wars, there had been a population of 702,000 there is now a population of only 301,000. Of course Servia did not suffer that much, but these figures are inndicative of the great wars it had to face.

"Military critics everywhere admit that in matters of discipline, leadership adamantine spirit, and clean, there is no army its size in the world that can make a better showing than the Servian army made during its wars with Turkey and Bulgaria. It is a fighting force that is conceded to have every quality of strength that a military machine may possess.

"Its plan of organization is distinctive. Compulsory service is personal for all able bodied men and pecuniary for all who are incapable of personal service. These latter must pay an indirect tax of 30 per cent additional. The military forces are divided into a national army and the Landstrum, which forms the last line of defense. Service in the national army begins at 21 and ends after 45. In the Landstrum it begins at 17, ends at 21, begins again at 46, and ends at 50.

The national army consists of three bans: The first ban including all able bodied men between 21 and 31, the second ban all between 31 and 38, and the third those between 38 and 45.

"The first ban has its cadre, a school through which every able bodied man of 21 must pass. No one is allowed to change his nationality while belonging to the first ban; nor can any member thereof receive any outside appointment or become even a monk until he has served his term in the army.

"The term of service in the standing cadre is two years in the cavalry and artillery, and one and a half years in the other branches of the establishment. There is a six months' service for those in the schools of the country who can pass an examination for lieutenant of reserves. There is also a six months' enlistment for recruits from whose homes at least two others have served the full time.

"All those who possess cattle and suitable carts are under obligation to turn them over to the army when needed. Those who do not possess cattle and carts have five per cent added to their taxes for the remount fund."

Honor for the Canal Makers.

From the Evening Post, Chicago.

Congress seems to be unable to fix upon a plan for proper recognition of the work of the men who have dug the Panama canal. There are a half dozen engineers who should be honored by the lawmakers for the great work done on the isthmus. They shouldered the heaviest burden, underwent the greatest anxieties and accomplished commanding things. They ask neither honors nor other kinds of reward, but they deserve the thanks of congress and such promotion as can be given them without interfering with the advancement on the lists of their brother officers.

The men who did the great work on the Isthmus of Panama are Goethals, Gorgas, Gaillard, Sibert, Hodges and Rousseau. Gaillard is dead, but congress fittingly recognized his service to his country. All the others are living. The eminently proper thing for the senators and representatives to do is to give the thanks of congress to the five great canal constructors now living and to provide for their promotion to the next higher rank at the time of their retirement from active service.

It is known definitely that most of these officers, if not all of them, would prefer that promotion should come at the time of retirement, when their advancement would not work hardship to others. They know the feeling shown in times past when junior officers were promoted to the rank of brigadier generals over the heads of comrades who were their seniors. The highest honor which can come to an army officer comes in the form of the thanks of congress.

Promotion is material reward. The Panama engineers have shown that they are big men. They will not complain if no promotion is given them. The thanks of congress would be grateful to them. It is understood that men in minor positions in the canal work have been instrumental in preventing the House and Senate from doing their duty by the chief engineer, the great sanitarian, Dr. Gorgas, and the division engineers. Congress ought to have courage enough to do the right thing and to do it quickly.

One Last Steal.

From the Dayton News.

A story is told that Huerta, in the last days of his presidency, gave to the Rothschilds a concession of vast areas of land in Lower California, receiving therefor $600,000, much of the land being granted at the rate of one cent an acre.

Carranza promptly says that such a concession will not be sanctioned by his government, and Carranza will be right if he nullifies it when he comes into power, if he does.

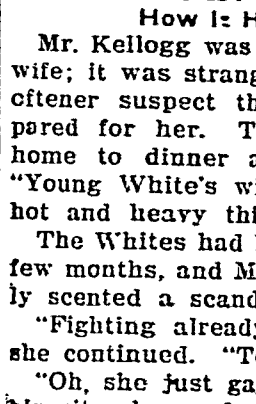
It is this sort of thing which has kept Mexico in the unfortunate condition she is in. The land, which should have been held as the patrimony of the people, has been given into the hands of a few rich families and powerful syndicates.

It is not surprising that Huerta should have tried to line his pockets at the expense of the people of his country. This sort of thing is what might have been expected of a man of his stripe. Whatever may be the outcome, Mexico is well rid of him.

MOTHER OF SCHOOL GIRL

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Daughter's Health.

Plover, Iowa.—"From a small child my 13 year old daughter had female weakness. I spoke to three doctors about it and they did not help her any. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had been of great benefit to me, so I decided to have her give it a trial. She has taken five bottles of the Vegetable Compound according to directions on the bottle and she is cured of this trouble. She was all run down when she started taking the Compound and her periods did not come right. She was so poorly and weak that I often had to help her dress herself, but now she is regular and is growing strong and healthy."—Mrs. MARTIN HELVIG, Plover, Iowa.



Hundreds of such letters expressing gratitude for the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished are constantly being received, proving the reliability of this grand old remedy.

How It Happened.

Mr. Kellogg was always teasing his wife; it was strange that she did not oftener suspect the pitfalls he prepared for her. This time he came home to dinner and said, gravely: "Young White's wife gave it to him hot and heavy this morning."

The Whites had been married but a few months, and Mrs. Kellogg promptly scented a scandal.

"Fighting already? How dreadful!" she continued. "Tell me about it."

"Oh, she just gave him one of the biscuits she made for breakfast," replied her husband.—Youth's Companion.

Eccentric Inn Names.

We are losing most of our eccentric inn names, but in Germany they are adding to them. Berlin now boasts the "Comfortable Chicken," "Cold Frog," "Stiff Dog," "Thirsty Pelican," "Dirty Parlor," "Musical Cats," "Boxers' Den," and "Lame Louse" Leipsic has "The Old Straw Bag," Stadtohen an "Open Bunghole," and the vicinity of many a cemetery in the Fatherland is graced by a "Last Tear."—London Chronicle.

London's Foreign Quarter.

Soho, the district around which now centers the night life of London, is one of the most interesting parts of the old city. In the last 300 years it has changed from the most fashionable residential quarter through the stages of aristocratic bohemianism and business invasion to becoming the most distinctive foreign quarter and the nucleus of that little section where life begins at midnight and ends with early breakfast, says a writer in the New York Tribune.

Potash in Pompeii.

Dr. Kleiber, Swiss scientist, has discovered that the thick layer of ash covering the ruins of Herculaneum and Pompeii contains large quantities of potash and argil, a valuable agricultural fertilizer. He believes the region around Vesuvius is rich in potash. It is proposed that the Italian government shall exploit the volcanic deposits commercially.

Easily Elucidated.

"Johnny," asked a little miss of her small brother, "what is a widower?" "I'm surprised at such ignorance," replied Johnny. "Anybody ought to know that a widower is a widow's husband."

Ireland's Fisheries in Bad Way.

Statistics show that Ireland's fisheries continue to decline in amount of fish landed and the number of men and boats engaged. Capitalists are displacing individual fishermen.

Legislation abolishing home work in New York city was urged by witnesses before the United States commission on industrial relations. The witnesses differed as to the amount of work done in tenements. One witness said: "Most of the women are foreigners and do not know the language. If they do not want to accept what the boss offers them they do not get the work. They are paid as little as they will work for." According to Miss Lillian D. Wald, of the Henry street settlement, there is no way of supervising "inside" work and there should be drastic legislation abolishing it. She said that in these working places there was serious danger of infection from persons suffering with tuberculosis and fevers.

A write in the Yale Review, who notes that in 1740 beef could be bought in Boston at 12 cents a pound, seems to imply that that price was all it was worth. "Invariably a steak for dinner was heralded by the vigorous pounding with the potato masher, wielded by the stalwart arm of the cook." Tho meat, in fact, often came, he tells us, from the carcass of "a cow that no longer gave milk or a bull that had lost its bloom." Still there were many Englishmen in Boston in the Eighteenth century, and they must have been able to obtain somewhere roast beef that was worthy of their exacting palates.

The New York Edison company has perfected an apparatus for eliminating the smoke and cinder nuisance at its great Waterside station, New York. The smoke from the boiler plant, laden with soot and cinders, is driven at high speed through a sheet of water, by means of which practically all the material which constitutes a nuisance is deposited in a big water tank. The recent test showed an average extraction of 95 per cent.

The Central Canada railway, on which, it is officially announced, work will be begun this season, is to be the connecting line between the Edmonton, Dunvegan & British Columbia and the Pacific Great Eastern railways. It will tap one of the most fertile agricultural districts in western Canada, where settlers from many parts of the world have taken up homesteads during the last few years.

An electric range displayed recently in the windows of the Electric Light company at Salt Lake City, Utah, was operated continuously, both day and night, for a week, at a total cost of $1.18. This figure was based on a dis- at 4 cents a kilowatt hour, with a discount of 10 per cent. The stove contained one oven, the temperature of of which was automatically controlled by a thermostatic device.

The New South Wales government has decided to supplement its enterprises by the creation of a state bakery at Sydney. The government will acquire a bakery and bake bread for its own institutions. It is expected that the government will be able to deliver bread to the public institutions at 1 cent a pound. It is not intended to supply the general public from the government bakery.

In December work began on the bridge over the Juan Diaz river about nine miles from Panama. The wealth of the United Kingdom in 1914 was compted at about $12,-500,000,000, while a conservative estimate would place it now at about $85,-000,000,000, an increase of 580 percent, while population has grown 130 per cent. The income of the British people in this period has increased 700 per cent—from $1,500,000,000 to $12,000,000,-000.

FARM HAND MURDERS WOMAN EMPLOYER AND THEN KILLS HIMSELF

Double Tragedy Thought Due To Man's Discharge—Rumor He Was Infatuated.

Grinnell, Ia., Aug. 22.—Lester Noble, aged 50, employed as a farm hand by Mrs. John Cummings, about the same age, since her husband's death five years ago, killed the woman and committed suicide at the Cummings home, 10 miles southeast of Grinnell. Noble is said to have been discharged by the woman, which may account for the murder and suicide. There is a rumor that he was infatuated with the woman and that she discharged him for this reason.

Noble returned home from a neighboring town, put the team in the barn and went to his room on the second floor of the house, where he secured a revolver. On returning to the first floor he opened fire on the woman, the first bullet striking her on a finger. The second bullet pierced her head, causing instant death. After emptying the used shells on the porch, Noble returned to the woman's side and, kneeling down, fired a bullet through his own head, dying instantly.

A daughter and three sons of the woman were at home at the time. When the first shot was fired they fled to a neighbor's home nearby for assistance, but help arrived too late.

SHOWERS CAME TOO LATE FOR SOUTHERN IOWA CORN

Des Moines, Ia., Aug. 22.—Showers in southern Iowa Wednesday night were too late to help the damaged corn crop in that section, according to a statement made today by George M. Chappell, section crop director Although copious showers occurred over southern and eastern Iowa they will not be of any great benefit to corn Much of the corn in the southern counties has passed the stage where rain will aid it to any large extent. The same condition exists in many localities in the eastern section of the state.

Residents living in the vicinity of Hull avenue, between the Northwestern and Short Line tracks, were sorely disappointed when the fain failed to continue after giving promise of proving a real shower. A peat bed in that section has been burning for the last three weeks. It has burned a depth of nearly 15 inches.

WEBSTER CITY MAYOR WILL NOT LICENSE CARNIVAL

Webster City, Ia., Aug. 22.—There was going to be a carnival in Webster City next week. There isn't now, however. The lot was all engaged, the draymen under contract and all other arrangements made. Mayor Valentine, however, refused to issue a license and so the city will do its best to get along without the carnival. The mayor held that a carnival is inimicable to the best moral life of the community and that under no circumstances would he issue the license, despite the protests of the advance man that his shows were all clean and respectable and his program throughout of a high order.

FATHER IN AUTO WRECK WHILE CHASING ELOPERS

Colo, Ia., Aug. 22.—While Herman Beal, a wealthy farmer of this section, was making a dashing pursuit, in an automobile, of his daughter, whom he had reason to believe had eloped with a neighbor's hired man, the pursuing car met with a catastrophe which left a clear path for the elopers. When the wheels of Mr. Beal's automobile crashed into a bad bump, while going onto a bridge at full speed, the car turned over and pinned the pursuing farmer underneath the machine. Mr. Beal was badly injured. One ear was torn off and he suffered various cuts and bruises. As a result of the accident he lost interest in the eloping couple and declined to take any other measures to prevent the wedding.

CORRECTIONVILLE JOSHED BY CENSORSHIP BULLETIN

Correctionville, Ia., Aug. 22.—War was in the air in this burg Tuesday night. All that was needed was a leader to head an expedition to Sioux City to release the newspaper plants there from an execrable censorship. The Tribune and Journal did not arrive. Those who were waiting at the postoffice for the latest news from the rear were keenly dismayed. To conserve conversation the mercury, then standing at 100, the postmaster wrote on the postoffice blackboard: "Sioux City Tribunes and Journals not here." Somebody added: "Stopped by war censors." This censorship notation was taken seriously by a large number of people.

It was unheard of, in fact, not to be tolerated. What business had European war censors to halt the free circulation of favorite American newspapers? The idea finally spread that the United States war department probably had suppressed the daily newspapers in the effort to preserve the absolute neutrality of Americans.

Some cynics thought there could not be any greater impartiality than already had been observed by repeatedly stating in one column that Gen Gaston Bullovitch had marched his army up the hill and asserting in another column that he had marched it down again.

Still the war party was not satisfied. Excitement increased rather than diminished as the evening wore on. Some of the hot heads thought that by marching boldly to Sioux City the presumptuous foreigners, or the meddlesome war office of our own country, might be taught a lesson.

Only a few of the discerning ones ventured to suggest that somebody was trying to get away with a little pleasantry in adding: "Stopped by war censors."

IDA GROVE CHAUTAUQUA NOT FINANCIAL SUCCESS

Ida Grove, Ia, Aug 22.—The Maple Valley chautauqua will close its seven days' session today, and from a financial standpoint it has not been a success, although some of the entertainments have been of high merit. Tuesday of this week was "pioneer day," and among the speakers scheduled were Governor Clark and Secretary Wilson, but neither was able to be present. This was the biggest day in point of attendance, and will hereafter be one of the regular features of the annual chautauqua. Caleb Powers attracted the largest attendance of any of the lecturers, and while his talk was principally upon his own trials, it gave general satisfaction. The Thatcher Opera company was the most popular of the musical attractions. The sale of season tickets was up to the average of previous years, but the single admissions fell below that of other years and there will be a deficiency to be made up by the stockholders.

COUNTY AUDITORS AFTER GAME WARDEN'S SCALP

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Aug. 22.—The county auditors of Iowa are after the scalp of State Game Warden E. C Hinshaw. They came mighty near adopting resolutions at their annual convention here yesterday declaring that Hinshaw had shown "gross inefficiency in conduct of his office; had been unable to provide proper blanks for hunter's licenses, and had caused endless confusion in refusing to cooperate with the federal law regulating killing of Iowa game."

The resolutions which lambast the game warden from top to bottom were presented to the convention, but, after a warm discussion, were laid on the table. The vote was very close. Several delegates declared the passage of the resolutions would embarrass Governor Clarke.

The auditors elected officers for the coming year as follows: President, M. F. Finley, of Dallas county; vice president, Tom Darnell, of Warren county; secretary, B. S. McCulley, of Green county; treasurer, J. L. Harrihan, of Webster county.

GERMAN WARSHIPS REDUCE TWO SEAPORTS IN RUSSIA

Libau and Hango Declared To Have Been Demolished—Austrian Port Of Cattaro Also Reported To Have Been Shelled By French and British Warships—Strong Forts In Chain Of St. Petersburg Defenses Badly Damaged—Continue Fighting Along Prussian Border.

London, Aug. 22.—According to dispatches reaching London today, Libau, one of the principal fortifications in the string of coast defenses in the Baltic sea, devised for the protection of St. Petersburg, was badly damaged by a German fleet. The bombardment is reported to have continued two hours. The news of the bombardment was brought by the captain of a Swedish steamer. He said the inhabitants of Libau were panic stricken.

German warships also are reported to have destroyed the harbor works of Hango, Finland.

British and French warships are reported to have bombarded and greatly damaged Cattaro, an Austrian seaport, on Wednesday. No detail of the engagements at Hango and Cattaro are given.

RUSSIAN WAR OFFICE EXPLAINS OPERATIONS

London, Aug. 22.—A dispatch to the Reuter Telegram company from St. Peterburg gives a communication issued by the Russian general staff covering the operations of the army from August 15 to August 19, in which successes are claimed in skirmishes on both the Austrian and German frontiers.

"Austrian cavalry which entered Russian Poland at Kielce, Rijbizna and other ports," says the communication, "were driven back with great casualties while Austrian infantry, which attacked Kransnik was defeated. The Russians took 250 prisoners. On the Prussian border the Russians took the offensive near Windbaellen, captured Lyk and took eight German guns and two quick fires.

AUSTRIANS CAPTURE TOWN AND KILL 400 RUSSIANS

London, Aug. 22.—A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company from Cracow, dated today, says that Austrian troops have occupied the town of Miechow, Russia Poland, after a fight with Cossacks.

The Austrians surprised a detachment of 1,000 Cossacks, while they slept, and succeeded in killing or wounding 400 of them. The Austrian casualties are given as 140.

RUSSIANS HARASS BOTH GERMANY AND AUSTRIA

London, Aug. 22.—On Germany's eastern frontier there has been considerable outpost fighting which would indicate that the Russians are completing their work of concentration. There has been no serious collisions in their region as yet, however. Austria is too much engaged with Russia, and the need of helping Germany to make much progress in her campaign against Servia.

AUSTRIA CALLS OUT ALL AVAILABLE FIGHTING MEN

London, Aug. 22.—A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph company, from Vienna under yesterday's date, says that the Austrian government has issued a final call to arms for all able bodied men from the ages of 20 to 42 years.

EUROPEAN WAR WILL BUILD GREAT MERCHANT MARINE

Conqueror of Manila Sees Finger of Destiny In Opportunity Now Confronting U. S.

New York—Admiral Dewey, ranking officer of the American navy, declared last evening, after hearing of the war news abroad, that he believed that this country was on the threshold of a great opportunity and that its destiny was peculiarly in the hands of Providence.

He is stopping for the summer at the Oriental hotel, Manhattan Beach, where he was informed by a representative of the Republic of the declaration of war which Germany had made against Russia. The admiral has come in contact with all the navies of the world in his long career and he knows well the naval forces of England and Germany

He has followed the news of the war very closely in the last few days, for, having regained his health in the invigorating airs of the beach in the month that he has been there, he finds a new zest in life. Sitting on the piazza of the hotel he gazed out over the sea, watching the coming and going of the steamships and commenting on the making of history.

Owing to his official position, the admiral refused to discuss the impending struggle of the fleets of the powers. He said, however, that now is the great opportunity for the United States to build up a merchant marine.

"Now is the opportunity," continued the admiral, "if congress acts, for the United States to have its share in the carrying trade of the world. I thoroughly approve the proposal of the president to have the ship navigation laws so amended that vessels of foreign build may come under the American flag The present statutes are very severe and some modificattion of them would undoubtedly be necessary.

Have the Men For Vessels.

"In recent years this country has had practically no merchant marine. Its trans-Atlantic steamers have been confined to such vessels as the St. Louis and the St. Paul. There are coasting vessels, to be sure. If the opportunity opens for this country to obtain ocean carrying trade there are thousands of well trained and vigorous Americans who could man the steamships. There has not been enough inducement lately for them to join the merchant marine. With a change in the law I have no doubt there will be a great increase in our carrying trade and that many vessels will soon be under the stars and stripes.

"One who follows American history," continued the admiral, "cannot but be impressed with the fact that this country is in the hands of God. We are in the present situation free from foreign entaglements. At this time our granaries are filled with one of the greatest crops on record. The United States has before it the opportunity to reestablish her once great mercantile marine. It is an opportunity which should be grasped."

Admiral Dewey sat for a moment looking over the blue water as though turning over in his mind the course of events.

"I have lived many years," he said; "I have followed the history of this country in many phases, and to me the thought has come that this land was set aside for the realization of a high destiny. Its mission, no doubt, is to provide a home of freedom for the oppressed of all lands.

"Recently at Saratoga I read an old book in which was an account of the incidents which concerned the surrender of General Burgoyne. The order was given that the American colonels should be considered as in divisions, cleft by the Hudson river. From Canada was to come a great column under Burgoyne. From the east was to come another column, while Sir William Howe was to come up from New York to join Burgoyne. History records that he never did.

"There was found in the state records of England, not long ago, as the book tells, a certain unsigned order directing that one of these divisions join Burgoyne. The minister who was to have signed it noticed that a blotting sheet was brought to him and sent it away and directed that a clean copy be prepared. He never did sign it, as a matter of fact. Had Burgoyne had adequate force, as he would have had the scheme of the campaign been carried out, he might never have surrendered to the Americans. And his defeat, coming at this time, put heart in an American army which otherwise might have been destroyed.

"There are events in our own civil war which have impressed upon me the idea that Providence is watching over this country. I talked of them, not so many years ago, with General Sickles, sitting with him on this very piazza. It seemed as though some higher power inspired Farragut to pass the forts at New Orleans under fire, although none believed that he could do so. The result was the destruction of a confederate fleet, the capture of New Orleans and the holding of the Mississippi.

There is an event which as a young officer in the navy at the time deeply impressed me. The outcome of it seemed to me then an act of divine Providence—as the ruling of a higher power. The confederate vessel, the Merrimac, was spreading havoc among the fleet of the North. She had destroyed several vessels and was coming back to finish the rest when there appeared a strange vessel of a type never seen before upon the sea—the Yankee cheese box on a plank. She was not even then the property of the United States.

"She was a strange, nondescript craft, yet she compelled the Merrimac to withdraw. The Monitor that day brought a new era of naval architecture. Her guns were in a turret which turned on a spindle. Here was this strange craft, built with private capital, which had come, as if from nowhere, and accomplished this wonder. She was a surprise to the navy. As an officer in the navy at that time, I had never heard of her. It would seem as though the hand of God were in her coming there.

"And what a change she made. What a debt the modern navies of the world owe to her designer. The great warships of the world have their great guns in turrets which turn. The battles of the sea are fought by vessels developed on principles which the Monitor made known to naval warfare. Had the Merrimac been successful at that time, it is generally believed, the confederacy would have been recognized by the powers of Europe. Her defeat changed the trend of events.

Admiral Dewey declined to discuss the battle of Manila bay, where the fleet of Spain was destroyed without the loss of a single American life. In the event of any naval engagement being fought off the American coasts Admiral Dewey said that the international law would prevent the fighting taking place within the three-mile limit. Three miles beyond Sandy Hook would be as near New York as any hostilities on the sea would be permitted.

DUTCH TAKE SHOTS AT GIANT ZEPPELINS

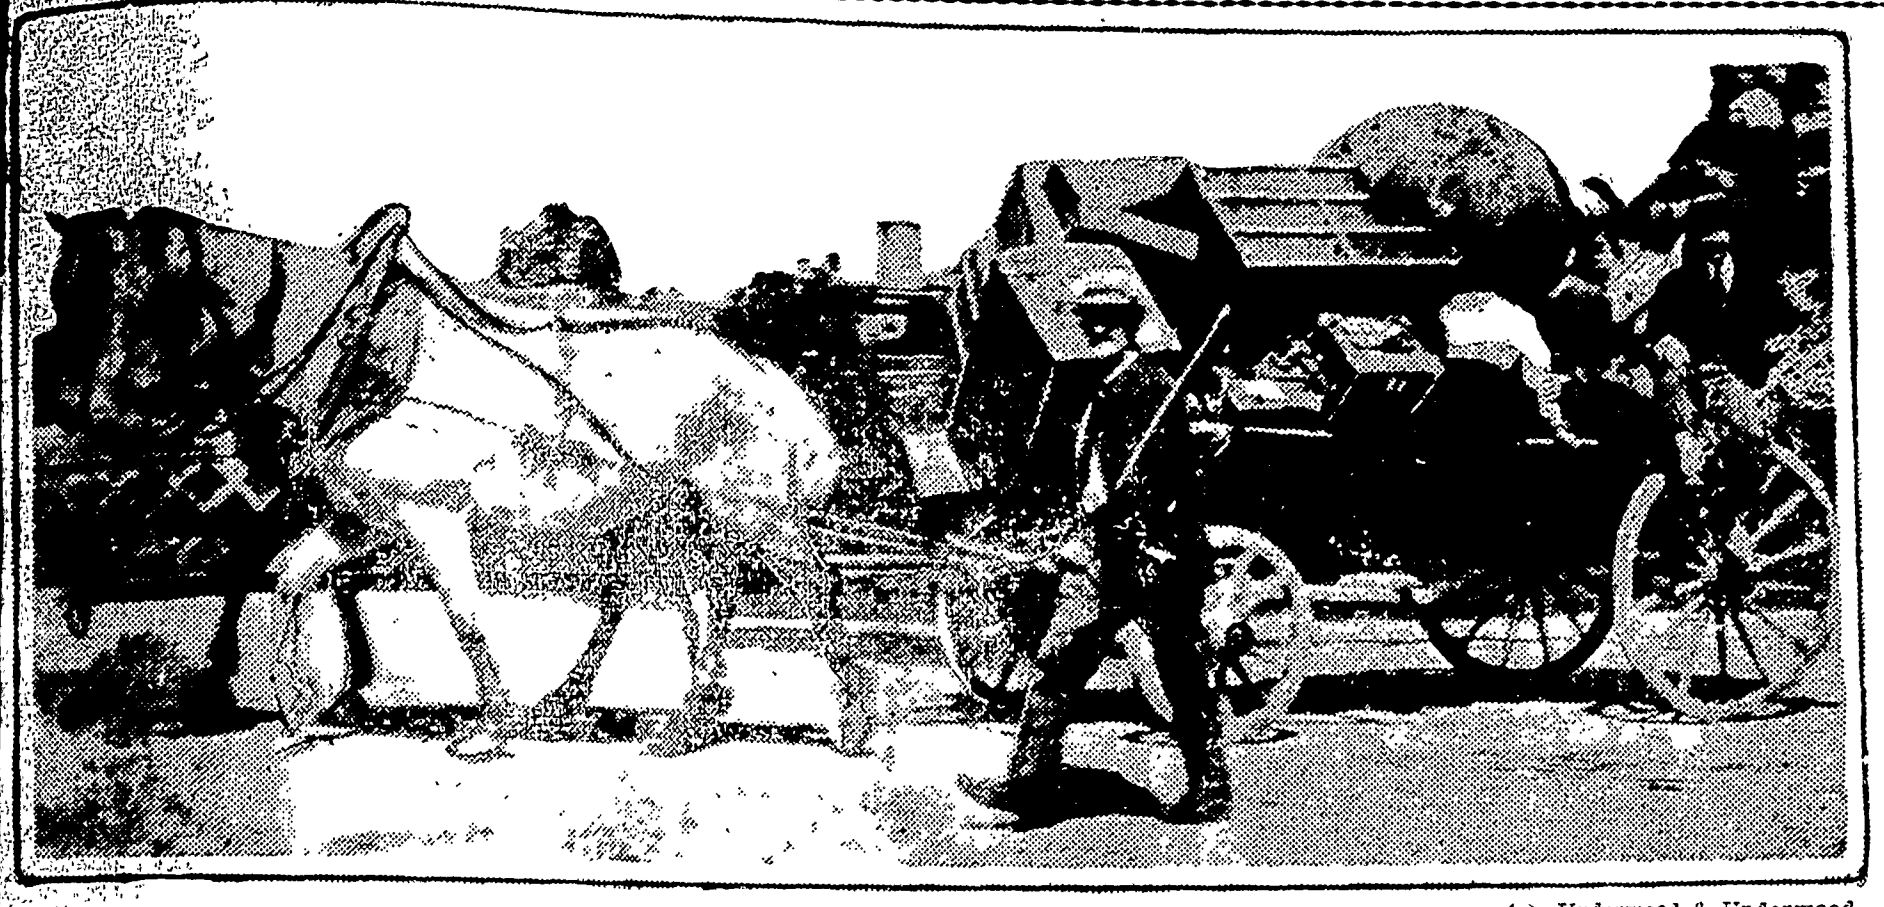
Amsterdam, (via London), Aug. 22.—Notable activity is evident among the German air craft which fly frequently over Holland.

A Zeppelin following the course of the Rhine, passed over Zevenaar today. Dutch soldiers shot at it and the dirigible disappeared over the German frontier.

Another Zeppelin flew over Maastricht last night and followed the road to Meeren, afterward disappearing.

German aeroplanes also have been seen in several directions scouting over Holland.

AMERICANS FLEEING WAR ZONE IN HAY WAGON



(c) Underwood & Underwood.

RITAIN IS FIGHTING FOR LASTING PEACE HE SAYS

armament Of Germany Only Terms England Ever Will Consider, Provided Allies Are Successful, Writer Declares —Kaiser Will Never Yield, Therefore Offensive Campaign s Planned—"War To Death" May Be Decided By Fresh Troops From United Kingdom.

w York, Aug. 22.—E Ashmead lett, special correspondent of the on Daily Telegraph and the New American telegraphs the latter r the following explanation of the of the allies in the present war Germany and Austria

Ve have not entered into this war ly to hold back the German inva- of Belgium and France

Ve entered into it to obtain the last- peace which will remove forever our shores and from the frontiers ur allies the constant dread of a en invasion, and which will enable curtail in a drastic manner the ense sums of money we are yearly ed to spend on military arma- ts, expenditures which must re, according to the settled opinion ractically all leading economists of ge, reduce all nations in Europe to ate bordering on bankruptcy

o obtain this result the military cracy in Germany must be crushed and for all. We have no wish to re the German people We have no to upset the equitable balance of er in Europe. We have no grudge nst the Germans; we are merely ng them to set their own house in r and to live and let live.

t the dawn of constitutional gov- ment within the German empire t be secured by destroying the ble hydra-headed monster, which is content with crushing the liberties he Germans themselves but would hold all Europe in subjection or Death for the German Empire.

here can be no compromise to bring ut such a peace. Supposing a great le is fought all along the line of French and German frontier, in ch the allies are uniformly success- that is to say, the Germany army worsted to such an extent that it not again take the offensive his would relieve the minds of 40 - 000 of French people from the con- t dread which has been hanging r them for the last 40 years, but it not secure a lasting peace

Supposing, after such a battle that ser Wilhelm and his advisers, seeing t the game of aggression has shot bolt, endeavor to come to immediate terms What are the conditions of peace for which we must ask?

"France must have the line of the Rhine as her new frontier She will take nothing else as the return for sacrifices of the past 40 years

Belgium must have rectified the violation of her frontier and also compensation for the immense damage inflicted on her population

England, if we cannot destroy it by fighting must insist upon the surrender of the German fleet, for without the destruction or surrender of it any peace would be a hollow sham.

Allies Prepare for "Offensive."

"Probably both England and France would insist upon war indemnity, and at the other end of Europe Russia will also demand territory and guarantees for the future

These must be the minimum terms for the allies They may seem severe, but necessary to the maintenance of peace in the future

Now does any one for a moment suppose Kaiser Wilhelm will accept these conditions just because the German offensive has broken down? It would mean the loss of his remaining prestige, and probably of his throne as well

What will happen then? We shall be called upon to assume the offensive against Germany which will immeasurably add to the difficulties of the military situation

In such a case Lord Kitchner's plan to raise 500,000 men is of vital importance France has already mobilized almost her last man and the brunt of the fighting is about to fall on the British army Their losses will be enormous but they must be replaced, and they can only be obtained by building and training for the French army a British army powerful enough to shield Belgium, sufficiently well armed and trained to strike a decisive blow

It may be six months or a year from now it may be even sooner, when the German defenses are weakened by the enormous strain of supporting their armies and when the latter are ready to reap the full harvest of the sacrifices they have made."

97 BULLETS AND TWO SHELLS PIERCE AIRSHIP WINGS IN 187-MILE FLIGHT OVER GERMANY

Adolphe Pegoud, Noted French Airman, Has Thrilling Escape —Machine Riddled—Official Documents Delivered To Poles And Alsatians By Aeroplanes.

Paris, Aug. 22.—A French official note says:

"A French dirigible last night threw a number of projectiles on two German cavalry camps in Belgium, causing great excitement. Despite the fire of the enemy the air craft returned safely to the French lines."

London, Aug. 22.—Adolphe Pegoud, a noted French aviator has returned to Paris from the war zone to get a new aeroplane. According to the Paris despatch to the Exchange Telegraph company, the wing of Pegoud's old machine were riddled by 97 bullets and two shells when he made, with a military observer, a flight of 300 kilometers (186 miles) into German territory.

Pegoud could not say just where he had been except that he recrossed the Rhine and blew up by means of bombs two German convoys.

Captain Finck, a military aviator, Pegoud said, had destroyed a hanger near Metz and wrecked a Zeppelin and also destroyed three tube aeroplanes which were in the hangar. Aeroplanes now are claiming the part in war which formerly carrier piegons could perform, and seem to have greater possibilities than pigeons.

An official notice issued to the people of England, requests them to be watchful for messages dropped from aeroplanes, scribes the pecular wrappings which will enclose message and instructs the finders to forward them immediately to the addresses they bear.

French aeroplanes scattered messages to the inhabitants of Alsace in the early days of the war and the Russians adopted the same method for announcing the proclamation of Emperor Nicholas to the Poles

JAPS AND KAISER PREPARE FOR WAR

London, Aug. 22.—According to information received in official circles here Kaiser William has ordered that resistance be made to the last to Japan's attempt to oust Germany from Kiao-Chau.

Japan is making active preparations in view of the approaching expiration on Sunday of the time limit of her ultimatum to Germany. It is expected that she will at once move on Kiao-Chau, the German protectorate in China.

CHINESE APPEAL MAY BE SCHEME IN GERMAN BEHALF

Washington, Aug. 22.—China has appealed to the United States to act as trustee in the transfer or Kaio-Chau from Japan to China ? the event Japan succeeds in wresting the protectorate from Germany.

It was predicted in official circles that the United States would not assent to the proposal unless it had previously been assured that such a course would be accepted by both Japan and Great Britain.

It was believed here that China's inquiry was made to sound the United States government on behalf of Germany.

GERMAN SAMOA ROUSED BY PROSPECT OF ATTACK

Pacopago American, Samoa, (via San Francisco, Aug. 22.—News of the declaration of war between Germany and Great Britain caused the greatest excitment when it reached Apia, German Samoa.

Evidently the German commandant felt that the port is not defensible against naval attack or serviceable as a naval base, for the merchant man Sok-Solf, which arrived here today, brought with her all the government bullion and private funds on deposit there.

The German wireless station at Apia was opened August 2, and immediately justified its existence by carrying the declaration of war.

WOULD REAFFIRM OPEN DOOR POLICY IN THE FAR EAST

Washington, Aug. 22.—A resolution reaffirming adherence of the United States "open door" policy of China, proclaiming that this government in view of the apparent extension of the war in Europe to the far east could not view with indifference any alteration of the Status Quo of the islands of the Pacific and Oceanica, was introduced in the Senate today by Senator Gallinger. It was referred to the foreign relations committee.

Accompanying his resolution, Senator Gallinger submitted a memorandum pointing out that in the waters lying between the Philippines and Hawaii and south and southeast of the latter are islands owned by France Germany and Breat Britain. Also in that region lie Guam and other islands owned by the United States and the Samoan islands, in which France, Great Britain, Germany and the United States have interests. These, he points out, are in "easy striking distance of the Philippines to say nothing of Panama and San Francisco."

GERMANS HAVE FORESEEN BREAK WITH JAPANESE

Berlin, (via Copenhagen and London,) Aug. 22.—The Japanese ultimatum has been the subject of much comment by the German press. The Nord Deutsche Algemein Zeitung believes that Germany will reply with a politie yet definite refusal.

Count Ernest Von Reventlow, the naval expert, publishes an article in the Tages Zeitung, showing that Japan's policy has been prepared for a long time. He recounts how M. Sugimura, the former Japanese ambassador at Berlin, who was friendly towards the Germans and had always directed his efforts towards a reapproachment between Germany and Japan, at the time of his departure from Berlin, said to count von Reventlow that he had been suddenly ordered to return from Berlin when on leave.

The ambassador added this significent remark.

"I will go, and I will never return to Berlin."

INDICTMENTS FOR FOOD SPECULATORS

Washington. Aug. 22.—Attorney General McReynolds expects several indictments to be returned within the next few days as the result of the investigation ordered by President Wilson of the increase in food prices since the outbreak of war in Europe.

Government officials would not say today in what cities the indictments would be sought, but it was declared no effort would be made to localize the prosecutions in any particular part of the country.

Mr. McReynolds has been in frequent communication with the White House since the investigation was started and expects to make his formal report soon. The president has directed that the prosecutions be pressed vigorously.

MERICANS HAD CLOSE CALL AT MUHLHAUSEN

Berlin, (via Copenhagen and Lon- n) Aug. 22.—Four Americans, two n and two women, have just made own their remarkable escape from ath at Muhlhausen where they were ring the fighting. They are Edward alker, a dentist of Macon, Ga., and his wife and Mr and Mrs Cade whose home address cannot be ascertained Mr Cade also is a dentist. They were caught at Muhlhausen at the beginning of the fighting and had to remain several days amidst a hail of projectiles They are now safe at Clatterbado in the Black Forest, whither they walked from Muhlhausen.

A letter from one of the quartet which has been brought to Berlin says that uninterrupted fighting and fire of artillery never will be forgotten

"Projectiles struck the house we were in while others exploded in the garden," says the letter "We awaited death momentarily, but were saved by a miracle"

KANSAS GAS COMPANY RECEIVERS DISMISSED

St. Louis, Aug. 22.—The federal receivership of the Kansas Natural Gas company, which was established in 1912, was dissolved by the terms of an order filed in the circuit court of appeals here today by Circuit Judges Hook and Smith.

The circuit judges made more definite an order instructing the federal receivers to deliver to the Kansas receivers all the property and moneys of the company except taxes, court costs and lawful liabilities of the receivership.

A motion to mandamus the United States district judge for Kansas to turn over this property was denied. The receivership was dissolved on motion of the Kansas Pipe Line company, a subsidiary, which claimed that the dual state and federal receivership has dissipated the property of the company.

RUSSIA IN DARKNESS BECAUSE OF ECLIPSE

All Europe Falls Within Shadow Of Planet—Scientists Interested.

Washington, Aug. 22.—A total eclipse of the sun, which today cast a complete darkness over a strip 85 miles wide through Russia, Scandinavia, Asia Minor Persia and India, was only partly visible in the United States, but was observed by astronomers at the naval observatory here.

All of Europe, a portioin of Africa and Asia, however, fell within its shadow. It was not visible in this country farther south than Washington northwest of North Dakota. The shadow fell on the earth first in Hudson's bay and disappeared on the east coast of Africa just north of the equator. In 1918 another total eclipse of the sun will be visible in the United States Scientific parties are being organized to observe it in Florida. Several American parties went to Russia to observe today's phenomenon.

FOREIGNERS RUSH TO JOIN FRENCH ARMY

Americans, Jews, Swiss, Spaniards, Italians and Luxemburgians Offer Services.

Paris, Aug. 22.—The Great square fronting the Invalides in Paris presented a striking spectacle today when 18,000 foreign volunteers assembled in orderly formation under flags of their various nations to be mustered in. There were 4,500 Jews from all countries who desired to serve as a separate command; there were also 3,000 Belgians, 4,500 Italians 2,600 Russians, 2,000 Swiss, 1,000 Spaniards, 600 Roumanians, 335 Luxemburgians and 125 Americans.

All these volunteers were obliged to wait until the completion of the mobilization of the French regular forces, which was accomplished yesterday. In the meantime 30,000 foreigners resident in France have inscribed their names provisionally on the rolls of a committee calling itself "the friends of France."

Only those volunteers resident in Paris presented themselves today It will take several days to comply with all the formalities and examinations and make the men into anything like an organized body of troops.

ANOTHER REVOLT OF BOXERS ANTICIPATED

Chinese Provincial Authorities Are Warned Of Possible Uprising.

Peking, Aug. 22.—In the belief that those classes from whom the Boxers sprang might succeed in forming small groups which would take advantage of the war to attempt once more to expel foreigners from China, the government today instructed the provincial authorities to afford foreigners all necessary protection.

The press was, at the same time, warned against exciting the people by articles on the war, while discussions on the war are forbidden in public places.

Further measures have been taken against the revolutionists who have begun to renew their activities in several places.

All Japanese subjects departed from the German protectorate of Kiao-Chow yesterday.

FRANCE STRIVING TO KEEP WORKERS BUSY

Seek To Maintain Industries—Charitable Work Undertaken On Big Scale.

Paris, Aug. 22.—All the old men and youths in the building trades are to be put to work finishing buildings under construction. Factories will be reopened and will employ limited forces. Far-reaching charitable work, supported by the government, is being organized.

There has been almost complete cessation of orders in the dressmaking, millinery, artificial flowers, lace and embroidery and related industries, which, under ordinary circumstances, employ over 4 per cent of the laborers of France. It is hoped that American orders will continue.

Many of the large dressmaking establishments are giving work to their staffs in the making of plain hospital garments for the wounded. This is done at their own expense.

The labor unions in the department of the Seine and elsewhere in France have opened vast soup kitchens, where those who can pay may have a meal for four cents. Those who cannot pay are fed for nothing.

BOY SCOUTS OF FRANCE NOW UNDER WAR OFFICE

Paris, Aug. 22.—The boy scouts of France, some thousands of them from 9 to 15 years old, have felt badly because, although they were carrying messages for the Red Cross, they were not under orders from the war office.

Adolphe Messimy, the French war minister, has now taken them directly under his direction. They are still serving the Red Cross admirably in carrying messages but they feel that they are in the military service as their fathers are.

"THE SQUIRT GUN"

Iowa is going to have a Magazine—one that Iowa people will sit up nights to read, one that is going to boost Iowa all the time and not knock on anything.

Because it is going to squirt all over Iowa, the magazine will be christened the "Squirt Gun" and will be filled from cover to cover with genu-humo—nothing else—so if you do not enjoy fun, don't subscribe.

The price of the magazine is $1.00 a year, but to get it going right off the reel with a big list, we are putting the price at 50 cents for the first year.

The first issue will be off the press October 1st, but it goes on the press September 1st, so those who want to be certain of getting the first issue, should send remittance before that time.

Send 50 cents to the "Squirt Gun," Ellsworth, Iowa, and we'll have more fun than blowing bubbles through a six inch gas pipe.

Last Great European War

History repeats itself—but with variations. A hundred years ago, France alone, under the leadership of Napoleon fought Germany, Austria, Italy, Russia and Great Britian and won.

At thirty six, Napoleon had conquered every nation of Europe and in the battle of Austeritz in 1905, practically brought the continent under the subjection of the French Army. Then Austria Germany and Russia formed the great coalation against France, only to be beaten in battle after battle until they were forced to sue for peace. England thanks to her impregnable navy was the only nation not forced to acknowlege Napoleon's rule.

It was the snow covered steppes of Russia rather than the military science of Europ that finally turned the tide against him.

The present European crisis gives a particular opportuneness to the offer of Napoleon's Memoirs, announcement of which is made in another column of this paper. Few books throw a more illuminating and interesting light on the underlying causes of those years of conflict than the fascinating story of the man whose meteoric career left Europe sown with the seeds of discontent.

"Eventually" said Napoleon, "Russia will rule the world." The present conflict will go far towards determining the truth of his prophecy and day by day it will form an absorbing illustration of the advance which has been made in the art of warfare since the days, only a century ago, when France had all of Europe at her feet.

Napoleon's Memoirs, written by his private secretary, Baron von Meneval, will give you a clearer insight into that tremendous upheaval of Europe which the present crisis seems destined to produce.

Very Old Custom.

The custom of saying "God bless you" to a person when he sneezes originated among the ancients, who, fearing danger from it after sneezing made a short prayer to the gods, as "Jupiter help me." The custom is mentioned by Homer, the Jewish rabbis and others. Polydore Vergil says it took its rise at the time of the plague in 558 when the infected fell dead, sneezing, though apparently in health.

Worthy Teacher Is Trouble.

Some people, because of their own happiness, feel moved to help others. But more people, out of their sorrows, learn to minister to those who need love and kindness. There is no enlarger and deepener of the life like that unwished for guest. Trouble, who carries rich gifts under his black cloak.—Great Thoughts.

Thatched Huts Are of the Past.

The disappearance of the picturesque roofs of Samoan huts is attributed to the increasing wealth of the natives and the partial destruction by insects of the wild sugar cane used for thatch. Corrugated iron is taking the place of the old material.

Curtain.

Gilbert K. Chesterton, the English satirist, was an extraordinarily stout man. An English newspaper, describing a meeting at which Mr. Chesterton was the principal speaker, said: "Mr. Chesterton then mounted the platform, and the chairman was seen no more for half an hour."

HOWARD PIANOS
are
Surprisingly Reasonable!

It does not follow that you have to buy the highest-priced piano to get a really high-grade instrument.

If care is taken in the selection, you can secure an instrument that will more than fulfill every home requirement at a remarkably reasonable cost.

After hearing the Howard Piano and appreciating its absolute durability, you would naturally expect it to be among the costly ones, but it is not.

Considering value with price it is positively the most economical instrument for the home.

It gives you all the qualities of the high-grade instrument at so reasonable a price because it is a product of one of the manufacturing companies of the greatest piano organization in the world—The Baldwin Company.

No other instrument of equal quality can be sold at the price because no other makers possess the facilities and resources.

THE "Howard Manualo", the Player Piano that is all but human, is distinguished by Quality, Durability, Reliability and Attractive Price. It is a quality proposition throughout. Be sure to examine it.

A NEW POSTMASTER

J. W. Waterman ... Second John Gruetzmacher ... Present Ready Held Office ... 17 Years

J. W. Waterman recently received the appointment of postmaster of the Klemme post office and he will enter upon his new duties during the next few days. The Klemme office is in fourth-class and so comes under the civil service. The examination was held in May and Mr. Waterman was the successful aspirant. We believe his appointment will meet with the approval of a large number of the patrons and that he will make a most painstaking and excellent official. He has appointed Miss Martha Lau as his assistant and she will resign her position in the J. N. Day store in order to assume her new duties.

John Gruetzmacher, the present postmaster, has held the office 17 years and refused to again become a candidate. He certainly has made an excellent public servant—courteous and obliging at all times; and a large number of the patrons will regret very much to see him leave. He has been ably assisted in his work by his two daughters, the Misses Esther and Hulda, and they will now be able to enjoy a most deserved vacation.

Continued success to both the retiring and incoming postmasters and may they both enjoy the change.

OBITUARY OF MRS. BLUMER

After a lingering illness, Mrs. Jacob Blumer passed away last Sunday, August 30. Christiana Magdalena nee Niedermaier, was born Aug. 4th, 1838, at Knittlinger, Wuertemdberg, Gemany. She was educated in the parochial schools of the Protestant Evangelical church of that place. May 15th, 1860, she entered into holy matrimony with Mr. Jacob Blumer, who was her loving and faithful husband and support until the time of her death. Ten children came to bless their home, of whom five soon were taken away again.

1883 they emigrated to America and settled on a farm in the vicinity of Garner, Ia. In 1902 they left their farm and retired to Klemme, where they have ever since resided.

Mrs. Blumer had been ailing for many years, but not until the last few weeks was she confined to her bed. During this time she suffered immensely, and found relief in death, which she had earnestly desired. She attained to an age of 76 years and 26 days. She is survived and her death mourned by her beloved husband, four children, 16 grand children, and four great grand children, and by one brother and two sisters.

The funeral took place Tuesday, Sept. 1, officiated by Rev. W. P. Thiel and Rev. O. A. Schmid, of the Reformed church. The body was interred in the Hill Town cemetery.

KAISER'S SON IS INTERESTED

Crown Prince's Brusque Query Somewhat Annoyed the British Ambassador.

The conflict between England and Germany recalls an incident of an illuminating character between the Crown Prince Frederick William and the British ambassador at Berlin, Sir Edward Goschen, which almost brought to a sudden end a brilliant dinner given in honor of the kaiser's heir at the embassy in the German capital last February.

Over the coffee Crown Prince Frederick William turned to Sir Edward Goschen and demanded brusquely:

"Where are your spies?"

"Spies?" exclaimed the astounded diplomat. "I cannot understand what your highness means"

"Why," returned the heir to the throne of the empire, "your two spies, your military attache, Colonel Russell, and your naval attache, Captain Anderson."

"Neither the military attache" firmly replied Sir Edward Goschen, "nor the naval attache has anything to do in the nature of spying. I can assert that in the most energetic fashion. The British government has formally prohibited spying on the part of its representatives and the attache has not sent a single report to London which has not been examined by me."

"Well," insisted the crown prince, "we also have military and naval attaches, and I know what their reports treat of."

The British ambasador went on to argue the point, but the crown prince, not even half convinced, changed the conversation and spoke of horses.

Unfortunate Names.

Some parents seem unable to resist the temptation to make a joke with the Christian names of their children. The Somerset house registers testify to the existence of a Mineral Waters, a Frosty Winter and an Alfred Day Weeks. There is something to be said in favor of naming children in the order of their arrival—Primus, Secundus, etc.—but it is unfortunate for a well-known Canadian named Cumber that it should have fallen to his lot to be Quintus. His name is always appearing in the papers as Mr. Q. Cumber.—London Chronicle.

Mean Thing.

"Do you know," he was saying, "that I never can keep my head under water when I go swimming? I've tried and tried."

"Perhaps you don't try long enough," she replied, in an absent-minded way, and he is still wondering what she meant.

When a man can talk faster and more pointedly than his wife no wonder the poor thing packs up and goes home to mamma.

DETROIT RECEIVES CIVIL WAR VETS

Only Former Department Commanders Favored For Positions Of Highest Office.

Detroit, Mich.—Special—All Detroit shook hands with white-haired heroes of the civil war. More than 5,000 members of the Grand Army of the Republic and affiliated organizations had reached the city when the 48th annual encampment was officially opened this forenoon. Every train, boat and interurban car arriving in Detroit carried scores of old soldiers and their wives and daughters. It was stated at G. A. R. headquarters that 30,000 delegates would be here by tomorrow.

Today was devoted to committee meetings at the headquarters of the G. A. R. and several of the associated bodies. The committees worked in executive sessions "to get the convention decks cleared for action," as a veteran expressed it. It was hoped to complete the routine work today, so the committee members would be able to join their comrades and wives tomorrow on boat rides.

Meet Tomorrow.

The first public meeting will be held in the Light Guard armory tomorrow night, when the veterans will be welcomed by Governor Ferris and other citizens of Michigan. Several responses will be made by the commanders of the various orders, including Washington Gardner, of Albion, commander in chief of the G. A. R.

Prominent Grand Army officers have commented pleasantly on the arrangements for receiving the wearers of the blue. Boy scouts, who have played no particular part "on the receiving line," have won much praise. They form the veterans' needy guard. Several persons have been mentioned as prospective candidates to succeed Washington Gardner as commander in chief. No veteran can hold the office two seasons in succession, and sentiment has not favored the election of a man who has not been a department commander.

C W Blodgett, Ohio; David J. Palmer, Iowa; O. A. Somers, Indiana; Frank O. Cole, New Jersey; P. H. Coney, Kansas, and Thomas H. Howard, Oklohoma.

UTAH SANITARY CONTEST.

The cities and towns of Utah are engaged in a contest of a new kind. The struggle is to earn prizes for sanitation and cleanliness. The prizes are drinking fountains and bronze tablets. Fifty-three towns were formally entered by their mayors. The scoring began on August 17, and when it has been completed the prizes will be awarded.

The cities and towns are divided according to population into five groups and there is a prize in each group. The grouping is as follows:

Class A—10,000 and over.
Class B—5,000 to 10,000
Class C—3,000 to 5,000
Class D—750 to 3,000.
Class E—Under 750.

The score card is as follows:

1—Sewage, disposal of—privies, cesspools, etc—perfect	15
2—Stables and corrals, disposal of manure, etc—perfect	15
1—Garbage collection and disposal—perfect	10
4—Water supply—perfect	10
5—Sanitation of school houses and other public buildings	5
6—Sanitary marketing of foods	5
7—Scarcity of flies	5
8—Sanitation of the home, cleanliness of the home, ventilation, etc.	5
9—Condition of streets, parks and alleys	10
10—General appearance of homes, barns, barnyards	5
11—Lawns and flower gardens	5
12—Vacant lots	5
13—Fences	5
Total	100

The scheme was devised by J. H. Kirkham, of the Utah Farmer and secretary of the Utah Development league. He went with it to Governor Spry and Dr. Beatty of the state board of health. The three counseled together on the plan, worked out the score card, and brought the contest to the attention of the mayor and association of commerce of each town in the state.

In order to get results in a town, the people of the town are divided into two cleanup armies—the red and the blue. Each has a general, who maps out the work and directs the effort. A prize is given by the commerce body to the army doing the best work. Each warrior wears a clean city button, red or blue, as the case may be.

In the city hall a large map of the city is placed. Whenever the committee reports any man as having excellently kept premises a star is placed on this man's location on the map. The effort to get a star for one's home is one of the best influences of the contest.

The scoring will be done by inspectors from the state board of health, and the prizes, based on these reports, will be given by the committee meeting at the state capitol.

For weeks the people of Utah have been having clean up meetings of every sort. The churches have done their part. The papers have carried columns of news and editorial matter. In an excellent editorial the Deseret Evening News says the towns are working not so much for the prizes offered as they are for honor of being known as the cleanest towns in the state. The Utah Development league has set a good example for organizations in other states.

FEE SPLITTING.

Against Public Policy For Physicians To Split.

From the West Publishing Co. Docket.

Where a person requiring a surgical operation is treated by the family physician, and the operation is performed by another physician assisted by the family physician can the latter act as agent for both parties and draw pay from both parties without the knowledge of the patient? The supreme court of Michigan in MaNair vs. Parr, 143 Northwestern Reporter, 42, holds that any tacit understanding or agreement between the two doctors for division of fees would be against public policy and void, and that the patient, in an action by the operating physician for his fee, has a right to show that plaintiff has charged an unreasonable sum for his services in order to divide the fees with the family physician.

Mademoiselle sent a fair sheet of paper with a few unsteady scratches across it, and sat down to live over night, a hard business at times. But it was accomplished. The colonel had ridden to Norfolk for the day—had Francois known of that, one wonders? Lucy, waiting in that small stately study with the dim portraits and the wide vague view acros the fields of the James river, heard the gay hoof beats of Aquarelle pound down the gravel under the window, hear Francois' deep gentle voice as he gave the horse to Sambo, and waited one minutes more, the hardest minute of all. Then the door had opened and he stood there—the miracle, as it seems at such moments to a woman, possibly to a man—if all the gifts and qualities worth loving.

The light on the thick bronzed hair with its dramatic white lock, the diagonal of fresh color across the dark face, the wonderful brilliant eyes, the strong leanness of his hands—there was something in each detail, as the two gazed at each other in a short silence, which caught at Lucy's soul That he was short, and so unlike all the men she had admired before, was somehow an added charm. The compact light figure seemed worth 100 big hulks of men. The injured arm in its sling gave her a pang of tenderness, a thrill of eagerness to do anything, everything for him. A tumult of these thoughts and a thousand others beat about her as Francois stood grave, alert, in the doorway. Then he had made his precise bow, and she had hear his voice saying gently, "Good morning, Mademoiselle," and the door was closed; and they were alone together. In a flash she felt that it could not be endured, that she must escape. She rose hastily.

"I'm sorry I must go; I can not stay—"

But Francisco had laughed and taken her hand and was holding it with a tender force which thrilled her. He understood. She knew he understood the shame and fear of a woman who has given love unasked, she was safe in his hands, she knew that. With a sigh she left her fingers rest in his and sat down again and waited.

"Dear Mademoiselle Lucy,' said the deep kind voice, "my first friend in Virginia, my comrade, my little scholar—"

Why did Lucy grow cold and quiet at these words of gentleness? Francois was sitting beside her, holding her hand in both his, gazing at her with the clearest affection in his look. Yet she braced herself against she did not know what. The voice went on with its winning foreign infections, its slip of English now and then, and its never-to-be-described power of reaching the heart.

"See, Mademoiselle," said Francois, "we are too real friends, you and I, to have deception between us. We will not pretend, you and I, to each other—is it not, Mademoiselle? Therefore I shall not try to hide from you that I heard that day those words so wonderful which you spoke to me so unworthy. I have thought of those words ever since, Mademoiselle, as I lay ill with this troublesome arm, ever since—all the time. My heart has been full of a — gratification to you which can not be told. I shall remember all my life; I shall be honored as no king could honor me, by those words. And because you have so touched me, and have so laid that little hand on the heart of me, I am going to tell you, my dear comrade and scholar, what is most secret and most sacred to me."

Lucy's hand in his stiffened, but yet she did not draw it away. Francois had not begun the way a lover begins—she felt that surely—but—it was Francois. What faithfulness and truth there was in any one answered always to the truth and faithfulness of this man. In Lucy Hampton there was much of both; she left her hand lying between the strong hands of the man who did not love her.

In as few words as might be, he told her of the peasant child who had been lifted out of his poverty-bound life with such large kindliness that no bound which held him to that poor, yet dear life had been broken; who had been left all the love of his first home and yet been given a home and a training and an education which set him ready for any career; he told of the big-souled, blunt, Napoleonic officer, the seigneur; of the gray, red-roofed castle, with its four round towers, of handsome silent Pietro, and of the unfailing long kindness of them. Then his voice lowered, holding the girl's hand still, he told her of Alixe, of the fairy child who had met him on that day of his first visit and had brought him to her father, the seigneur. He described a little the playmate of his childhood, fearless, boyish in her intrepid courage, yet always exquisitely a girl. He told of the long summer vacations of the three as they grew up, and the rides in the Jura valley, and of that last ride when he knew that he was to go to Italy next morning, and of how he had faced the seigneur and told him that he loved his daughter and had given her up then, instantly, for loyalty to him and to Pietro. And then he told her of the peasant boy in Riders' Hollow in the gray morning light after the night of his escape—and how, by hand on the bridle and seat in the saddle, and at last by the long curl of the black lashes he had known the peasant boy for Alixe.

Lucy Hampton, listening, was so thrilled with this romance of a life-long love that she could silence her aching heart and her aching pride and could be—with a painful sick effort—but yet could be, utterly generous. There is no midway in such a case between entire selfishness and entire unselfishness. The young southern girl wounded, shamed, cruelly hurt in vanity and in love, was able to choose the larger way, and taking it, left that sharp joy of renunciation which is as keen and difficult to breathe and as sweet in the breathing as the air of a mountain-top. Trembling, she put her little hand on Francois' hands.

"I see," she said, and her voice shook and she smiled mistly, but very kindly. "You could not love any one but that beautiful Alixe. I—I would not have you."

And Francois bent hastily, with tears in his eyes, and kissed the warm little hands. The uncertain sliding voice went on.

"I am not—ashamed—that I said that—to you. I would not have said it—not for worlds. I—though you were killed. I—don't know what I said. But I am not ashamed. I am glad that I—am enough of a person to have known—the finest things—and"—her voice sank and she whispered the next words over the dark head bent on her hands—"and to have loved them. But don't bother. I shall—get over it."

The liquid tones choked a bit on that and Francois lifted his head quickly and his eyes flamed at her. "Of course you will, my dear little girl, my brave mademoiselle. It is not as you think; it is not serious, mon amie. It is only that you are so full of kindness and enthusiasm and eagerness to stand by the unlucky. I am alone and expatriated; I have had a little of misfortune and you are sorry for me. It is that. Ah, I know. I am very old and wise, me. It would never do," he went on. "The noblesse of Virginia would rise in a revolution if it should be that the princess of Roanoke house gave her heart to a French peasant. I am come to be a man of knowledge"—and he shook his head with as worldly wise an expression as if one of Guido Reni's dark angels should talk politics. He went on again, smiling a little, an air of daring in his manner. "Moreover, Mademoiselle Miss Lucy, there is a fairy prince who awaits only the smallest sign from you."

Lucy smiled. "No," she said. And then, "a fairy prince—in Virginia?"

"Ah, yes, Mademoiselle Miss Lucy. Of the true noblesse, that one. A fine, big, handsome prince, the right sort."

"Who?" demanded Lucy, smiling still.

"Of such a right sort indeed that it is no matter—ah, no, but perhaps just the thing to make one love him more, that he is lame."

"Harry!" Lucy's smile faded.

"But yes, indeed, mon amie," and Francois patted the little hand with his big one. "Henry, indeed, Henry, who is waiting to kill me for love of you; Henry, the best, truest fellow, the manliest bravest fellow. Who rides like Henry? Who is respected by the old men, the great men, for his knowledge and his thinking and his statecraft almost—like Henry? Who has such a great heart and brain and such fearless courage as Henry?"

Lucy listened to this eulogium rather astonished. It strikes a girl as absurd often, when a brother or a cousin is pointed out as a personage. But it pleased her; yet she did not say so. "Harry is a good boy," she spoke calmly, "but—but it is only for convenience, for joining the lands, that he and my father wish us to marry. I will not marry a man to shape some fields of corn."

Francois answered gravely. "But, no, mademoiselle, never must you do that. It is not the case, however, that your cousin cares about the shape of corn fields. He is not interested in that. If you had no corn fields, if you had nothing whatever, Mademoiselle Lucy, he would give his life to marry you just the same. It is you whom he loves and not corn fields, of any shape at all. Also he loves you to madness. For that he has hated me—me full of gratification to him forever—because he has believed that I would try to win from him your heart. Mademoiselle Miss Lucy, I could not do that if I might. If my life were not as I have told you I could not play him false, my Henry—that dear boy who wishes to kill me." Francois smiled a little, half amused, half wistful. "And in all case," he went on, "what chance should I have in the end against that splendid Henry Hampton? Mademoiselle, you will thank me so one day that it will be very painful to me, for showing you how it was not Francois Beaupre, the Frenchman, but Henry Hampton, the Virginian, who was fitted to win that warm, generous, proud heart of mademoiselle."

"You are very loyal to your friends," Lucy said, half pleased, half stabbed to the soul.

"Certainly. What for is gratification worth, otherwise?" Francois threw at her earnestly. There were a few English words too much for him still; "gratitude" seemed to be one. He stood up and his great eyes glowed down at her. "Mademoiselle," he said, "two women of earth, my mother and Alixe, are for me the Madonnas, the crown of women," and his glance lifted to the ceiling as if to heaven, without pose, unconscious—a look no American could ever have worn. "And, voila, mademoiselle, my little scholar will always stand next to and close to them." He bent over her hand and his lips touched it long and tenderly. "Is it right between us, mon amie? Are we friends always? It is indeed so for life with me."

And little Lucy felt a healing pace settling on her bruised feelings and heard herself saying generous words of friendship which healed also as she spoke them.

Then "I must find that savage boy Henry, and beseech him to spare my life," spoke Francois at last. "My life is of more value today, that it possesses a sure friend in Mademoiselle Lucy," he said and smiled radiantly. And was gone.

Lucy, to her astonishment, felt lighthearted, felt as if moved into a large, clear, sunshiny atmosphere out of the stormy unrest which had lately held her. Also she found herself thinking over the astonishing things which Francois had said of her cousin Harry. It would seem indeed as if the undying love for the Chevalier Beaupre which had possessed her yesterday might, after all, have been a young girl's infatuation for an older man, for a dramatic character, a manner of hero worship it might have been. Such things happen. Lucy Hampton, level-headed as well as warm-hearted, began to see in an unphrased way, even as soon as the knight had left her, that it might be so with her. And, with that thought came the thought of Harry

"He said—that Harry loved me! What nonsense!" she whispered to herself. And the broken hearted one was smiling.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

ONCE MORE AT HOME.

In fewer words, with less told, Francois' straightforwardness metamorphosed the angry lad Harry Hampton into a follower more devoted than he had been even in the first flush of enthusiasm for his rescued prisoner. Again the boy dogged his footsteps and adorned him frankly. And Francois, enchanted to be friends again with his friend, wondered at the goodness and generosity of the people of this world. It is roughly true that one finds life in general like a mirror; that if one looks into it with a smile and a cordial hand held out one meets smiles and outstretched hands in return Though all his days it had happened so with the child of a French village

So that when the day came at last when he stood once more on the deck of the Lovely Lucy, loaded with her cargo of tobacco for foreign ports, Francois felt as if he were leaving home and family. The long green carpet of the rolling lawn of Roanoke was crowded with people come to tell him good-by. All of his soldier boys were there, the lads trained by him, one and all ready to swear by him or to die for him. Lucy and Harry stood together, and the servants were gathered to do him honor, and people had ridden from all over the county for the farewell. His eyes dimmed with tears of gratefulness, he watched them as the gangplank was drawn up and the sails caught the wind and the ship swung slowly out into he stream.

"Come back again—come back again!" they called from the shore.

Francois heard the deep tones of the lads and the rich voices of the negroes and he knew that some there could not speak, even as he could not. So he waved his hat silently, and the ship moved faster and the faces on the lawn seemed smaller, farther away, and yet he heard those following voices calling to him, more faintly

"Come back again—oh, come back again!"

And with that the negroes had broken into a melody, and the ship moved on to the wild sweet music. "Way down upon de S'wanee Ribber, the negroes sang, and the ship was at the turn of the river. The stately walls of Roanoke House, the green slope crowded with figures of his friends, the sparking water-front—the current had swept away all of the picture and he could only hear that wailing music of the negroes' voices, lower, more faintful; and now it was gone. He had left Virginia; he was on his way to friends. And for all his joy of going, he was heavy hearted for the leaving

The weeks went slowly at sea, but after a while he had landed, was in France, was at Vicques. He had seen his mother, with her hair whitened by those years of his prison life—a happy woman now, full of business and responsibility, yet always with a rapt look in her face as of one who lived in a deep inner quiet. He had talked long with his prosperous father and slipped into his old place among his brothers and sisters, utterly refusing to be made a stranger or a great man. And over and over again he had told the story of his capture and the story of his escape and the story of the Count von Gersdor's great fancy for the song which they all knew:

"De tous cote's l' on dis que je suis bete;
Cela se peut! Et cependant j'en rie."

Family, old friends who gathered to see the little Francois Beaupre who had gone so far from his village, all these hummed the song with him as he came to that part of his tale, and then roared with laughter as he told over again how he had written it on the note left for the governor, the night of his escape. That was distinctly the best part of the chronicle of Francois, to the taste of the Jura peasants.

At the castle the returned wanderer picked up no less the thread dropped so suddenly seven years before. The general, to whom the boy seemed his boy risen from the dead, would hardly let him from his sight; Alixe kept him in a tingling atmosphere of tenderness and mockery and sisterly devotion which thrilled him and chilled him and made him blissful and wretched by turns. The puzzle of Alixe was more unreadable than the puzzle of the sphinx to the three men who loved her, to her father and Francois and Pietro. The general and Francois spoke of it guardedly, in few words, once in a long time, but Pietro never spoke. Pietro was there often, yet more often away in London, where the exiled Mazzini, the head of one wing of Italian patriots lived and conspired. And other men appeared suddenly and disappeared at the chateau, and held conferences with the general and Francois in that large, old library where the little peasant boy had sat with his thin ankles twisted about the legs of his high chair, and conned the history of Napoleon. These men paid great attention nowadays to the words of that peasant boy.

"As soon as you are a little stronger," they said, "there is much work for you to do," and the general would come out at that point with a growl like distant thunder.

"He is to rest," the general would order. "He is to rest till he is well. He has done enough; let the boy alone, you others."

But the time came, six months after his return, when Francois must be sent to visit the officers of certain regiments thought to be secretly Bonapartist; when only he, it was believed, could get into touch with them and tell them enough and not too much of the plans of the party, and find out where they stood and how much one might count on them. So, against the general's will, Francois went off on a political mission. It proved more complicated than it seemed probable; he was gone a long time; he had to travel and endure exhausting experiences for which he was not yet fit. So that when he came home to Vicques, two months later, he was white and transparent and ill, and there were some of the mysterious men at the chateau to meet him, delighted and pitiless. Delighted with the work

Football and a Clergyman.

"The more recreation we have the better service there will be in the country, and I regard the football match on a Saturday afternoon as one of the best possible devices to keep men in the purity of the open air I believe that the increase of sport is the biggest factor in the increase of temperance, and go so far as to say if you take the Church of England away from London you remove the greatest sporting influence. Some people object to the professional footballer, but I see no reason why a man of that class, who gives entertainment to the public, should not be paid for his services just in the same way as a musician or a parson. If we want the best we always have to pay for it."—The Rev. A. J. Waldron in T. P.'s Weekly, London.

The Manufacture of Rosaries.

At Kandahar rosaries are extensively manufactured from soft crystallized silicate of magnesia. This is quarried from a hill about 30 miles northwest of the city, where soapstone and antimony are also obtained in considerable abundance. The stone varies in color from a light yellow to a bluish white, and is generally opaque. The most popular kind is straw colored and semi-transparent. A few specimens are of mottled greenish color, brown, or nearly black. Rosaries and charms of various sorts are made for exportation to Mecca. The waste powder from the rosary industry is used as a remedy for heartburn.

FOOD FACTS
What An M. D. Learned.

A prominent Georgia physician went through a food experience which he makes public.

"It was my own experience that first led me to advocate Grape-Nuts food and I also know, from having prescribed it to convalescents and other weak patients, that the food is a wonderful rebuilder and restorer of nerve and brain tissue, as well as muscle. It improves the digestion and sick patients gain very rapidly, just as I did in strength and weight.

"I was in such a low state that I had to give up my work entirely, and went to the mountains of this state, but two months there did not improve me; in fact, I was not quite as well as when I left home.

"My food did not sustain me and it became plain that I must change. Then I began to use Grape-Nuts food and in two weeks I could walk a mile without fatigue, and in five weeks returned to my home and practice, taking up hard work again. Since that time I have felt as well and strong as I ever did in my life.

"As a physician who seeks to help all sufferers, I consider it a duty to make these facts public." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Trial 10 days of Grape-Nuts, when regular food does not seem to sustain the body, works wonders. "There's a Reason."

THE MARSHAL.

had done, with his daring and finesse and success, without pity for his weakness, begging him to go at once on another mission. The general was firm as to that; his boy should not be hounded; he should stay at home in the quiet old chateau and get well. But the boy was restless; a fever of enthusiasm was on him and he wanted to do more and yet more for the Prince's work.

Moreover, it was about as much misery as joy to be near Alixe. Every day he narrowly escaped taking her into his arms and telling her how he had loved her and did love her and would love her always, right or wrong, reasonable or unreasonable. It was almost more than he could do to resist that temptation at times. And at times it seemed that Alixe, with the swift lift of those long black lashes, and the blue gleam of her eyes into his—it seemed as if she were telling him not to resist any longer. He did not know; if he had been sure what sort of love that glance meant—if he had been sure it was not the sisterly sort—he was human—he could not, perhaps, have resisted. But Alixe was a thousand things in a minute, no one could be so alluring, so cold, so warm, so fascinating, so forbidding—all at once. How could Francois tell what was mask and what reality in the proud, sensitive, merry, brave personality which one saw? Yet for every puzzling phase he loved her more and wanted her more. He had much better go on diplomatic missions than stay and ride through Valley Belesmontes on spring afternoons with the woman he loved and might not have.

At this point two things happened: Pietro came from London, and Francois, on the point of leaving for another secret errand, broke down and was ill. He lay in his bed in his room at the farmhouse, the low upper chamber looking out—through wide-open casement windows, their old leaded little panes of glass glittering from every uneven angle—looking out at broad fields and bouquets of chestnut trees, and far off, five miles away, at the high red roofs of the chateau of Vicques. And gazing so, he saw Pietra on old Capitaine, turn from the shady avenue of the chestnuts and ride slowly to the house. With that he heard his mother greeting Pietro below in the great kitchen, then the two voices—the deep one and the soft one—talking, talking, a long time. What could his mother and Pietro have to talk about so long? And then Pietro's step was coming up the narrow stair, and he was there, in the room.

"Francois," Pietro began in his direct fashion, "I think you must go back to Virginia."

Francois regarded him with startled eyes, saying nothing. There was a chill and an ache in his heart at the thought of yet another parting.

Pietro went on. "I have a letter from Harry Hampton. The place needs you; the people want you; and Harry and Miss Hampton say they will not be married unless you come to be best man at the wedding," Francois smiled. Pietro went on again. Moreover, boy, Francois—you are not doing well here. You are too are not doing well here. You are too useful, they want to use you constantly and you are ready; but you are not fit. You must get away for another year or two. Then you will be well and perhaps by, then the prince will have real work for you. And you must have strength for that time. Your mother says I am right." With that his mother stood in the doorway, regarding him with her calm eyes, and nodded to Pietro's words. So it came about that Francois went back shortly to Virginia.

On the day before he went he sat in the garden of the chateau with Alixe, on the stone seat by the sun dial where they had sat years before when the general had seen him kiss the girl's hand, in that unbrotherly way which had so surprised him.

"Alixe," said Francois, "I am going to the end of the world."

"Not for the first time," Alixe answered cheerfully.

"Perhaps for the last," Francois threw back dramatically It is hard to have one's best-beloved discount one's tragedies. And Alixe laughed and lifted a long stem of a spring flower which she held in her hand, and brushed his forehead delicately with the distant tip of it.

"Smooth out the wrinkles, do not frown; do not look solemn, you always come back, Monsieur the Bad Penny; you will this time. Do not be melodramatic, Francois."

Francois, listening to these sane sentiments, was hurt, and not at all inspired with cheerfulness. "Alixe," he said—and knew that he should not say it—"there is something I have wanted all my life—all my life."

"Is there?" inquired Alixe in commonplace tones. "A horse, par exemple?" He caught her hand, disregarded her tone; his voice was full of passion and pleading. "Do not be heartless and cold today, Alixe, dear Alixe. I am going so far, and my very soul is torn with leaving you—all."

It takes no more than a syllable, an inflection at times, to turn the course of a life. If Francois had left his sentence alone before that last little word; if he had told the girl that his soul was torn with leaving her, then it is hard to say what might have happened. But—"you all"—he did not wish then to have her think that it meant more to leave her than to leave the others. Alixe readjusted the guard which had almost slipped from her, and stood again defensive.

"I won't be cruel, Francois; you know how we—all—are broken-hearted to have you go."

Francois caught that fatal little word "all," repeated, and dimly saw its significance, and his own responsibility. Alixe went on.

"I wonder if I do not know—what it is—that you have wanted all your life."

Eagerly Francois caught at her words. "May I tell you Alixe, Alixe?"

"No." Alixe, spoke quickly. "No, let me guess. It is—it is"—and Francois, catching his breath, tried to take the word from her, but she stopped him. "No, I must—tell it. You have wished—all your life"—Alixe was breathing rather fast—"that—I should care for—Pietro."

A cold chill at hearing that thing said in that voice seized him. Very still, his eyes down, he did not speak.

"Is—is that it?"

There is an angel of perversity who possesses our souls at times. He makes us say the unkind thing when we wish not to; he tangles our feet so that we fall and trip and hurt ourselves and our dearest—and behold long after we know that all the same it was an angel; that without that trouble we should have gone forever down the easy, wrong way. We know that the perverse angel was sent to warn us off the pleasant grass which was none of ours, and by making things disagreeable at the psychological moment, save our souls alive for right things to come. Some such crosswise heavenly messenger gripped the mind of Alixe, and she said what she hated herself for saying, and saw the quick result in the downcast misery of poor Francois' face. And then the same cruel, wise angel turned his attention to Francois. "If she thinks that, let her," whispered the perverse one. "Let it go at that; say yes."

And Francois lifted mournful eyes and repeated, "That you should love Pietro—yes—that is what I have wished for all my life."

SUMMOND.

Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Kirkwood and little daughter, and Mrs. K.'s sister, Miss Bessie Campbell, of New York, motored over from Ringsted Saturday and remained until Sunday evening visiting at the Kirkwood home.

Rev. Witter returned Tuesday from conference which was held at Cranton, South Dakota, this year. We are glad to state that Rev. Witter will remain here another year at least.

Rev. Wessel, a former Klemme minister, but who for the past year has been district superintendent, was re-elected. There was but very few changes made in the charges of this district.

times of the Amalfi insurrection, the dangerous journey from Ancona; who even now, under Thelin, was getting together uniforms and equipments, was casting buttons of the Fortieth regiment for the great event that was in the air.

"Fritz, here are letters to mail." He pushed them toward the man; then, as the last slipped from under his hand, he curved his fingers about it. "Be careful of this one, Fritz," he said. "It ought to bring me the brightness of my star."

Across the water, Virginia, two years had made few changes. On the June daye when the prince's letter lay in the postoffice of Norfolk the last of the roses were showering pink and red over the gardens in a sudden breeze. The leaves of the trees that arched the road that led to Roanoke House were sappy green, just lately fully spread, and glorious with freshness. Their shadows, dancing on the white pike, were sharp cut against the brightness. And through the light pierced cave of shade a man traveled on horseback from one plantation to another, a man who rode as a Virginian rides, yet with a military air for all that. He patted the beast's neck with a soothing word, and smiled as Aquarelle plunged at the waving of a bough, at a fox that ran across the road. But if an observer had been there he might have seen that the man's thought was not with horse or journey. Francois Beaupre, riding out to give a French lesson to Miss Hampton at Roanoke house, as he had been doing for four years, all unconscious as he was of the letter waiting for him at the moment in Norfolk, was thinking of the vent to come to which that letter called him.

Down the velvet that swept from house to river at Roanoke house, by the brick wall which stretched an arm against the waters—a dark arm jewled with green of vines and white of marble statues—there was a rustic summer house. It was furnished with chairs and a rustic table and here on this June day the lady of the manor elected to study the French language. The Chevalier Beaupre was taken here on his arrival. Branches of trees whispered and waved; afternoon shadows ran silently forward and silently withdrew across the lawn; the James river flowed by.

The two good friends bent together over the rough table, and the James river, silently slipping past, sang in a liquid undertone. And the time went fast in the pleasant lights and shadows of the place and shortly it was two hours that the French lesson had been going on.

GOODYEAR TIRES AT ANTE-BELLUM PRICES

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. announce "No war prices on Goodyear Tires." Mr. F. A. Sieberling, president of the Company, thus explains their unique position.

"We advanced Goodyear prices, as others did theirs, when the rubber panic came. Almost in a day crude rubber rose in New York from 55 cents per pound to much over a dollar

"The New York supply was too small to consider. We cabled our London people to buy up the pick of the rubber there. By acting quickly and paying cash they obtained 1,500,000 pounds of the finest rubber.

"That big supply of rubber is now nearly all on the way to the Goodyear factory in Akron. It constitutes the best of the London supply.

"We are using the same grade of rubber and the same amount of it as we always have used in these tires.

"We are running our factory with three shifts of men, twenty-four hours a day. So long as we remain in this fortunate position on rubber, we shall supply the users at before-war prices to the limit of our capacity."

PIMPLES ON HEAD ITCHED

Tell City, Ind.—"My baby's head was covered with sores and the top was a solid scab. It began with pimples and he would scratch his head until it would bleed and then scab over and keep spreading. He would claw his head and fret, it itched and burned so and I was afraid he would never have any hair on top of his head again.

"A friend recommended Cuticura Soap and Ointment to me. I asked our family doctor and he said, 'Yes, go right ahead and use them.' We got one cake of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment and they healed him from the first. In a few days his head did not seem to itch or bother him in the least and before we had used one set he was healed and he has a fine growth of hair." (Signed) Mrs. Rosa M. Hanks, Jan. 5, 1914.

His Sunless Birthplace.

A young woman reporter was interviewing a wealthy young Pittsburgher about his home life.

"Where did you first see the light of day?"

"In Philadelphia."

"But," said the writer, "I have always understood that you were born in Pittsburgh!"

"And so I was. Your question, however, did not take that form. You asked where I first saw the light of day. That historic event occurred in Philadelphia when I was nine years of age."

Lady Wantage is said to be the wealthiest woman in England. She inherited her immense fortune from her father, Lord Overstone, the Midland banker. She has no children, and the title becomes extinct at her death. She inherited vast estates from her husband as well as from her father.

Ridicule is a keen weapon. You can hurt most people more by laughing at them than by shooting at them.

No doubt you are acquainted with a lot of men who are always on the ragged edge of doing something wonderful—and that's as far as they ever get.

Chance for an Argument.

Poet Edmund Gosse says the obvious, simple, poignant things seem all to have been said in poetry.

It would be interesting to stand by and hear Mr. Grosse repeat that remark to the hustling advertising man of some big department store.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Too Dangerous to Overlook

Kidney trouble is too often overlooked and too often neglected. But the kidneys give early signals of distress that should not be mistaken. Backache, headaches, dizzy spells, rheumatic pains, too frequent, scanty or painful urination are all signs of kidney weakness and should not be mistaken.

When these warnings appear, use Doan's Kidney Pills, the reliable, successful, strongly recommended kidney remedy. Help the medicine by drinking water freely, hold to good habits and a serious attack of kidney disease may be avoided. Public testimony is the best proof of merit.

An Iowa Case.

Mrs. Harriet Warner, 800 E. Fourth St., Atlantic, Iowa, says: "For years I had intense pains through my kidneys and they bothered me just as much at night as during the day. Mornings I could hardly get out of bed and I had trouble with the kidney secretions. After using Doan's Kidney Pills, I was restored to good health and my system was toned up. Doan's Kidney Pills saved my life and best of all, the cure has been permanent."

SUGGESTS FRUIT AND NUT SHADE TREES & PROTECTION OF BIRDS

By "Observer"

What would you think of a suggestion to change all of the trees in (your town) from mere shade trees to really useful trees—trees that would furnish as much shade as those we now have and in addition give us fruits and nuts of various kinds? And then, what if we should set to work, not only to protect the birds we have, but to really encourage them until we really had our little city located in a great forest virtually alive with birds! A fine idea, but wholly impractical, eh? Well, that conclusion is the very thing that will keep us from having such a town—and the only thing.

Personally, I have never seen a town where all of the trees were nut and fruit trees, but I can see no reason why those in every town are not. Supposing every citizen in (your town) should decide right now to plant half a dozen nut trees in his yard, and an equal number of fruit trees, if there be space for them. A few years would see them of an age to furnish shade, and another few years would turn them into both shade and really valuable property. The subject is worth considering, and I should like to see our schools urge every pupil to plant at least one fruit or nut tree this fall.

And the Birds

I am well aware that most of the older readers of this article will be of the opinion that most birds are a nuisance and should be killed or driven away rather than encouraged to live among we "city folks." But the younger generation does not think so. A few of them may, but the universities in almost every state, and even the government itself, has learned the mistake of destroying bird life and is urging its protection. Actual tests from New York to California and from Minnesota to the gulf have proved that for every piece of grain or fruit a bird eats, it eats dozens—or even hundreds—of insects to recompense the owner of the grain or fruit. To reach a quick conclusion, imagine what humanity would do in six months time from this day if every bird in the United States were killed today!

Personally, I am a great bird lover—and I do not think very much of a man who does not like them. True, I have gone out and killed quail, mourning doves and other game birds—but I have invariably felt ashamed of mysel. every time I did it. I never have yet pulled the head from a quivering bird but that I felt I was a great big coward in human form, although the dozens of companions who knew me well never suspected I had such emotions. Not long ago I was shown the enjoyment bird life will bring to one if he will let it, and unless your editor deprives me of the space, I will tell you about it at some future time.

FELL DOWN STAIRS

Miss Grace Ruka, who works in the Kirkwood restaurant, pulled off a real thriller Saturday afternoon when she accidentally fell a full flight of stairs, striking on her head and shoulders. She was unconscious for some time and it was feared at first that she might be seriously injured. She rallied from the fall, however, although she still has a very badly bruised face. She was indeed lucky to escape so easily and suspect she will wait some time before she tries the same performance again.

Today the railway unions are immensely strong, with a total membership of well over 300,000 men in the United States. Each of them—the union of engineers, of firemen, of conductors and of trainmen—has millions of dollars in its treasury. The trainmen alone have a balance of $3,000,000, with about $1,000,000 of this amount in their strike fund. The engineers own a skyscraper in Cleveland and have other large interests.

The membership of the Swiss Typographers' federation increased in membership from 3,737 to 3,919 in 25 sections in the year 1913. Only 500 workers are unorganized or organized in rival unions. Of 631 firms 584 have entered into written tariff agreements with the union, which possesses a capital of 1,200,000 francs; 287,000 francs was expended as benefit last year.

Union membership during 1912 increased more rapidly in Great Britain than in Germany, the first named country having an increase of over 800,000 and the latter slightly over 256,000, giving Great Britain nearly a half million more of trades union membership than Germany. The United States stands third.

Textile workers in the vicinity of Fall River, Mass., are maintaining an agitation for sanitary mills, and the present month promises to record changes because of continued protests by these workers, who assert that conditions are a menacec to health.

H. H. SAWYER WANTS $25,000 FOR ALLEGED SLANDER BY COATES

Claims New Secretary Said He Had Embezzled Money From State Association.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 5.—H. H. Sawyer, lawyer and former temperance worker, has sued A. U. Coates, secretary of the Iowa Constitutional Prohibitory Amendment association, for $10,000 damages in the district court. Alleged slander forms the basis for the action.

The petition recites that between July 15, 1910, and September 15, 1911, Sawyer was secretary of the association. During the period he held office, Mr. Sawyer asserts, he handled large sums of money. His duties consisted of propagating temperance by sending literature and information throughout the state and in engaging speakers and lecturers to assist different communities in stamping out liquor.

On September 30, 1912, Mr Coates succeeded Mr. Sawyer as secretary of the association. A short time later, Sawyer instituted a suit in the district court against it, seeking to recover a large sum as unpaid salary.

During the latter part of 1913 and the early months of 1914, the plaintiff asserts, Coates stated to the Rev. John Wright that Sawyer would not dare to push his suit "because he had embezzled thousands of dollars of the association's money; we could send him to the penitentiary." The petition also alleges that Mr. Coates repeated this alleged statement, in substance, to W. C. Barber, former superintendent of the Anti-Saloon league, and to M. S. Odle, its attorney.

EUROPEAN WAR BOOSTS IOWA SKATE FACTORY

Webster City, Ia., Sept. 5.—Because of the European war and the inability of American buyers to purchase abroad, the Brown Spring Ice Skate company, of this city, is adding to its force of workmen almost every day. In Germany are many skate factories and American wholesalers buy thousands and thousands of skates there annually. The time for delivery of skates is now at hand and orders placed earlier in the season with German manufacturers cannot be filled. Hence American skate factories—and their are few of them—are being flooded with orders cancelled by the German manufacturers.

The Brown company in this city is just in receipt of an order for 5,000 pairs of skates, turned over to them by the William R. Burkhart wholesale house in St Paul. This order had originally been placed with a German house.

The local company has notice from wholesalers that indicate American factories will have all they can do, and possibly more, to handle the cancelled European orders.

WALTER NORFLEET DIES FROM KNIFE WOUNDS

Sac City, Ia., Sept. 5.—Walter Norfleet, of Sac City, aged 25 years, the victim of a stabbing affray at Nemaha August 22, died at a hospital in Storm Lake yesterday afternoon. Norfleet's assailants, A. J. Clifton and son, Otto, ditchers in the vicinity of Nemaha, are held in the county jail in Sac City pending trial. On the night of the affray, it is alleged, the two Cliftons went to Nemaha intoxicated and ready for a fight. They began using strong language on the streets, it is said, and Norfleet, who chanced to be in town in the employ of the Sac City Cement Silo company, warned them to stop. This angered young Clifton, and a fight ensued. During the struggle the elder Clifton, coming to the defense of his son, stabbed Norfleet in the abdomen. Norfleet was taken at once to a hospital, and a fatal outcome of his injuries had been expected.

LOSS OF $30,000 IN FIRE THURSDAY AT GARNER

Garner, Ia., Sept. 5.—Five buildings were destroyed, with a loss of about $30,000 in a fire here yesterday, which originated in the Peck Implement company barn. Peck's two mercantile buildings, housing implement stock, part of which was saved, Katter building, occupied by Armentrous' grocery and china store, and apartments above the Bush building. Families living upstairs barely escaped with their lives, losing all furniture and clothing. Half of the Armentrous stock was saved The fire, the exact cause of which is unknown, had gained such headway when discovered that it spread rapidly Blazing embers fell two blocks away.

MAY CUT COUNTY BOARD FROM SEVEN TO THREE

Dubuque, Ia., Sept. 5.— A petition has been filed with the county auditor of Dubuque county, signed by 3,487 voters, asking the number of members of the board of supervisors be reduced to three instead of seven. There are 11,160 voters in the county and the law requires that 25 per cent sign such a petition. It bears the names of 679 more than required. The board of supervisors will act on the petition and probably order the question put before the voters this fall.

ROCK RAPIDS MERCHANT BITTEN BY TARANTULA

Rock Rapids, Ia., Sept. 5.—W. L. Penman, a local grocer, was bitten by a large tarantula while hanging up a bunch of bananas. The insect was quite large and fastened its nippers into the flesh to such an extent that Mr. Penman's finger bled freely. He did not lose a minute in getting it cauterized by a local physician and it is believed that he will suffer no bad effects from the wound. The tarantula was captured and is now pickled in alcohol.

STATE FAIR WILL PAY OUT, BUT ATTENDANCE FALLS SHORT OF 1913

Yesterday Was "State Day" and Many Officials Visited Fair Grounds.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 5.—Members of the fair board have ceased to worry about the fair making expenses. Secretary Corey estimated that $160,000 will be needed for the fair to pay for itself. Up to Tuesday night $120,000 of that amount had been collected and it was expected that yesterday's receipts would bring the total within $10,000 of the required amount. With today and Friday yet to bring in resources, a profit is looked for, although it is not expected to be as large as that made on the 1913 fair.

Yesterday was "State day," and invitations which the fair board had sent out brought numerous state officials, former office holders and candidates out for the big show. Governor Clarke arrived early in the morning and was received informally at the administration building. Members of the executive council came with him, and other state house occupants came during the day. Senators Allen, of Pocahontas; Larrabee, of Fort Dodge; Ames, of Traer; Doran, of Beaver; Crist, of Osceola; Thomas, of Kent; Clarkson, of Albia; Robinson, of Hampton, and Representatives Cole, of Britt; Sherman, of Grinnell, Atkinson, of Clarksville; Odendahl, of Carroll, Hazen, of Avoca, Clark, of Albia; Buxton, of Indianola, and Chapman, of Bagley, were among the official visitors.

ONE KILLED, ONE INJURED AS TRAIN STRIKES AUTO

Marshalltown, Ia., Sept. 4.—As the result of being struck by a southbound Chicago Great Western freight train one mile south of Green Mountain last evening Joseph A. Lynch, aged 66, is dead and his son, Joseph T. Lynch, aged 40, is fatally injured. The Lynches, who are farmers of Green Mountain, were driving home from this city in their automobile when the train hit them. The senior Lynch was thrown 100 feet and was killed instantly.

Henry Brown, a farmer living near Conrad, had a close call from death when his automobile skidded in the mud five miles north of this city, turned turtle and buried him beneath the car in a ditch along the grade. George Hall, of Conrad, who was thrown clear of the machine when it overturned, secured help and got Brown out from under the car a half hour later. Brown was almost dead from smothering, but later was revived.

Lake City, Ia., Sept. 5.—Miss Norrella Cummings, who made her home with the family of her uncle, Fred Richardson, near Yetter, and who was a pupil in the Lake City high school, was run over by an automobile, driven by Scott Brownell, this afternoon, and died 20 minutes later at a doctor's office, where she had been hurriedly taken. The iccident occurred immediately after school was dismissed. The car crushed her chest, causing internal hemorrhages.

EUROPE NOW CALLS FOR LARGE NUMBER OF HORSES

Des Moines, Ia., Sept 5.—Iowa horse dealers have received large orders for horses for France and England, to be delivered as soon as steamers can be secured to transport them. Among those exhibiting at the state fair who have contracts of this kind are J. O. Singmaster, of Keota and Truman Brothers, of Bushnell, Ill

"I have contracts for 500 horses to be sent to London," said Mr Singmaster. "We will ship them in lots of 200 as soon as we can get boats. Just now it is impossible to get any kind of a hull to undertake to transport the animals across the water.

"Shipping horses and foodstuffs across the water will be different than sending contraband stuff. The enemy will not try to sink ships loaded with foods and live stock, but they probably will confiscate them if they get a chance."

According to horse buyers, England and France are now about 1,000,000 short of the usual supply. The large centers where horses are bred are being shot over, and the horse industry is practically ruined The effect of this, they say, will be to make American breeders depend on their own stuff and to develop the stock already on hand.

CHILD DRIVERS BARRED UNDER PRESENT IOWA LAW

Des Moines, Ia., Sept 5.—The driving of an automobile upon any public highway by any person under 15 years of age, under any circumstances or conditions, is positively forbidden by the laws of Iowa.

This fact was developed the other day as a surprise to an inquirer from a northern Iowa town who had become confused over the fact that at two places in the law there is reference to the status of the 15-year-old chauffeur. It was found that while at one place in the law it seems to contemplate that a child of 15 may operate a car while accompanied by an older person, yet at another place it forbids any such operation on any public highway or public grounds. It is, therefore, permissable only that a young person may operate a car in a field or around the barn or on the family lot.

SECRET COMPANY FORMED BY GERMANS

Purpose Of Wealthy Organization To Spread Industrial Power Abroad.

London, Sept. 5.—The foreign office has made public a dispatch dated at Berlin February 27, last, from Sir Edward Goshen, formerly British ambassador at Berlin to Sir Edward Grey the secretary for foreign affairs, telling of a secret meeting in Berlin a short time previously to discuss plans for the improvement of German trade abroad.

Sir Edward says:

"A short time ago a meeting, of which the secret was wellkept, was convened at the ministry of foreign affairs. The foreign secretary himself was present and the meeting was attended by members of the leading industrial concerns of this country, such as the North German Lloyd, the Hamburg American Steamship company, the Deutchese Bank, the Siemens and Halske and Schukert Works, the Krupps & Crusen Works and the Allegemeine Electricitaets Gesselleschaft.

"This meeting formed a private company for the purpose of furthering German industrial prestige abroad, which is a conveniently vague purpose. The company will be financed by private subscriptions. The government will first grant a sum which was suggested as the necessary revenue.

"The private subscriptions amounted to $62,500, but the delegates present at the first meeting were so enthusiastic that definite promises of annual subscriptions of $125,000 were made and the company promised to add $62,500 per annum.

Will Censor News.

"The company has entered into an agreement with the Agence Havas by which the latter will in the future only publish news concerning Germany, if it is supplied by Wulff's Telegraphic bureau. The latter will receive its German news exclusively from the new company.

"The company intends to make a similar arrangement with Reuters Telegraph bureau for those foreign countries in which Reuter controls telegraphic communication. If Reuter declines, the Deutschese Kabalgesselleshaft, a smaller German news agency, which is to run a service in competition with Reuter's."

The dispatch further stated that the concerns represented at the Berlin meeting agreed to pay into a pool amounts equal to those they had been accustomed to spend abroad for advertising in foreign papers.

"The total of this item alone," the dispatch added, "is estimated to be not less than $125,000 per annum. The dispatch concluded with the statement that the new system was to be immediately inaugurated in South American countries.

ALBANIANS STORM PALACE OF PRINCE

Royal Family and Retinue Leave Home—International Commission Empowered.

Paris, Sept. 5.—A dispatch from Durazzo, Albania, to the Havas agency, timed Wednesday evening, tells of the department of Prince William of Wied, whose brief reign has been a troublesome one. It appears that a meeting of protest was held in the city and the police intervened. At 10 o'clock many armed citzens assembled before the royal palace and the apartment of the minister of finance and demanded the payment of their salaries. Comptroller Travesky calmed the crowd by promises that payment would be made.

At 5 o'clock in the afternoon Italian sailors landed and occupied the streets in the vicinity of the royal palace and Prince William and his princess, accompanied by Turkan Pasha, Akis Pasha, Sami Bey, Ekrem Bey and the republic corps, left the palace at 6 o'clock. The international commission assembled in the garden and presented its respects to the prince and princess, who then proceeded to the quay. Volunteers and sailors lowered the flag on the royal palace. The Italian yacht Misurata, which had been placed at the disposal of Prince William, flying the Italian and Albanian flags, weighed anchor at 7:30, and, after a salute from the Italian cruiser Libia, steamed in the direction of Venice.

Prince William of Wied, after he left, confided his powers to the international commission.

BRAVE BELGIANS SEEK DESTRUCTION

Paris, Sept. 5.—The Antwerp correspondent of the Petit Parisian gives this explanation of the presence of General Leman, the Belgian commander at Liege, in Madgeburg as a prisoner of war:

"On August 17 General Leman was summoned by the Germans to surrender the Liege forts. He refused, but as the situation was then desperate and it was impossible to hold out against another bombardment, he called his officers together in Fort Loncin and said:

"'You have valiantly fought for your country, but the struggle has become imposible and it is foolish to try further. Honor has been saved and the hour is come when we must separate. I have decided to die here. Loncin shall be my tomb.'

"All the officers declared that they would still fight and die with their general. Again the cannon thundered and then those in the fort were silenced, after which a terrible explosion took place. General Leman and his officers had blown themselves up. Alone of all in the fort, General Leman survived and from the debris he was taken a prisoner to Madgeburg. It was on Emperor William's order that he was allowed to keep his sword."

PARISIANS WEEP AS THEY PREPARE TO FORSAKE CITY

Paris, Sept. 5.—Never in the memory of the present generation has American city of consequence been menaced by a hostile army. Hence must be impossible for any citizen the United States, however vivid imagination may be, to conceive Parisian state of mind at this time. So justly proud of his wonderful city is the average resident of Paris that personal cowardice seems almost not to exist in the face of the awful fate threatening the city from Refugees, leaving Paris on every train do so only with much weeping and lamentation, characteristic of the French race, but at this time absolutely justifiable in view of circumstances.

Bordeaux already is housing many refugees. The hotels are overflowing, but the patriotic spirit of France has prevented a price raising orgy, such as an American would at once expect. Families of the lower class are camping outside the city, and those unable to buy food, have not as yet suffered actual hardships, the generosity of the bourgeois providing rations. The wealthier residents of Paris, including many native Americans, who have taken up residence on the continent have fled to southern France, Switzerland and Spain. The latter country is considered a splendid haven, being far removed from the war zone and as yet not entangled diplomatically.

Packing At Louvre.

The galleries in the Louvre are closed to visitors, and sounds of hammering and shifting of packing cases tell the presence of workmen employed to salvage that part of the conservatory of immortal art that is movable. The famous Venus de Milo was buried by the French in the last siege of Paris to protect it from the same race that are expected soon to be pounding at the gates of the city.

Occasionally an emotional wave arose from the assembled crowds in hysterical argument over the probability of the Louvre's destruction. Many wept silently before favorite works of the masters. It was a scene to affect men beyond the humanitarian impulse to pity a stricken people.

The streets of the city are a strange mixture of passiveness and activity. Many shops are closed and others might as well be. Those who have the patronage of tourists are dull places indeed. The many tiny restaurants and drinking places on the boulevards are deserted. Former habitues hasten past without pausing, concerned with preparations for leaving the city, or for getting loved ones away. Others is expected soon to be pounding at the front.

Cheer English Troops.

In the busier streets, detachments of English soldiers, arriving from Havre, and awaiting movement to the front, are cheered wildly as they march. Shopgirls and women follow the troops through the streets crying words of endearment and call on the holy virgin to bless and guard the allies of their sweethearts and brothers at the front.

English soldiers mix with the French in the streets, answering questions in imperfect French or in English displaying hearty appreciation of the treatment accorded them. Food, tobacco and other little luxuries may be had by the soldiers for the asking from any shopkeeper who has the supplies.

At the hospitals and in retreating camps the physical suffering is horrible to witness. Wounded soldiers and Red Cross ambulances and on stretchers are arriving in appalling numbers on every train.

Thousands of Belgians—women, children and old men—nearly all ill from hunger, exposure and fatigue, are camped in the outskirts of Paris. The suffering is intense, but everything possible is done by the French to relieve.

Preparing Forts.

At the forts of Paris active preparations for a siege are in progress. Soldiers are working in feverish haste urged by officers who seem to be everywhere at once. Signs of destruction everywhere are apparent about the country homes of the rich, west of Paris. Magnificent mansions and expensive villas alike are closed and boarded. In some places a servant remains on duty at the gate, but in most places no signs of life are visible.

It is inevitable that many and perhaps all of the beautiful homes will be in ashes before the owners return. The pretty countrysides may not be rehabilitated. War, at least, is no respecter of riches.

Paris, Sept. 4.—Tens of thousands of Parisians, chiefly women and children, have taken advantage of the free trains placed at their disposal by the government for the purpose of clearing Paris and its environs, so far as possible of all civilians who may hamper the military operation. Many of these people are going to the north or west of France. The military governor of the city has put at the disposal of noncombatants 15 trains of 40 cars each.

Passage on them is to be entirely free. They will run today, tomorrow and Sunday and convey refugees to points outside the military zone.

ARRESTING LEADERS OF MINERS IN BUTTE

Have Not Captured "Muckie" MacDonald Who Is Wanted For Inciting To Riot.

Butte, Mont., Sept 5.—Butte's first day of martial law was without disturbance. The Montana National Guard occupied the court house and city hall. Headquarters of the state militia were established in the court house with Major Jesse B. Roote as chief of staff and judge advocate. At the city hall Provost Marshal Frank Conley took charge.

Orders were given soon after the militia moved into the business district to arrest leaders of the Butte Mine Workers' union, the organization formed to oppose the Western Federation of Miners. Four arrests were made late in the afternoon, one of the men being James Chapman, chairman of the jurisdiction committee, and who acted as judge in the deportation of men who refused to join the new union. Chapman had cartridges in his pockets. Three others who were arrested carried revolvers.

Search for President.

Provost Marshal Conley searched the city for "Muckie" MacDonald, president of the union, but he could not be found. He is wanted on charges of inciting riots The list of men who are wanted was said by Major Roote to be a long one

The police of Butte and the sheriff's forces of Silver Bow county were ordered, by Major Dan J. Donohue, who is in command here, to co-operate with the militia in making the arrests and in maintaining peace. The city patrol wagon was used by the militia in carrying prisoners to the county jail. They are to be tried by the military court with Major Roote presiding.

FRANCE TRANSFERS SEAT TO BORDEAUX

Paris, Sept. 5—President Poincare and his cabinet have left for Bordeaux, the new French seat of government, where they will arrive in the morning.

Paris, Sept. 5.—Two trains reserved for the president and the members of the senate and chamber of deputies left for Bordeaux this afternoon. Fifteen judges of the court of cassation also will be transferred to the provisional capital of France.

In addition to the American ambassador, M. T. Herrick, the Swiss minister, M. Lardy, also has decided to remain in Paris. The population of the capital is taking the departure of the heads of government calmly, realizing it is a matter of prudence. Although the city generally is placid, the people feel keenly the approach of the German army and they are rapidly preparing for whatever may happen. Many families left for the west today, taking with them household necessities. These refugees from the capital have been forced to make very long detours because the railroads are encumbered with military trains.

The railroad lines out of Paris to the north have virtually ceased running trains, owing to fears of possible raids by German cavalry.

Paris, Sept. 5—A proclamation has been issued by the government announcing that the government departments will be transferred temporarily to Bordeaux.

The proclamation was issued by the minister of the interior, who said the decision had been taken solely upon the demand of the military authorities, because the fortified places of Paris, while not necessarily likely to be attacked, would become the pivot of the field operations of the two armies.

The building of supplementary defense works is proceeding vigorously.

Several of the gates of Paris were closed to traffic last night.

Proclamation Issued.

The proclamation follows:

"Frenchmen: For several weeks our heroic troops have been engaged in fierce combat with the enemy. The courage of our soldiers has won for them a number of marked advantages. But in the north the pressure of the German forces has constrained us to retire. This situation imposes on the president of the republic and the government a painful decision.

"To watch over the national safety the public authorities are obliged to leave for the moment the city of Paris. Under the command of its eminent chief, the French army, full of courage and spirit, will defend the capital and its patriotic population against the invaders. But the war must be pursued at the same time in the rest of the French territory.

"The struggle for the honor of the nation and the reparation of inviolate rights will continue without peace or truce and without a stop or a failure. None of its armies have been broken.

"If some of them have suffered only too evident losses, the gaps in the ranks have been filled up from the waiting reserve force, while the calling out of a new class of reserves brings us tomorrow new resources in men and energy.

"Endure and fight! Such should be the motto of the allied army—English, Russian, Belgian, and French.

"Endure and fight! While on the sea our allies aid us to cut the enemy's communications with the world.

"Endure and fight! While the Russians continue to carry a decisive blow to the heart of the German empire.

"It is for the government of this republic to direct the resistance to the very end and to give to this formidable struggle all its vigor and efficiency. It is indispensable that the government retain the mastery of its own actions. On the demand of the military authorities therefore the government transfers its seat temporarily to a place whence it may remain in constant relations with the rest of the country. It invites the members of parliament not to remain distant from the government in order to form, in the face of the enemy, with the government and their colleagues, a group of national unity.

"The government does not leave Paris without having assured a defense of the city and its entrenched camp by all means in its power. It knows it has not the need to recommend to the admirable Parisian population a calm resolution and sang froid, for it shows every day it is equal to the greatest duties.

"Frenchmen, let us all be worthy of these tragic circumstances. We shall gain a final victory and we shall gain it by untiring will, endurance and tenacity. A nation that will not perish and which, to live, retreats before neither suffrage nor sacrifice, is sure to vanquish."

AMERICAN EMBASSY WON'T LEAVE PARIS

Ambassador Herrick and Attaches Will Remain To Safeguard Americans.

Washington, Sept. 5.—The American Ambassador Myron T. Herrick, has determined to remain in Paris and his course has been warmly commended by the ministry of foreign affairs because the representative of the most powerful neutral government will be able, should the occasion arise, to serve the French as well as his own people.

Mr. Herrick's reasons for remaining in substance, are that he can better look after the several thousand Americans who stay in Paris. They are principally permanent residents in business or persons of moderate means unable to leave conveniently. He also feels that he can better protect American business interests among them several American banks and banking agencies with deposits of Americans. These would have transferred their cash elsewhere had not the ambassador remained.

Another reason that determined Mr. Herrick to stay was the possibility that he might, as the representative of the United States serve human interests regardless of any belligerent and express the views and felling of the American government and people.

Mr. Herrick asked Washington on Friday last if he was instructed to stay giving at the same time his opinion that he ought to stay. Secretary Bryan replied that Mr. Herrick might remain. The American minister has J. W. Garret, minister to Argentine; Louis A. Sussord, jr., of New York, third secretary of the embassy and Captain Parker, military attache, to be with the French government at Bordeaux with the approval of Mr. Bryan. The American embassy is now charged with British, Russian, Japanese, Servian, German and Austrian affairs in Paris and it is probable that the embassy will have its telegrams and mails delivered, in any event, owing to the diplomatic exemptions.

Mrs Herrick, who has been ill, but is now recovering, will also remain in Paris.

BERLIN FOOD CHEAP SAY U. S. ENGINEERS

All Restaurants Have Reduced Their Tariffs and Business Proceeds As Usual.

London, Sept. 5.—Two American oil engineers, who have reached London from Roumania, via Budapest and Berlin, bring some interesting stories of what they witnessed on their trip. Breslau, and in fact the whole of Sicilia, they said, was heavily mined and they also witnessed great aerial activity in Germany.

Food was extremely cheap in Berlin, they said, and all restaurants, even the best, had largely reduced their tariffs. Business was proceeding as usual, though recruiting stations in Unter Den Linden had hundreds of men waiting to be taken into the army.

They visited the flying station and estimated that more than 50 Zeppelins were in readiness to start at any time. There were also 100 or more aeroplanes there, while there was immense activity in constructing new craft and training men. Scores of aeroplanes were in the air at one time, each carrying a learner.

From the general conversation, they heard while in Germany, they gathered that there would be a combined attack by the naval fleets at an auspicious moment.

WIFE OF PANAMA CANAL BUILDER ARRESTED

Washington, D. C., Sept. 5.—With the return to Washington of American naval officers who were in France at the time of the outbreak of war, it became known today Mrs. George W. Goethals, wife of Governor Goethals, of the Panama canal zone, was arrested at Ville, France, as a German spy shortly after the war began.

Mrs. Goethals is of German descent and speaks the language fluently. She had some difficulty proving her identity, but finally produced her marriage certificate. When the French officers learned she was the wife of the builder of the Panama canal they could not apologize sufficiently, and her release was ordered immediately.

500,000 MEN ARE NOW MOBILIZED BY TURKEY

Washington, Sept. 5.—The object of the mobilization of Turkish troops was described in a statement today by the Turkish ambassador, A. Rustem Bey.

"The Turkish mobilization which started about a month ago, and not quite recently, as yesterday's telegrams might make one think, has brought to arms not 200,000 men mentioned in the same dispatches, but probably 500,000," stated the ambassador.

"This operation is not meant to allow Turkey to attack Greece, her differences with Greece being the smallest of her concerns today. She has to prepare in view of other and much more important contingencies."

Christiania's present telephone system is to be transformed into an automatic one.

FREE MARKET IDEA SCORES SUCCESS

Additional Places To Be Opened —New York Public Aroused Over Living Cost.

New York, Sept. 5.—The four free markets opened by the city in the borough of Manhattan yesterday in an effort to keep down the prices of foodstuffs have been so successful that additional markets will be opened in the Bronx and on Staten island, it was announced today. Locations for other markets are being sought in Brooklyn.

Prices at the free markets were from 10 to 40 per cent less than those quoted at stores.

New York, Sept. 3.—The masses of the people here were becoming disgusted, angry and excited over the failure of the authorities of nation, state and municipality to break up the syndicates, trusts and combines which continue to fix extortionate prices for provisions and all kinds of foodstuffs.

There would have been serious trouble in the thickly populated districts of this city soon if the populace were not convinced of the sincerity of the officials' efforts to save them and their families from the rapacity of the dealers in the necessaries of life.

Upon every hand one hears scoffing, scornful and threatening remarks as to the failure of the federal and state authorities to produce results after investigations of years, after promised indictments, prosecutions and relief, and yet few are indicted; fewer are prosecuted.

Fully 1,000,000 of the people here have it firmly fixed in their minds that they are being lied to by the politicians, deceived by the officials, plundered by the dealers, great and small, and if fuel and food continues this autumn in their upward tendency in prices there will be need of armed forces in the city of New York to preserve the peace.

Officials Not in Favor.

The state authorities, the federal authorities and many of the city authorities are not in favor at this time with the great majority of the working people of this city, and if the voters continue in their present frame of mind the elections this fall will be in the nature of a political debacle for those in power.

Wishawashy candidates ,shirking declarations of their sentiments upon public questions, striving to obtain office upon barren idealities and with words tha are intended to cajole, to deceive an dto betray will not stand much chance before the voters of New York state this fall

ITALIAN CARDINAL DELLA CHESIA IS ELECTED AS POPE

Rome, Sept. 5.—Cardinal Giacomo Della Chiesa, who was created archbishop of Bologna, Italy, May 25, 1914, was today elected supreme pontiff of the Catholic hierarchy in succession to the late Pope Pius X, who died August 20. He will reign under the name of Benedict XV.

The conclave of the sacred college, whose duty it is to elect the pope, went into session the evening of Monday, August 31. The announcement of the outcome of its deliberations was made this morning shortly after 11 o'clock.

Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, and Cardinal O'Connell, of Boston, are on board the steamer Canopic, which is not due at Naples until tomorrow. Consequently neither of them participated in the election of the new pope.

Cardinal Farley, of New York, reached here several days ago.

At 20 minutes past 11, Monsignor Misciatelli, sub-perfect of the sacred places and governor of the conclave, received a communication from the new pope asking that the gratings of the basilica of St. Peter be opened because he purposed in a short time to issue his proclamation.

Spread Red Carpet.

At this same house, 11:20, the master of ceremonies appeared on the central balcony of St. Peters and spread out the red carpet. The crowd below, which had been waiting for hours in the square in the expectation of an announcement as to the outcome of the deliberations of the sacred college understood that a selection had been reached. The people applauded vigorously.

At 25 minutes before 12 Cardinal Della Volpe appeared on the balcony with Monsignor Capostosti, bearing the pope's cross on the right and pronounced the ritual announcing the election of Cardinal Della Chiesa. To this he added that the new pope had chosen the name of Benedict XV.

Again the crowd of several thousand persons cheered and at once began to make their way into the Basilica to hear the benediction of the new pontiff.

It is asserted on good authority in Rome today that the new pope will appoint Cardinal Dominico Ferrata his secretary.

BIOGRAPHY OF NEW POPE.

The choice falls on a cardinal of Italian birth, as was expected from tradition and also from the disturbed conditions in Europe. It was at the age of 24 that the new pope was ordained in the priesthood. He soon attracted the attention of Cardinal Rampolla, later secretary of state for Pope Leo XIII. When Cardinal Rampolla was made nuncio to Madrid, he took Monsignor Della Chiesa with him as secretary of nunciature. On Cardinal Rampolla's return to Rome to become secretary of state for the vatican, Monsignor Della Chiesa, entered the secretariat of state as one of the "minutamti" or minor officials until 1901, when he was appointed substitute of the secretariat.

He was born at Pegli, in the diocese of Genes, November 21, 1854, and was ordained a priest December 21, 1878. He served as secretary of the Nunciature in Spain from 1883 to 1887, in which year he was appointed secretary to the late Cardinal Rampolla. He was appointed substitute secretary of state in 1901 and in 1907 he was elected to the post of advisor to the holy office.

In 1907 he was appointed papal nuncio of Madrid in succession to Mgr. Rianaldini, but this appointment was cancelled three days later. This incident had occurred just before he was made archbishop of Bologna.

When Mgr Della Chiesa was given this post it was declared in Rome that it was mainly with the object of combatting modern religious ideas, Bologna being the headquarters of the National Democratic league, whose members advocated what is known as "modernism" in religion.

In January, 1914, while archbishop of Bologna, the present pope issued a pastoral letter strongly condemning the tango.

It has been 174 years since the time of the last Pope Benedict.

On his election to the papacy in 1740 Cardinal Prospero Lambertini assumed that title. It is an interesting fact that the new pope was archbishop of of Bologna, while Pope Benedicte XIV was born in Bologna.

According to a dispatch from Rome, dated at 2:50 yesterday afternoon, and received in New York early today, the White Star liner Canopic, bearing Cardinals Gibbons and O'Connell to Rome, was not due at Naples until tomorrow. Therefore it is probable that neither of these two American cardinals participated in the election of the new pope.

As secretary to the secretary of state, Cardinal Della Chiesa was brought into notable prominence throughout the Catholic heirachy, but his position was not at that time of cardinalist rank. On the accession of Pope Pius X Monsignor Della Chiesa continued in the secretariat until December 16, 1907, when the pope gave him a noted promotion to the position of archbishop of the important see of Bolonga

For seven years he administered the see of Bologna with notable success, until in May last, Pope Pius X named him among thirteen members of the hierarchy to receive the red hat. Archbishop Begin of Quebec was among the other cardinals named at that time, the others being prelates of Spain, France, Austria, Germany and Italy.

The full title of the new pope in addition of Benedict XV will be pope bishop of Rome and successor of St. Peter, supreme pontiff of the Universal church, patriarch of the west, primate of Italy, archbishop and metropolitan of the Roman province, sovereign of the temperol dominon of the Holy Roman church.

Rome, Sept. 5.—It is reported on good authority that the delay of the conclave in selecting a pope was due to a speech by Cardinal Mercier, of Belgium, who said that present conditions in the world, but especially in Europe, made it impossible for the cardinals to perform the supreme duty of their position without a reference to the horrors of war.

Cardinal Mercier was supported by the French and English cardinals, while the Germans and Austrians, it is said, protested against what they called an undue interference of politics with the highest spiritual function of the church.

VETERANS OPPOSED TO OUTSIDE CONTROL

Will Protest To Congress Against Plan To Change Management Of Homes.

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 5.—The Grand Army of the Republic and the several organizations affiliated with it, plunged into routine business today. The principal event was the annual address of the commander in chief, Washington Gardner, of Albion.

Matters of interest to the old soldiers included a movement to establish national headquarters in a large city, possibly Washington.

It was considered probable that the encampment would officially protest to congress against any proposed plan to change the present method of management of the soldiers' homes scattered throughout the United States. These institutions have been managed by war veterans.

Grand Army sentiment seems strongly against so-called outside control.

Receptions and camp fires and a display of fireworks at Belle Isle were the entertainments arranged for tonight.

ZEPPELIN UNDER FIRE; AIRMAN MAKES ESCAPE

London, Sept. 5.—According to an Antwerp dispatch to the Evening News the Zeppelin airship, which appeared over Antwerp just before 4 o'clock this morning, circled over only the southeasterly part of the city.

The alarm was quickly given by the forts. The searchlights played upon the airship but rather ineffectively, because the Zeppelin had appeared just before dawn after a clear moonlight night. Shots were fired at it and it is believed that the airship was hit.

At Deurne, two miles east of Antwerp the Zeppelin apparently made efforts to reach the wireless installation. She dropped bombs and three houses were hit, four persons being wounded. At Berchem, inside the inner fortifications, a bomb destroyed some telegraph wires over the street.

At another point a bomb fell close to the railway line, but did no damage.

CHARGE ATTEMPT TO ELIMINATE UNIONS

San Francisco, Cal., Sept. 5.—Attempts are now being made to form an employers' association here, whose purpose shall be to convert San Francisco into an "open shop" city, John O'Connell, a member of the Iron Trades council, testified before the federal industrial relations commission today.

The organization, declared the witness, is affiliated with the Merchants', Manufacturers' and Employers' association in Stockton, which now is engaged in a fight with union labor there.

O'Connell said after he left the witness stand that it was his understanding efforts soon would be made to establish employers' association locals in several other parts of the state before precipitating an open fight on union labor here.

BAD AUTO ACCIDENT NEAR FOREST CITY

Results in Serious Injuries to Two of the Occupants When Car Turns Over

Pete Haraldson lies at the point of death and E. L. Plummer's face and head was terribly mutilated, when the Ford car Mr. Plummer was driving back from Kiester, Minn., Sunday morning about three o'clock, turned turtle about eight miles northwest of town. The third occupant, Selmer Hanson, who was alone in the back seat, escaped without being injured by jumping in time. It is said that Haraldson was asleep in the front seat, with Plummer as driver. We are unable to learn just what caused the catastrophe, but it is claimed the car ran to one side of the road and looped the loop. Plummer was unconscious for four or five hours. Fourteen stitches were taken in his face, and Haraldson, who is not expected to live, is injured internally. It is said to be concussion of the brain, he having received a terrible smash on the back of the head, and has been unconscious ever since the accident and is just barely living. The car was badly damaged and is now a shop undergoing repairs. Wm. Spillitt hauled it to town with his Ford express, by placing the front of the broken car on the rear of his car and coning to town on six wheels.—Forest City Summit.

A BIG BLAZE

On Sunday morning about two o'clock Henry Prohaska, living on the Palmeter Bros., farm four miles east of Clear Lake was aroused from his slumbers by an unusual noise. The sight that met his gaze was the barn enveloped in flames, which spread to the cow barns, cattle sheds and hog house, destroying them with all contents. Six head of horses, 25 tons of fine hay, 500 bushels of oats, harnesses and farm machinery. The disaster falls heavily on Mr. Prohaska and the Palmeter Bros. are also heavy losers. Palmeters loss is about $5000 with some insurance. Mr. Prohaska had been to Mason City, returning about 11 o'clock, putting his auto under the covering for it. He discovered one of the horses out of the barn, and putting the animal in the pasture, without entering the barn he retired for the night. No cause can be assigned for the fire except the work of tramps. —Clear Lake Mirror.

TITONKA UNPROGRESSIVE

Saturday in Titonka two elections were going on at the same time, one was the Consolidated School Question and the other was the Franchise question. R. L. John W. and Victor Lamoreux appeard before the town council of Titonka more than a month ago with an electric light ordinance asking the town to grant them a franchise or right to use and operate upon the streets and alleys of Titonka. They agreed in their notice to the town council that there would be no expense to the city, that the advertisements, cost of election, etc. would be borne by them if the council would call an election and put the matter to a vote of the electors within the incorporation. The ordinance was printed in 4 issues of this paper and the election held Saturday according to call. The vote was 36 to 40 against the proposition. What steps will be taken now is not known. The Motor company has expended a considerable sum in giving the residents of the town electric lights and power, whether they will extend the system or discontinue has not been learned. —Titonka Topic.

ASHWORTH IDENTIFIES LAVELLE AS KIDNAPER

One Arrest Made In Case At Valley Junction—Ed Wegener Still Missing.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 12.—L. Lavelle, arrested last night by detectives, was positively identified today by Charles Ashworth, a Valley Junction banker, as the man who held him prisoner in a vacant room at Valley Junction yesterday in an effort to force Ashworth to pay a ransom of $10,000. Charges of kidnaping and holding for ransom were filed against Lavelle and bail was fixed at $20,000. Ed Wegener, a bookkeeper and property owner at Valley Junction, who was with Ashworth when he was accosted by the masked bandit, is still missing. Charges were filed against Wegener yesterday upon Ashworth's statement that Wegener decoyed him, but later these charges were withdrawn.

Ashworth bears many marks of violence about the face. He is 67 years old and is rated as worth close to $1,000,000.

MADERO, AMES STUDENT, WILL RETURN TO MEXICO

Ames, Ia., Oct. 12.—Carlos Madero, the youngest brother of the murdered president of Mexico, who for a year has been an Ames agricultural student, said today that he is quitting college temporarily to go to Coahuila, northern Mexico, to start making money for himself on a portion of the vast Madero estates which are still in the hands of the Maderos. Dealers Making Small Purchases—Warm Weather Is Check—Collections Slow

New York, Oct. [illegible] report for the week [illegible]

Trade reports present an admixture of continued ill effects of the European war, warm weather depression in the southern cotton crop situation and high rates for money, although there are some signs of using hand to mouth buying, very slow collections, restricted industrial outputs and close scanning of credits. At this juncture export operations, largely of war supplies provide the chief fillip to a confessedly disappointing trade. Conservatism is so widespread as to heavily curtail buying for future delivery while difficulty in obtaining credit likewise provides an additional check rein.

Bank clearings for the week ended October 8, according to Bradstreet's aggregated $2,729,751,000, a decrease of 1[illegible] per cent from last year. CONDITIONS IMPROVING PRESIDENT IS INFORMED

Washington, D. The president was informed that [illegible] for American goods were being received from abroad and that the first bad effects of the European war on American industry had passed.

As part of the democratic campaign the president probably will issue a statement when he signs the Clayton anti-trust bill now before him calling attention to the completion of the program of trust legislation started with the passage of the trade commission bill.

Mr. Wilson has decided also to accept an invitation to speak in Pittsburgh on October 24 on the 70th anniversary of the founding of the Y. M. C. A. While he will not make a political speech he will go at the invitation of Representative Palmer, candidate for senator and his appearance is planned to assist Mr. Palmer.

THIRD PERSON MUST FIGURE IN PROFESSIONAL "SOLICITING"

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 10.—The power to prosecute immoral women is lost in a substantial degree as a result of a ruling in the district court here. The case involved is that of Lizzie White indicted on a charge of soliciting for immoral purposes. Several convictions have been made in cases where evidence has been shown that the defendants did the soliciting. The court holds that a third party must figure in the act and that he or she must be guilty of soliciting for another.

Use Dogs As Spies.

Petrograd—Wounded Russians who are arriving at Minsk from the Austrian theater of war tell many stories about the employment of dogs on both sides to assist in finding the wounded to carry them to the field hospitals.

It is alleged that the Austrians also use dogs as spies to track the Russian patrols. The best Cossack marksmen try to shoot them whenever possible. One man shot two dogs, on both of which were found interesting reports.

FAT COPS EXHAUSTED FROM GRILLING TEST OF WIND AND MUSCLE

New Des Moines Order Arouses Storm of Protests—Some Fall By Wayside.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 10.—Twenty outraged and thoroughly exhausted Des Moines policemen left the Y. M. C. A. building after four hours of rigid grilling at the hands of Physical Director Hoffer, of the Y. M. C. A., and C. W. Hummell, of the civil service commission.

From 8 o'clock in the morning until noon the cops, who ranged in age from 20 to 60 years and in weight from 165 to 250 pounds, were put through a series of stunts that would tax the capacity of a college athlete in the best of training. A rope ladder, which must be climbed hand over hand to the ceiling of the gymnasium, was one of the first performances staged for the inspection of Messrs. Hoffer and Hummell, after the men had been tested by Drs. Ely, Allen and Walker. Then a weight lifting contest, including the shouldering of a 200-pound sack of sand.

Later the men were sent up six flights of stairs followed by a quarter-mile run around the indoor track at the Y. M. C. A. "gym."

A number of the older men refused to enter some of the stunts and others fell exhausted by the wayside in their efforts to hold their jobs on the force.

According to one officer, who is younger than many of his fellowmen, the whole thing was a pathetic proceeding. "I went up there today expecting a lot of fun," he said. "But it was most pathetic to see those men, some of them nearly 60 years old, making efforts to compete with the younger fellows. It means their bread and butter. Those men have families to support. They have children in school. If the commission wants to fire us why doesn't it do it? We know we're not athletes without being shown."

PROPERTY OF IOWA CITIES VALUED AT $30,277,203

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 10.—The cities of Iowa, 101 in number, have physical property valued at a sum larger than the aggregate of property owned by the state of Iowa. RELATIVES SEEK SHARE OF $250,000 ESTATE

Alton, Ia., Oct. 10.—Collateral heirs to the estate of [illegible] Rankin of Hawarden allege that after his marriage to a young woman she began systematically to abuse his mind with reference to his own family. Mr. and Mrs. Rankin during one of their journeys to the south, met a young chiropractor of Kansas City, Dr. Smith. The doctor was so efficient in his treatment that he traveled with the Rankins wherever they went and so long as the couple stayed in Kansas City they received their mail in care of the doctor.

Rankin died and soon after his death the widow became the wife of the doctor. The collateral heirs now are seeking a share in the estate which amounts to about $250,000, of which more than $100,000 was in government bonds. Testimony is being taken by a referee at Hawarden and elsewhere and the trial of the case will take place in Sioux Falls.

WAR SPIRIT ENTERS INTO DAVENPORT MURDER CASE

Davenport, Ia., Oct. 10.—Judge William Theophilus yesterday denied a change of venue in the murder case of Johann Whynack, on trial for the killing of his wife this summer. Whynack's attorneys, M. V. Gannon and C. B. Kaufmann, attempted to take the case out of Scott county charging that the fact that Whynack is a Slav and that the population here is largely German would prevent a fair trial.

The defense alleged that County Attorney Fred Vollmer's German ancestry prejudiced him against the prisoner. The county attorneys presented an affidavit signed by 34 prominent Davenport business men proving his reputation for fairness.

MAN WANTED IN MISSOURI IS FOUND ON IOWA FARM

Imogene, Ia., Oct. 10.—About 14 months ago a man giving his name as Joe Morgan came here and was employed on the farm of Andy Clark. Morgan proved a good farmhand and impressed all as being a citizen worthy of respect and confidence. Morgan prospered so well that he decided to send for his wife, who was in Missouri. He prepared a home for her in one of Clark's tenement houses. He then sent her a letter telling her to come but the letter brought to Imogene, instead of Morgan's wife, the Sheriff of a Missouri county and it developed that Morgan had escaped from a Georgia prison, where he has been returned.

GERMAN PRESS ANNOUNCES KAISER PLANS AN ACTIVE CAMPAIGN TO DEAL DEATH BLOW TO FORMIDABLE FOE

MAY HAVE TO VIOLATE NEUTRALITY OF HOLLAND

London Newspapers Fully Appreciate Value of Strategic Point Which Has Just Fallen Into Hands of Teutons, Wondering How It Will Be Utilized and Intimating That United Kingdom Is Prepared to Anticipate Hostile Move By Enemy—Virtually No Change In Situation In France.

England today, more than at any time since the war began, is face to face with the menace of all the powerful military forces of the German empire. That Germany intends to direct her energies against England without further delay is indicated by the tone of the German press, according to advices from Rome.

The strategic importance of Antwerp to the Germans arose largely from the fact of its menace to their lines of communication. With the Belgian army withdrawn to a position half way between Antwerp and Ostend, the pressure on these lines will be removed, at least temporarily.

It is assumed in London that if Germany considers it convenient to her plan of campaign she will not hesitate to utilize the neutral waters of the Scheldt, but as an airship and possibly submarine base it is contended that she can derive no advantage from this waterway.

England, judging from the tone of the London newspapers today, realizes the situation fully. Just what measures have been taken to offset an offensive movement by the Germans, no one in official capacity will state. It is merely stated that England has not been idle and is prepared to meet any emergency.

Germany Will Push War Against England, Using Belgium As Base

Rome (via Paris), Oct. 12.—The war against Great Britain, according to German newspapers received here will commence at the end of October after Antwerp has fallen.

Belgium then will become the base of operations against Great Britain, the newspapers say. They add that Admiral Von Tirpitz, the minister of the navy, who is now at general headquarters, with Emperor William has announced that he will go aboard the flagship of the German fleet and direct the operations of the navy.

As Antwerp is 150 miles from London, in England the fear has been expressed that with this city as a German base Zeppelin airships could be used to attack the English coast line and even London. The distance from Antwerp to the English coast is less than 100 miles.

Antwerp is on the River Scheldt. This river, before it enters the North sea flows through the Netherlands territory. Under existing conditions it would be impossible for Germany to use Antwerp for a naval base without violating the neutrality of the Netherlands.

London, Oct. 10.—A dispatch to the Daily Mail, from Ostend, says that the Germans have blown up all the bridges between Ghent and Inglemeunster and have destroyed the railroad station at Vive Steeloi. Inglemeunster and Vive Steeloi are on the railway line between Ghent and Courtral.

French Report Progress In Operations Against Germans

Paris, Oct. 12.—The following official announcement was given out in Paris this afternoon.

"The fighting continues under satisfactory conditions. Our entire battle front has been maintained in spite of violent attacks of the army at several points.

"On our left wing in the region included by La Basse Armentieres and Cassel the fighting between the opposing forces of cavalry has been confused because of the nature of Terrain.

"To the north of the Oise our troops have attained real advantages at several places in their zone of action. In the region of St. Mihiel we have made material progress.

"As to Belgium, it is announced that Antwerp was taken yesterday. The conditions under which this place was occupied by the enemy, are, however not yet known.

"In Russia very spirited fighting continues on the frontier of east Prussia where Russian troops have had partial successes. They have occupied the town of Lyck (in east Prussia.)

"The siege of Przemysl continues under conditions favorable for the Russians who have taken by assault one of the forts of the main line of defenses."

Armies Burrow in Trenches And in Subterranean Caverns

Paris, Oct. 12.—In contrast to the rapidity with which the Germans have conducted their campaign against Antwerp the tide of battle is flowing slowly in certain parts of France. The engagements in the Woevre district, according to the statements of wounded soldiers, who have been brought from this territory, continue in the form of a slow and steady siege. The trenches in the Woevre have been constructed in two lines, one behind the other. The outermost is furnished with quick-firing guns, with outposts constantly on guard.

The larger detachments shelter themselves from the second line. These trenches are large and comparatively comfortable and, at intervals, they broaden into subterranean rest rooms, in which the troops may sleep in comparative security. The first line is reached from the second through underground passages.

The daily routine is carefully observed. The fire of their heavy artillery is delivered through the study of maps and aerial reconnoisances and is directed mostly to the ravines and woods where the enemy is supposed to be.

The allies have just installed a system of drainage in their trenches, which, up to the present time, has been very successful. Drainage is a most necessary precaution as many of the troops are suffering from inflammatory rheumatism.

FIRE DESTROYS COLLEGE GYMNASIUM; LOSS $100,000

New York, Oct. 10.—The Columbia university gymnasium building, a two-story brownstone structure, 75x175 feet, designed by the late Stanford White, and built 12 years ago, was a charred, watersoaked ruin today, with all but the walls and electric power plant in the basement destroyed by the fire which gained swift headway early this morning.

If heat and water have weakened the walls the loss will be heavy; if they stand strong as ever, it is believed $100,000 will be sufficient to rehabilitate the building. The structure housed the university heating and power plants, the gymnasium, swimming pool and indoor race track, paraphernalia and trophies of the oarsmen, editorial rooms of the school of journalism, hundreds of students' lockers, various offices and the university restaurant, in which it is believed the blaze originated.

At one time the fire threatened the dormitories, and the thousands of students and teachers sleeping there were roused and sent to the grounds.

ARMY OFFICER UNDER SEVERE INVESTIGATION

Washington, Oct. 10.—Secretary Garrison today called on Captain Levert Coleman, U. S. A., who returned from Europe yesterday, with Assistant Secretary Breckinridge, for an explanation as to the correctness of published criticisms of the German army attributed to him, which officials deem in violation of President Wilson's prohibition of partisan discussion of the European war.

Captain Coleman was quoted as saying his observations "led to the conclusion that the so-called German atrocities was the result of orders from high German military authorities and not the work of individuals," and that "the Germans will never again get as near to Paris as they have been."

JEWS BECOME OFFICERS IN ARMY OF GERMANY

Rome, (via Paris), Oct. 10.—Heretofore although there is no law prohibiting Jews from entering, no Israelite officer existed in the German army. Since this war began, according to news received here, more than 150 Jewish officers have joined the German army.

Nearly Eighteen Millions in Battle; 2,000,000 Killed, Wounded and Missing

Even the most startling predictions made when the European war began regarding the number of men that would be called into the conflict and the tremendous losses that would accompany it have been borne out. Events now show that the nations at war have men under arms or at the battle fronts as follows:

Russia	6,000,000	England	250,000
Germany	4,800,000	Servia	300,000
France	4,000,000	Montenegro	80,000
Austria	2,500,000
Total			17,930,000

Col. R. N. Maude, author of the "Evolution of Strategy," estimates the total German loss along all the battle fronts at 1,000,000; Frenchmen, 300,000 killed, wounded or taken prisoners; Austrians, in the Galician campaign, killed, wounded and prisoners, more than 500,000. Inflicting this damage, it is believed that the Russians lost at least 250,000. Thus the estimates of the killed, wounded and missing in the war so far are placed in the neighborhood of 2,000,000 men.

BELGIAN TROOPS ESCAPE ANTWERP

Victory Robbed of Much of Its Intrinsic Value By Failure to Capture Heroic Garrison—Main Army Withdrew, Leaving Only Few Men Behind to Blow Up Guns and These Later Joined Their Comrades—City Badly Damaged.

BELGIANS TO EFFECT JUNCTION WITH ALLIES

London, Oct. 10.--Antwerp has fallen into the hands of the Germans, with the exception of a few outlying forts, which cannot affect the outstanding facts, but its capture, important and stirring as it has been, was robbed of much of its intrinsic value, it is contended here, by the escape of the garrison.

The defenders, it appears, held on long enough to enable them to take full stock of the situation, and evacuated the citadel when it became evident that the doom of the town was sealed. Toward the close of the defense only a sufficient garrison to work the remaining available guns was left to hold Antwerp.

At midday Friday the advance force of the Germans entered Antwerp and the full surrender of the city evidently occurred at 2:30 in the afternoon. Beaten back from their last defenses, the Belgians blew up their heavy batteries and withdrew to rejoin their comrades, who previously had evacuated their positions.

The forts around Contich, six miles southeast of Antwerp, are said to be still intact and the duel between them and the German artillery is reported as still proceeding this (Saturday) morning. The outcome cannot be in doubt, it having been conclusively proved in the last two months that permanent forts in an exposed situation stand no chance against modern siege howitzers.

The real extent of the destruction within the walls of Antwerp will be slow in reaching the outside world from unpartisan sources, for the reason that communication with the city is either cut or entirely in the hands of military authorities. From The Hague it is asserted that the Cathedral of Notre Dame has not been damaged. The museums and other public buildings also may have escaped. It is to be noted that the reports of destruction have almost invariably been obtained from excited refugees and telegraphed from points more or less distant from Antwerp.

Terrific Fighting Preceded Evacuation of Belgian City

The Hague, (via London), Oct. 12.—Antwerp surrendered to the Germans at 2:30 p. m., Friday, October 9.

The war flag was removed from the cathedral and a white flag raised in its place at 9 a. m. The actual surrender took place five and one-half hours later.

It is declared here that the Cathedral of Notre Dame has not been damaged.

The Germans delivered one of their last furious attacks between 6 and 7 o'clock Friday morning. The Belgians resisted them valiantly in their trenches and the desperate fighting resulted in very heavy losses on both sides.

During all Thursday night Zeppelin airships directed the firing of the German heavy artillery, the results of which were appalling.

The German artillery forced its way across the river Nethe, in which many of the artillerymen were drowned. The fighting has been indescribably sanguinary.

The Belgians succeeded in blowing up two and possibly more of their enemy's batteries and heavy artillery.

London, Oct. 10.—Under date of Friday the correspondent of the Central News at Sasvanhent, a Dutch frontier town, says:

"The sounds of firing could no longer be heard in the direction of Antwerp today. Although the bombardment continued last night.

"Fire raged in the southern quarter of the city all night as well as in the suburb of Berchem. The orphanage in the Rue Louise is afire, but the inmates have been saved.

"At 2 o'clock this morning a train filled with refugees which was about to leave for Eschen was struck by a projectile. No more fugitives are reaching Eschen, the bridge having been destroyed. It is estimated that two-thirds of the population of Antwerp is now in Dutch territory.

"The Antwerp cathedral is seriously damaged."

Antwerp Captured After 10 Days Of Battering by Siege Artillery

London, Oct. 10.—The Amsterdam correspondent of Reuter's Telegram company says a message from Berlin, general army headquarters, dated October 10 at 11 a. m., says the entire fortress of Antwerp, including all forts, is in possession of the Germans.

London, Oct. 10.—The queen of the Belgians is reported to have passed through Folkestone from Dunkirk, last night, proceeding to London.

London Oct. 12.—An official Berlin dispatch via Marconi wireless, confirms the report that Antwerp has been occupied.

London, Oct. 12.—The British war office announces that Antwerp was evacuated by the Belgians yesterday.

The official announcement of the fall of Antwerp, given out at German general headquarters late last night and transmitted here via Marconi wireless, says:

"This forenoon several forts of the inner line of the fortifications of Antwerp have fallen. The town since midday has been in our possession.

"The commander and the garrison evacuated the fortifications. Only a few forts are still occupied by the enemy and this is without importance on our position in Antwerp."

The siege of Antwerp, which culminated in its fall on Friday, October 9, began on September 29, so that Germans took just 10 days to reduce the formidable fortifications which surrounded the temporary capital of the Belgians. The Germans had, however, for a long time previous prepared the way by taking a number of towns in its vicinity.

The first direct attack was against the forts at Waelhem and Wavre-St. Catherines. These were reduced in a couple of days by the aid of the big siege guns. Meanwhile the forts at Lierre, on Koningshoyckt had also been attacked and these and others of outside line of fortifications were taken last week.

The last few days has seen the fighting advance to the inner line of forts and along the Scheldt, principally at Schoonaerde. At the last named place severe fighting occurred for several days, but the superior artillery of the Germans gradually forced the Belgians back until in the last day or two the fighting has reached practically to the suburbs of Antwerp.

On Wednesday, October 7, came reports that the Belgian government was moving to Ostend and that day also brought reports that the population was fleeing in terror toward the Holland frontier. Zeppelin bomb attacks which did much damage and killed scores of people, added to the terror of the inhabitants.

The German forces which have taken Antwerp are said to consist of five army corps. They were under the command of Gen. Hans H. Von Beseler, a veteran of the war of 1870, who was taken from retirement to do the work of reducing Antwerp.

General De Guise was in command of the Belgian defenders. King Albert aided them by his personal direction almost to the last, having quit Antwerp, according to reports only yesterday morning, probably when the end was seen.

GERMAN NEWSPAPER TELLS HOW SOLDIERS HELP FAMILIES

(Heidelberger Gazette, Sept. 19.)

According to the report of the imperial postoffice the field post transmitted 1,000,000 marks from soldiers at the front to their families at home. September 1 the German soldiers received their first pay since the beginning of the war, and sent a part of it to the folks at home. This proves that the army in the field is well taken care of and proves further that the German soldier is very affectionate to his family.

Peking, China, is to have a belt railway to connect its four railway terminals. Later it is to have a central station. Tunnels are to be bored through the ancient walls to facilitate the handling of traffic.

M'ADOO TO FIGHT PLANTERS' SCHEME

Cotton Bonding Plan Impractical and Discriminatory, Says Secretary of Treasury.

Washington, Oct. 12.—The plan for direct federal aid to cotton growers to the extent of $400,000,000 was the subject of sharp criticism in a letter to Representative Henry, of Texas, made public by Secretary McAdoo. The letter is in reply to recent statements to the House by Mr. Henry.

Mr. McAdoo announces that the proposal to sell $250,000,000 of Panama canal bonds to bolster the cotton crop is not practicable, and generally objects to all the features of the Henry scheme. He calls attention to the fact that those who deal in tobacco, naval stores, copper, silver and other commodities have sought government aid.

"If we disregard every suffering interest except cotton," he said, "and make it the sole beneficiary of governmental favor what becomes of the democratic principle of 'equal rights for all, special privileges to none?'

"If we enter upon the course you suggest you must help every distressed industry impartially. To do that would necessitate the issue of many more than $400,000,000 in bonds and green back and dangerously involve the credit of the government. It would be a hopeless undertaking in defiance of every sound principle of finance and economics, with certain disaster at the end."

Representative Henry introduced in the House today a compromise loan proposition presented in a bill framed last night by a conference of southern members of congress. It would reduce the proposed loan to $250,000,000.

While Mr. McAdoo was writing his letter the committee of St. Louis jobbers and bankers, headed by Festus J. Wade, was in conference with a committee of the federal reserve board over the proposed $150,000,000 cotton loan fund to take care of the surplus cotton crop. No decision was reached and the conference will be resumed tomorrow.

Governor Hamlin and Messrs. Warburg and Harding, the board committee, will discuss the proposal tomorrow before they meet the bankers, and later the full reserve board may take it up.

"What is really wanted," Mr. McAdoo's letter said, "is a restored market for cotton. The value of cotton has been injured this year by the European war. This injury cannot be retrieved nor the market restored by legislation any more than the injury to corn, which was caused by the drought last year in the great corn states of the west could have been repaired by legislation."

FAVORS COTTON EXHIBIT.

Washington, Oct. 12.—Urging that the demand for cotton be increased, President Wilson, today, gave out a statement indorsing the exhibit of cotton goods held here this week, and urging that similar exhibits be held in other cities.

BELGIAN HOMELESS CARED FOR IN ENGLAND

Trains Carry Refugees Into London, Where Food Is Provided.

London, Oct. 12.—Seven trains bringing refugees from Antwerp arrived here last night and were met by representatives of the war refugees committee. A majority of those who came in on the trains were of the well to do class and did not need assistance.

The others, however, bore sterner evidence of the experiences they had undergone. Many of these carried their belongings in brown paper parcels slung over their shoulders. The distressed ones were provided with warm meals at the stations and then sent by omnibus to various institutions pending arrangements for their housing.

An Antwerp real estate man, who escaped on the last train leaving the besieged town, said:

"Fierce fighting was going on almost at our doors when we left. The noise of the big guns was like continuous thunder. Life in Antwerp for the last week had been a nightmare. Considerable damage to houses had been done by bombs dropped from Zeppelin airships.

"For a fortnight it had been impossible to obtain a warm meal in the city. The town has been virtually in darkness for two months."

The refugees included a number of Belgian soldiers and a party of 40 Ursuline nuns.

FIRE DESTROYS COLLEGE GYMNASIUM; LOSS $100,000

New York, Oct. 12.—The Columbia university gymnasium building, a two-story brownstone structure, 75x175 feet, designed by the late Stanford White, and built 12 years ago, was a charred, watersoaked ruin today, with all but the walls and electric power plant in the basement destroyed by the fire which gained swift headway early this morning.

If heat and water have weakened the walls the loss will be heavy; if they stand strong as ever, it is believed $100,000 will be sufficient to rehabilitate the building. The structure housed the university heating and power plants, the gymnasium, swimming pool and indoor race track, paraphernalia and trophies of the oarsmen, editorial rooms of the school of journalism, hundreds of students' lockers, various offices and the university restaurant, in which it is believed the blaze originated.

JEWS BECOME OFFICERS IN ARMY OF GERMANY

Rome, (via Paris), Oct. 10.—Heretofore, although there is no law prohibiting Jews from entering, no Israelite officer existed in the German army. Since this war began, according to news received here, more than 150 Jewish officers have joined the German army.

The average length of human life is about 33 years, and of 1,000 persons, only one reaches the age of 100 years.

WAR TAX SQUABBLE FAR FROM FINISH

Congressmen Draw Apart and Constituents Madly Protest All Suggestions For Revenue Measure.

Washington, Oct. 12.—A big battle over the war tax bill is now on in the Senate. It is expected to continue through the week and probably longer. In the course of the discussion many phases of the revenue, banking and tariff situation as well as the general business situation, will be threshed out.

In the end the new revenue bill will be passed and additional taxes imposed. But republican senators are bent on a thorough discussion of the bill and full airing of their views before the measure goes through. No filibuster is expected. Considerable democratic discussion will also develop in connection with the bill, but a large part of this will be on details of the measure as it affects special interests or localities.

The volume of protests against the war tax measure is increasing. Protests are coming in from practically every industry or interest affected by the additional taxation. These protests have caused many of the democrats to be apprehensive over the political effects of the bill. Little enthusiasm for it exists either among democratic senators or members of the House, but they will pass it.

Bill Condemned.

Such speeches as have already been made in the Senate against the bill indicate the lines of attack which are to be followed. The bill is condemned on the ground that no war tax is necessary at this time. The charge is made that the real need for the additional revenue is not a treasury need at all, but is induced because the treasury does not want to withdraw public moneys from banks, and wants to use the additional revenue for the purpose of easing over the banking situation caused by putting the new federal reserve system into effect, with consequent assessments on the banks for capital and shifting of reserves. It is charged that if the democrats had not passed appropriation bills which break the record there would be no need for additional revenue in any event, and on the other hand it is further charged the new tariff has been a disappointment as a producer of revenue.

Thus the whole field of tariff, revenue, banking and appropriations will be traversed in the discussion. With the November elections near, much matter for campaign purposes will be put into the record.

Though there is a hard fight ahead on this war tax measure, the leaders still hope to end the session about the middle of October, after passing the Clayton bill, the Alaska coal land leasing bill and the war tax bill.

One of the remarkable proposals made in connection with the demand for added revenue is to impose a tax on the federal employes and officials. Senator John Sharp Williams was the first to suggest this, at the same time being careful to exempt members of the House and Senate from reductions in pay. Senator Vardaman has proposed withholding for a year a graduated percentage of the pay of federal employes and officials. Neither plan is likely to be adopted because everyone knows that the lower paid employes in the government service, with living cost high, have a hard time making both ends meet as it is. Moreover, for congress to tax the pay of all others but itself in the federal service would make it the laughing stock of the public.

As the bill was completed by the caucus, with its added levies on beer and rectified spirits and minus the proposed taxes on gasoline and automobiles, Senator Simmons estimated that it would yield annually about $105,000,000, unless a slump in beer production cuts down the estimated revenue from that source.

The increased tax on beer is expected to yield from $43,000,000 to $46,000,000, and the rectified spirits tax of 5 cents a gallon is calculated to raise $5,000,000. Stamp taxes on negotiable instruments, stocks and bonds, deeds and transfers, bills of lading, Pullman car and steamship tickets and insurance policies are expected to yield $30,000,000, and a stamp tax on patent medicines, cosmetics and perfumes is expected to yield $7,000,000. The remainder will come from special taxes on theaters and places of amusement, on tobacco, cigars and cigaret manufacturers and on domestic wines.

The caucus eliminated yesterday a special tax of $40 on brokers, cutting out $300,000 of estimated revenue. A vigorous protest by Senator Lewis, of Illinois, resulted in a reduction of the tax on Pullman tickets from 2 cents to 1 cent each. It was estimated that the 2-cent tax would have yielded $500,000 of revenue. Efforts to impose a stamp tax on bank checks of 1 or 2 cents each were voted down.

The caucus authorized the finance committee to revise the tax on cigarets, formerly fixed by the committee at $24 for each manufacturer. It will be graduated along the lines of the cigar manufacturers' tax, which charges dealers from $6 to $96, according to the volume of business.

ARMY OFFICER UNDER SEVERE INVESTIGATION

Washington, Oct. 12.—Secretary Garrison today called on Captain Levert Coleman, U. S. A., who returned from Europe yesterday, with Assistant Secretary Breckinridge, for an explanation as to the correctness of published criticisms of the German army, attributed to him, which officials deem in violation of President Wilson's prohibition of partisan discussion of the European war.

Captain Coleman was quoted as saying his observations "led to the conclusion that the so-called German atrocities was the result of orders from high German military authorities and not the work of individuals," and that "the Germans will never again get as near to Paris as they have been."

The Friday Smell.

Little Rollo, aged 5, had always observed that fish was the big dish at his home on Friday. And he had observed that the rule held in the neighboring households.

Recently little Rollo was sent out to visit his grandma in the country. And after a day or two he missed something.

"Grandma," said he, "ain't it ever Friday in the country?"

"What a question,' she laughed. "Of course it is. Today is Friday, dear.'

"Well," said Rollo, "it don't smell like Friday."

BRAVES DEFEAT MACKMEN BY SCORE OF 1 TO 0 IN SECOND GAME OF SERIES

Athletics Again Taken Down the Line By Stallings' National League Champs—Veteran Plank Pitches Rattling Good Game, But Braves Manage to Drive In Winning Run In Ninth Inning After Long Harrowing Battle—Vast Crowd on Hand to Cheer Rival Teams.

Today's Game Something of Crisis For White Elephants Who Monday Must Meet Captain Evers' Bunch on Home Grounds at Fenway Park—Mack Confident His Men Will Be Able to Grab Championship—Fine Weather and Hard Ground Favorable to Fast, Flashy Play.

Shibe Park, Philadelphia, Oct. 10.—The Boston National league champions won the second game of the world's series today by beating the Philadelphia Athletics, 1 to 0. It was a gruelling fight to the finish and Boston did not put their run over until the ninth inning. A double by Deal, substituting for Smith at third, followed by his steal of third and Mann's single brought in Boston's run. The Athletics threatened in the ninth inning, having a man on first and second with only one out, but a sharp double play, engineered by Maranville, ended the Athletics' chances. James' pitching was simply baffling the Philadelphia club being helpless before his speed and fast breaking spitter. Both clubs fielded brilliantly, Maranville's and Barry's playing being especially brilliant.

After the game the Boston rooters, led by President Gaffney, of Boston, paraded around the field, while the band played the Boston battle song, "Tessie." The two clubs leave for Boston tonight. The world's series now stands Boston Nationals, 2; Philadelphia Americans, 0. The official box score:

First Inning.

Boston—Plank's first serve was a ball, the curve breaking wide of the plate. The next one came over for a strike. Mann out, Collins to McInnis. Collins took the ball back on the grass and made a fast play on the runner. Evers scratched an infield single which Plank could not get in time to make the throw. Cather fanned on three pitched balls. Whitted walked, Plank making a kick when Hildebrand called the last pitch a ball. Schmidt flied out to Strunk. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Philadelphia—Big James sent up an inshoot which was too low. His second one was a strike. Murphy walked. James got himself in a hole on the batter by trying to keep the ball on the corners of the plate. Murphy was out when James threw wildly to Schmidt, who quickly recovered the ball and threw to Maranville, who touched out Murphy. Oldring out, Deal to Schmidt. Deal also threw out Collins. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Second Inning.

Boston—Gowdy was given a big hand when he came to bat. Plank fooled him on the first one with a slow curve. Gowdy walked. Plank was unable to control his wide curve. The Bostons had hit speed yesterday and Plank was now feeding them on curves. Maranville sacrificed, Baker to McInnis. Plank took Deal's smash and tossed to Baker who threw to Collins, who touched Gowdy as he tried to slide back to second. Deal stole second. He was almost caught between the bases but Schang's throw was a little wide so that McInnis was not in position to throw to second before Deal made the bag. Schang threw wild to catch Deal off second, but Barry saved him an error with a high jumping catch. James fanned. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Philadelphia—The Boston outfielders played out against the fence for Baker but he only fouled out to Schmidt. McInnis fanned. Strunk also struck out. James was given a cheer when he went to the bench. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Third Inning.

Boston—Barry threw out Mann. It was a slow roller and Barry only got the ball after a hard run. His throw had Mann by a few feet at the bag. Evers singled solidly to center, after having two strikes called on him. It was his second hit. Evers was almost picked off first by Schang, but McInnis dropped the ball. Cather out on a fly to Baker. Evers tried to steal, but Whitted fouled off the ball. Evers out stealing, Schang to Collins. It was a pitchout and Evers was caught 10 feet off the bag. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Philadelphia—Barry flied out to Cather. Schang also flew out to Cather who took the ball over near the line. The crowd gave the veteran Eddie Plank a big hand when he came to the plate. Plank went out on three straight strikes. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Fourth Inning.

Boston—Whitted flied to Strunk. Schmidt smashed a single to right field after the count on him was three to two. Gowdy out on a fly to Murphy. Maranville singled to right, Schmidt going to second. Barry made a wonderful stab of Deal's high bounder and touched second forcing Maranville. The blow was almost a sure hit, on which Schmidt could have easily scored. No runs, two hits, no errors.

Philadelphia—James took Murphy's weak smash and threw him out. Oldring could not fathom James' speed and struck out. Maranville threw out Collins at first. James' pitching was gilt edged. He had not allowed a hit in the first four innings and had sent the Athletic batters back to the bench in one, two, three order. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Fifth Inning.

Boston—James beat up the air and struck out. Mann shot a hot single over second base. Evers flied out to Strunk. Mann ran down to second but got back to first before Strunk's throw reached the bag. Barry took Cather's grounder and tossed to Collins forcing Mann. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Philadelphia—Baker flied out to Whitted. McInnis fanned for the second time. Strunk out for the second time. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Sixth Inning.

Boston—Whitted popped out to Collins. Schmidt threw his shoulder in the way of a slow ball and started to walk to first but the umpire called him back. Schmidt flied out to Murphy, who had to go up near the fence to make the catch. Gowdy walked on four pitched balls. Maranville was hit with a pitched ball. Baker took Deal's roller and touched third, forcing Gowdy. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Philadelphia — Maranville threw out Barry at first. Schang got a two bagger to left. It was the Athletics first hit. He was almost caught at second but a good slide saved him. Schang was out when the ball got away from Gowdy, who quickly got the ball and threw the Athletic catcher out at third. Maranville threw out Plank. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Seventh Inning.

Boston—James struck out for the third time. Mann struck out, Schang to McInnis. Baker threw out Evers. No runs, no hits, no errors.

Philadelphia—Murphy fanned. Evers tossed out Oldring. Collins got an infield hit. Collins was picked off first. James to Schmidt. No runs, one hit, no errors.

Eighth Inning.

Boston—Barry threw out Cather. McInnis saved Barry from a wild throw. Whitted was safe when McInnis dropped Barry's perfect throw, Barry getting an assist. Whitted was forced at second, Collins taking Schmidt's grounder and tossing to Barry. Gowdy flied out to Strunk. No runs, no hits, an error.

Eighth Inning.

Philadelphia—Evers tossed out Baker. It was announced that the official figures for attendance were the same as yesterday. Maranville dropped McInnis' foul fly. McInnis fouled out to Deal. Strunk out, Evers to Schmidt. No runs, no hits, one error.

Ninth Inning.

Boston—Barry threw out Maranville. Deal got a two-base hit over Strunk's head. Deal stole third when Schang threw to Barry to catch him napping. James struck out for the fourth time. Deal scored on Mann's hit, which was just out of Collins reach. Mann went to second on a passed ball. Evers walked. Evers was out at second, Barry taking Cather's smash and tossing to Collins. One run, two hits, no errors.

Philadelphia—Barry walked. Schang struck out, Barry going to second. Walsh batted for Plank. The scorer gave Barry a stolen base. Walsh walked. A double play ended the inning. Maranville took Murphy's grounder and touched second, forcing Walsh. He then threw out Murphy at first. No runs, no hits, no errors.

"OBSERVER" DEGENDS PRESENT DRESS WHEN COMPARED WITH PAST

BY "OBSERVER"

Did you ever try standing in one spot on any of our up-town streets for half an hour and listen, unobserved, to the conversations that are sure to reach your ear? I have, and really it's worth while

Only this week I heard a number of "good old souls" ripping a younger woman up the back because of her "outlandish" clothes. This incident, and one of those "Backward, Turn Backward" poems which I read just a short time ago, induce me to write this letter.

It seems the guy that wrote that poem was yearning for the good old times, especially the good-old-time girls, the twenty-five-years ago kind that dressed so sensibly, etc. You know that talk. The way he had it doped out they all looked like gentle, modest angels. And the way he scolded the terrible up-to-the-second fashions was something awful.

But sry, I happen to know the guy that got that off, because an aunt of mine wos in the high-school class, and she has a photograph of the buhch. One of the girls in the outfit shows up with a bustle that projects twelve inches to the rear; one has a set of false bangs, one has a switch made up in dizzy mountains on the top of her head, and one has her hair cut short and frizzed out in a cloud—something like they wear in the Fiji Islands. All of them have on hoop skirts that would require considerable skill to sit down in

It was this same crop of angels that bloomed out in the tight waisted effects only five years later. Their next stunt was bloomers, or sometimes "half skirts," for bicycle wear; same girls. remember And it was "stylish" of course, to have two or three perfectly scund faont teeth extracted and gold ones put in their places. Twenty-five years ago, my aunt says, was right in the midst of the whalebene era. Remember those whalebones?

Oh the dear, sweet, simple, "nrtural" girls of twenty-five years ago. They were sure innocent and unsophisticated some.

Whenever an old geezer has to look a millinery bill in the eye he remembers the dames of yesteryear, and he gets the idea that they were different then. He forgets that the flighty fashions were started about six thousand years ago by Mrs. Adam and that there has been something new and fierce, as well as expensive, every season since

My idea is that the fashions are worth the money They always give you something to talk about. Of course, you have to mighty careful sometimes what you say and where you say it, but matters in that respect are improving.

Another compensation is that the fashions go in circles, so if you live long enough you know what to look for In another twenty years I expect to see all the modern peel-tight and sunlight affairs all over again, and that's saying and seeing a great deal. The "turn backward" poems don't interest me a little bit. I have troubles enough right now, without diving into history for them.

Benjamin Franklin on War.

Benjamin Franklin said in 1783: All wars are follies, very expensive and very mischievous ones. In my opinion there never was a good war or a bad peace. When will mankind be convinced and agree to settle their troubles by arbitration?

SOLVING the SERVANT PROBLEM

Mr. Glenfaddle started out about two weeks before Christmas to solve the servant problem.

"The trouble with women," he said to his wife, "is that they don't go at the thing right. This trouble will never be settled until it is settled by diplomacy, and diplomacy is a thing that, I am sorry to say, doesn't come natural to women. Servant girls are only human—that's a thing which is too often forgotten. Treat your girls kindly and they will stand by you. That's the rule I go by in my business affairs. What kind of a time do you suppose I would have with the men in my office if I tried to manage them as a woman manages the help in her kitchen? Why, I'd always have to keep breaking in new people.

"Now let me give you a few pointers. Get something nice for the girl on Christmas—something that you would be glad to have yourself. Most women give their servants a few cheap trinkets that serve no other purpose than to show the girls that they are put away down in the social scale.

"Instead of getting her a ten-cent comb or a new contrivance to scrape the crumbs off the dining-room table, buy her a nice present this year. Give her something she will be proud to show to her friends. Then, you see, they will get to envying her and comparing their own cheap presents with what she got from us, and what'll be the result? She'll conclude that this is a pretty good place to work; she'll see that we give her credit for possessing good taste, and we will have no more trouble over the servant problem for awhile anyway."

Mrs. Glenfaddle decided to take her husband's advice for once. If the solemn truth must be told, she has never become addicted to the habit of doing this. But there seemed to be a few gleams of reason in his argument, and accordingly she decided to make her Emma thrice glad on Christmas morning. The girl had been very patient and faithful for quite a while anyway, and it was no more than right that merit should be rewarded.

Among the things in the box which Emma found on the kitchen table when she went down to get breakfast on the morning of the great day were cloth for a fine new dress, a toilet set for her bureau, a glove box with a pair of gloves in it, and a purse made of seal leather.

The next day when Mr. Glenfaddle got home his wife said:

"Oh, by the way, Arthur, I wish you'd put an ad. in the paper tomorrow. Emma has given me notice that she will leave us a week from Thursday. She has found a place where she can get 25 cents a week more than we are paying her."

Lest They Forget.

Hunt out the little lame girl,
The poor boy who is blind;
Hunt out the weary widow
Who thinks the world unkind;
Search down among the hovels
Where gladness seldom strays,
And teach the doubting people
There still are Christmas days.

You have been busy planning
To spread your gifts afar,
To add your fair love-tokens
Where joys and comforts are,
But have you in your gladness
Bestowed one kindly thought
On those who sit in darkness,
Whose crusts are dearly bought?

Your heart is full of kindness,
You hear the anthems sung
And gaze up at the windows
Where ribboned wreaths are hung;
You've heard the sweet old story
With reverence retold—
But there are hungry children
Where all is dark and cold.

Hunt out the little lame girl,
The poor boy who is blind;
Hunt out the weary widow
Who thinks the world unkind;
Go down among the victims
Of chance and greed and crime
And cause them to remember
That this is Christmas time.

Getting the Particulars.

"Oh, have you seen your Christmas present to me, dear?"

"No," he answered, "what did I give you?"

"This beautiful cabinet for the dining-room."

"It's beautiful, isn't it? How much did I pay for it?"

Big Money in Sorghum Production in Iowa

A news dispatch bore the intelligence last fall that a man in one Iowa city had disposed of 900 gallons of sorghum at 75 cents per gallon. He was sorry he had not the facilities for making 10,000 gallons. He says he could have disposed of ten times his output. Requests came to him for shipments from parties as far west as Idaho, but he was compelled to disregard them.

This man insists there is money in sorghum. He contends that if he was able to produce 900 gallons during a dry season and make money that he certainly could do even better with favorable climatic conditions.

It is his belief that cane will produce 100 gallons of sorghum per acre under ordinary conditions, and will in addition produce 40 bushels of seed which can be sold for $1.15 per hundred pounds. He says the average income would thus be about $100 per acre which is $85 net.

The main objection to cane has been that it is a ground robber, but this individual says emphatically "Corn following cane does better than corn on any other ground."

He would have sorghum mills in every township and he claims it would be a paying investment.

Four Acres Produced $300 Worth of Winter Apples

In the fall of 1913, Mr. B. W. Barnes a farmer living near West Liberty harvested and sold $300 worth of good winter apples from an orchard of about four acres, 1-3 of which is set to summer and fall varieties. Mr. Barnes sprayed this orchard once, using lead arsenate and lime sulphur according to the formula prescribed by the State Department at Ames. This was put on just when the petals had fallen from the blossoms. Mr. Barnes says that he does not think one spraying is sufficient to produce the best results, but he is more than pleased with his first attempt and will spray more thoroughly this season.

MR. PIANO PURCHASER, you have a chance of a lifetime before you now. One of the world's largest piano manufacturing concerns are behind this sale as they are overstocked owing to their export trade being completely paralyzed on account of the war. The instruments are made by old, reliable manufacturers who give a liberal written guarantee with each instrument. They are of a high grade. We are not allowed to mention the names in our advertisements owing to the ridiculously low prices we are offering them at. The true art of being agreeable is to appear well pleased with all the company, and rather to seem well entertained with them than to bring entertainment to them. Dangers to the Eye.

Mr Louis Bell, the electrical illuminating expert and Dr F H Verhoeff, an eye specialist, have published in Science their opinion that the alleged dangers to the eye from ultraviolet or actinic rays, but these have ous artificial lights amount to nothing at all They admit that there have been many 'sensational attacks" upon modern illuminants as dangerous by reason of injurious effects of ultraviolet or actinic rays, but these have "entirely neglected any quantitative relation between the radiation and its supposed pathological effects" Very little of these rays can penetrate the cornea, and the crystalline lens cuts off completely those that straggle through toward the retina. Protective glasses are useful only, they conclude, in cutting off dazzling lights and undue heat

"How do you explain the address on the card, Mr. Goldberger?" I asked.

"My theory is that this fellow really had some business with Mr. Vantine; probably he wanted to borrow some money, or asy for help: and then, while he was waitin, he suddenly gave the thing up and killed himself. The address has no bearing whatever, that I can see, on the question of suicide. And I'll say this, Mr. Lester, if this isn't suicide, it's the strangest case I ever had anything to do with."

"Yes," I agreed, "if it isn't suicide, we come to a blank wall right away."

"That's it," and Goldberger nodded emphatically. "Here's the ambulance," he added, as the bell rang.

The bearers entered with the stretcher, placed the body on it, and carried it away. Goldberger paused to gather up the articles he had taken from the dead man's pockets.

"You gentlemen will have to give your testimony at the inquest," he said. "So will Parks and Rogers. It will be day after tomorrow, probably at 10 o'clock, but I'll notify you of the hour."

"Very well," I said; "we'll be there," and Goldberger bade us good bye, and left the house. "And now," I added, to Vantine, "I must be getting back to the office. They'll be asking the police to look for me next. Man alive'" and I glanced at my watch, "it's after 4 o'clock."

"Too late for the office" said Vantine. "Better come upstairs and have a drink. Besides, I want to talk with you."

"At least, I'll let them know I'm still alive," I said, and I called up the office and allayed any anxiety that may have been felt there concerning me. I must admit that it did not seem acute.

"I feel the need of a bracer after all this excitement," Vantine remarked, as he opened the cellaret. "Help yourself. I dare say you're used to this sort of thing—"

"Finding dead men lying around?" I queried with a smile "No—it's not so common as you seem to think."

'Tell me, Lester," and he looked at me earnestly, "do you think that poor devil came in here just to get a chance to kill himself quietly?"

"No I don't," I said.

"Then what did he come in for?"

"I think Goldberger's theory a pretty good one—that he had heard of you as a generous fellow and came in here to ask help, and while he was waiting suddenly gave it up—

"And killed himself?' Vantine completed

I hesitated I was astonished to find, at the back of my mind, a growing doubt

"See here, Lester," Vantine demanded 'if he didn't kill himself, what happened to him?"

"Heaven only knows," I answered, in despair "I've been asking myself the same question, without finding a reasonable answere to it As I said to Goldberger, it's a blank wall. But if anybody can see through it, Jim Godfrey can"

Vantine seemed deeply perturbed. He took a turn or two up and down the room then stopped in front of me and looked me earnestly in the eye.

"Tell me Lester," he sid, "do you believe that theory of Godfrey's—that that insignificant wound on the hand caused death?"

"It seem absurd doesn't it? But Godfrey is a sort of genius at divining such things.'

"Then you do believe it?"

Is asked myself the same question before I answered.

"Yes, I do," I said, finally

Vantine walked up and down the room again, his eyes on the floor, his brows contracted.

"Lester," he said, at last, "I have a queer feeling that the business which brought this man here in some way concerned the Boule cabinet I was telling you about. Perhaps it belonged to him."

"Hardly," I protested, recalling his shabby appearance.

"At any rate, I remember, as I was looking at his card, that some such thought occurred to me. It was for that reason I told Parks to ask him to wait."

"It's possible, of course," I admitted. "But that wouldn't explain his excitement. And that reminds me," I added, "I haven't sent off that cable."

"Any time tonight will do. It will be delivered in the morning. But you haven't seen the cabinet yet. Come down and look at it."

He led the way down the stair. Parks met us in the lower hall.

"There's a delegation of reporters outside, sir," he said. "They say they've got to see you."

Vantine made a movement of impatience.

"Tell them," he said, " that I positively refuse to see them or to allow my servants to see them. Let them get their information from the police."

"Very well, sir," said Parks, and turned away grinning.

Vantine passed on through the anteroom in which we had found the body of the unfortunate Frenchman, and into the room beyond. Five or six pieces of furniture, evidently just unpacked, stood there, but, ignorant as I am of such things, he did not have to point out to me the Boule cabinet It dominated the room, much as Madame de Montespan, no doubt, dominated the court at Versailles.

I looked at it for some moments, for it was certainly a beautiful piece of work, with a wealth of inlay and incrustation little short of marvelous. But I may as well say here that I never really appreciated it. The florid style of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Louis is not at all to my taste; and I am too little of a connoisseur to admire a beauty which has no personal appeal for me. So I am afraid that Vantine found me a little cold.

Certainly there was nothing cold about the way he regarded it. His eye gleamed with a strange fire as he looked at it; he ran his fingers over the inlay with a touch almost reverent; he pulled out for me the little drawers with much the same air that another friend of mine takes down his Kilmarnock Burns from his bookshelves; he pointed out to me the grace of its curves in the same tone that one uses to discuss the masterpiece of a great artist. And then, finding no echo to his enthusiasm, he suddenly stopped.

"You don't seem to care for it," he said, looking at me.

"That's my fault and not the fault of the cabinet," I pointed out. "I'm not educated up to it; I'm too little of an artist, perhaps."

He was flushed, as a man might be should another make a disparaging remark about his wife, and he led the way from the room at once.

"Remember, Lester," he said, a little sternly, pausing with his hand on the front door, "there is to be no foolishness about securing that cabinet for me. Don't let it get away. I'm in deadly earnest."

"I won't let it get away," I promised. "Perhaps it's just as well I'm not overenthusiastic about it."

"Let me know as soon as you have any news," he said, and opened the door for me.

I had intended walking home, but as I turned up the avenue, I met sweeping down it a flood of girls just released from the workshops of the neighborhood. I struggled against it for a few moments, then gave it up, hailed a cab, and settled back against the cushions with a sigh of relief. I was glad to be out of Vantine's house; something there oppressed me and left me ill at ease. Was Vantine quite normal, I wondered? Could any man be normal who was willing to pay a hundred thousand dollars for a piece of furniture? Especially a man who could not afford such extravagance? I knew the size of Vantine's fortune; it was large, but a hundred thousand dollars represented more than a year's income. And then I smiled to myself. Of course Vantine had been merely jesting when he named that limit. The cabinet could be bought for a tenth of it, at the most. And, still smiling, I left the cab, paid the driver, and mounted to my rooms.

CHAPTER IV.

THE THUNDERBOLT.

It was about 8 o'clock that evening that Godfrey tapped at my door, and when I let him in, I could tell by the way his eyes were shining that he had some news.

"I can't stay long," he said. "I've got to get down to the office and put the finishing touches on that story," but nevertheless he took the cigar I proffered him and sank into the chair opposite my own.

I knew Godfrey, so I waited patiently until the cigar was going nicely, then—

"Well?" I asked.

"It's like old times, isn't it, Lester?" and he smiled across at me. "How many conferences have we had in this room? How many of your cigars have I made away with?"

"Not half enough recently," I said. "You haven't been here for months."

"I'm sure to drift back, sooner or later, because you seem to have a knack of getting in on the interesting cases. And I want to say this, Lester that of all I ever had, not one has promised better than this one does. If it only keeps up—but one mustn't expect too much"

"You've been working on it, of course?"

"I haven't been idle, and just now I'm feeling rather pleased with myself. The coroner's physician finished his postmortem half an hour or so ago."

"Well?" I said again.

"The stomach was absolutely normal. It showed no trace of poison of any kind."

He stretched himself, lay back in his chair, sent a smoke ring circling toward the ceiling and watched it, smiling absently.

'Rather a facer for our friend, Goldberger," he added after a minute.

"What's the matter with Goldberger? He seemed rather peeved with you this afternoon."

"No wonder He's Grady's man and we're after Grady Grady isn't fit to head the detective bureau—he got the job through his pull with Tammany—he's stupid, and I suspect he's crooked. The Record says he has to go."

"So, of course, he will go," I commented, smiling.

"He certainly will," assented Godfrey seriously, "and that before long. But meanwhile it's a little difficult for me, cause his people don't know which way to jump. Once he's out, everything will be serene again."

I wasn't interested in Grady, so I came back to the case in hand.

"Look here, Godfrey," I said, "if it wasn't poison, what was it?"

"But it was poison."

"Inserted at the hand?"

He nodded.

"Goldberger says there's no poison known which could be used that way and which would act so quickly."

"Goldberger is right in that," agreed Godfrey; "but there's a poison unknown that will—because it did."

"It wasn't a snake bite?"

"Oh, no, snake poison wouldn't kill a man that quickly—not even a fer-de-lance That fellow practically dropped where he was struck."

"Then what was it?"

Godfrey was sitting erect again. He was not smiling now His face was very stern

"That is what I am going to find out, Lester," he said, "that is the problem I've set myself to solve—and it's a pretty one There is one thing certain—that fellow was killed by some agency outside himself In some way, a drop or two of poison was introduced into his blood by an instrument something like a hypodermic needle, and that poison was so powerful that almost instantly it caused paralysis of the heart. After all, that isn't so remarkable as it might seem. The blood in the veins of the hand would be carried back to the heart in four or five seconds."

"But you've already said there's no poison so powerful as that."

"I said we didn't know of any. I wouldn't be so sure that Catherine de Medici didn't."

"What his Catherine de Medici to do with it?"

"Nothing—except what has been done may always be done again. Those old stories are, no doubt, exaggerated; but it seems fairly certain that the queen of Navarre was killed with a pair of poisoned gloves, the Duc d'Anjou with the scent of a poisoned rose and the Prince de Porcian with the smoke of a poisoned lamp. This case isn't as extraordinary as those."

"No," I agreed, and fell silent, shivering a little, for there is something horrible and revolting about the poisoner.

"After all," went on Godfrey, at last, "there is one thing that neither you nor I nor any reasonable man can believe, and that is that this Frenchman came from heaven knows where—from Paris, perhaps—with Vantine's address in his pocket, and hunted up the house and made his way into it simply to kill himself there. He had some other object; and he met his death while trying to accomplish it."

"Have you found out who he is"

"No; he's not registered at any of the hotels; the French consul never [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

BEEFSTEAK SOON TO BE A RARE TABLE DELICACY

Livestock Men Say Prohibitive Price of Beef is Only Start On Long Journey Upward—Cattle Production Not Keeping Pace With Increase of Nation's Population—Packers Make Marmalade.

From the New York Herald.

It's goodby to beefsteak as a national dish.

Good cattle are bringing $10 a hundredweight on the hoof. That is everyday market history that he who runs may read.

Cattle on the hoof will be selling for $11 before October has passed. Before Christmas $12 will be paid for them, but the real scarcity will not be felt until 1915. That is a prophecy uttered by live stock commission men in Chicago and in other Western market centers.

For every additional cent a pound paid for beef cattle on the hoof the retail price for dressed beef advances from 3 to 6 cents, according to cuts and quality. With live hogs on a 9-cent basis and better, the consumer will find no comfort in turning to pork ribs, bacon or ham. Calves already are on a $11 plane and going up. Veal is, of course, forbidden to all but the few who do not haggle over prices.

Mutton and veal stew are that quarter lies temporary hope, but the flocks of sheep are not what they used to be, human population considered, in the reckoning.

From Washington the department of agriculture flashes the one word of cheer. It forecasts a condition of relief for the consumer next year—in a replenished supply of cattle at home. Commission men here say the department experts are wrong. Packers would like to believe the prediction is well founded, but they don't. Cattle men in the west and northwest, doing some forecasting on their own account, say the Washington prophets will be confounded by unwelcome facts.

Farmers Eschew It.

Beef for the table in this country never will be materially cheaper than it is today, and it is likely to be more costly by far if the preponderance of western expert judgment is reliable. There is cumulative evidence that the day of the beefsteak is fast passing.

Farmers in this middle western country have more money, more comforts, more conveniences and more luxuries than they ever had before, but they are cutting out beefsteak entirely for their own use. They are using it less and less as a chef d'ouvre for dinner and supper—dinner at noon and supper at 6.

Because meat animals are decreasing in this country the character of the great Chicago packing plants is changing in a way that would astonish the visitor who has not seen them for 10 years. The packers are turning to the preservation of fruits and the manufacture of fruit products. At "the yards" one may now spend hours inspecting sample of jellies, jams, marmalades, preserves, grape juice and dozens of other attractive commodities that bear not the slightest relation to cattle or to dressed meats. This metamorphosis is likely to continue until Chicago loses its old sobriquet of the "pig sticking town" and become known to the world as the marmalade city.

Chicago packers declared that their meat business is being conducted today at a loss and that they operate their plants because, the overhead charges being heavy, the loss caused by idleness would be so much greater. This statement may be taken with a grain of salt, but the extensive turning to new lines of endeavor would seem to indicate that the millions of surplus are not piling up as they did in the old days for the meat barons.

Argentine Help Small.

It is generally agreed that the new tariff law, which admits dressed meats free of duty has brought little relief to the consumer unless it be in New York and adjacent cities, where Argentine beef is available. New York may be paying as much as ever for its beef, but opinion out here is that if it did not have the Argentine product as a part of its supply beef prices in the metropolis would be still higher than they are. On the same line of reasoning it would follow that with New York and the east not drawing so heavily on western American supplies, some benefit is reflected back to the consumer in this part of the country. This help is so small, however, that it is scarcely appreciable.

Canada is to date of little aid to the consumer on this side of the line. The Underwood tariff act has not stimulated beef or cattle imports from that quarter. The reason for its failure to do so is said to be that Toronto and Montreal are scurrying into the back country of the provinces to obtain enough raw material to supply the home markets with dressed product. Commission men in Chicago have ceased to direct their efforts toward Canada. In fact some kinds of cattle bring more in the Toronto livestock markets than they would be worth to Chicago or Buffalo, northfest Canada is too deeply engrossed in wheat raising to give attention to cattle, and thus aid in building up the supply of animals on the hoof for the killers of this country.

Mexico Negligible Factor.

Mexico is a negligible factor, due to the fact that the war has demoralized business and decimated the cattle herds. It will take years to re-establish the livestock industry in the republic to the south on a basis that would be of material interest to the United States.

Even Argentine, according to representatives of local packers, has 3,000,000 fewer cattle than it had four or five years ago. Mr. Arthur Meeker, the leading figure in the business of Armour & Co., next to Mr. J. Ogden Armour, says the price of beef is high in the Argentine republic and that with so few ships engaged in the meat carrying business, as is the case at present, there is small reason to look for any early and material assistance from that country.

Texas, once a great source of cattle supply, is said by men who ought to know to be producing 40 per cent fewer beef animals than it raised a few years ago. The Texas livestock business lapsed with the cutting up of large ranches and with greater attention to diversified farming. Observers of the cattle industry say that the state could not bring its beef supplies up to the standard of a decade ago in fewer than 10 years and then only by a careful conservation of heifers for breeding purposes. There was great rejoicing among breeders of fine cattle a few years ago when the passing of the typical Texas steer, with the long horns, was announced. Commission men would welcome some of that cattle clan now if it were available.

Some abnormal things are happening now and then in the western cattle business. The law of economics is that beef animals should be worth more in Chicago than in Kansas City. This law has been contravened lately—not all the time, but on occasion. Iowa live stock gravitates naturally to the Chicago markets for the best of trade reasons, but it has actually happened within the last month that Chicago commission men, playing fair with their Hawkeye customers, have advised them to ship their cattle to Kansas City because prices there were better than prices in Chicago. And Denver has been paying more for grass steers than the animals would be worth to the trade in either Chicago or Kansas City. Another circumstance, unusual but not so striking, is that hogs have commanded better prices at times in Fort Worth, Tex., than in Chicago.

Six Principal Markets.

In the six principal markets of the west—Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis, St. Joseph and Sioux City—there is a shortage of approximately 460,000 head of cattle since January 1, compared with the receipts for the same period in 1913. Arrivals at every market have slumped, and the killing centers beyond the Mississippi have suffered more than those west of the river. Kansas City is short about 160,000 head. The decrease is attributed largely to the drought in the southwest last summer. Kansas City traders are quite sure corn fed cattle will command $11 a hundredweight in their local market before the end of September.

Stock men say the department of agriculture bases its forecast of relief on false premises, taking it for granted, apparently, that the experience of 1912 will be repeated. Relief then came with the availability of corn for feeding purposes, but the difficulty now is more fundamental, according to private opinion, in that the cattle are lacking decidedly in numbers. A Denver authority, disputing the Washington optimists, predicts that cattle scarcity will reach an acute stage next year.

Corn is about 6 cents a bushel higher now that it was at this season last year. Dry pastures in some parts have resulted in the sending of half fat steers to market. Fattening on corn at present in an expensive process, and there does not seem to be any prospect that corn prices will drop materially.

Values Spurred.

Current values for beef cattle have spurred producers all over the country to save their calves and mature them into the heavy steer class. While that policy makes veal scarce and costly, it is welcomed as the right preliminary campaign to re-establish the old fashioned cattle business. The conservation of calves—male and female—will not, in the view of careful observers, be more influential than in keeping prices somewhere near the present level. Recent remarkable advance in the market value of western lands is given as another reason why the future of the cattle industry does not appear rosy from the consumer's standpoint.

Some cattle men of the northwest say the government could do a vast deal to restore the old conditions and to stimulate production of beef and mutton if it would make the broad expanse of federal land available for grazing purposes. They contend that the Washington authorities are too much obsessed by dry farming and irrigation ideas and too little impressed with what they could contribute, if they would, toward a rehabilitation of the cattle business.

Mr. Meeker, of Armour & Co., says the people are now learning, as the packers have contended, that the price of meats is a purely economic question, governed solely by the law of supply and demand. Producers answer that if that had been the exact truth in the hey-day of the "beef trust," the cattle industry would be on a much more satisfactory basis today than it is.

Now there is a common fear, shared by packers, producers, shippers and commission men, that the beef steak is to be denied the American people.

What a Cold Can Do

Many a fatal case of kidney disease starts from a simple cold or cough. Congestion settles and weakens the kidneys. Cold poisons quickly damage the kidneys and cause backache, rheumatic pains, headaches and kidney disorders.

When doctoring a cold, think of the kidneys. Drink water freely to help flush out the poisons. Take Doan's Kidney Pills to relieve congestion of the kidneys, give them a hearty assist, and take plenty of rest. Nature will make the cure. Doan's Kidney Pills are used with success and are publicly recommended all over the civilized world.

Heavy Pasturing Condemned.

Heavy pasturing of alfalfa is not advised. The number of animals per acre should be so regulated that two or three small cuttings of hay may be taken from the field. This is necessary to insure tender green growth for grazing. When little buds begin to shoot at the base of the stalk the alfalfa should be cut. In a very few days a fresh new growth makes its appearance. Overpasturing, without occasional cutting, also tends to injure the crowns of the plant and eventually destroys the stand.

A Distinction.

The heathen in his blindness bowed down to wood and stone.

"For shame!" cried the children of light, and shuddered ostentatiously.

Whereupon the heathen felt thoughtful. "Are wood and stone so much worse than a bit of bunting dyed in divers colors?" he queried.

Tramp Discovers Identity By Letter In Old Bible

A strange but touching story comes to the TIMES of the reuniting of a father and daughter after a separation of eighteen years by means of a letter found in an old bible. The father who for years had led the life of a common tramp, made the discovery after having been forced by a scoundrel to claim the girl as his own daughter without knowing the facts in the case. The foster parents of the young lady, who loved her very dearly, and had reared her tenderly, were overjoyed to take her in thier home again while the father, stricken with remorse and shame, gave up his tramp life and became a man of wealth influence. The story, which is no stranger than many happenings in our own community, will be told in full at the Klemme opera house on Tuesday evening, October 27th, when 'The Convict's Daughter" will be presented by capable company of seven people, with refined specialties between acts New special scenery. Prices 25 and 35c; reserved seats 50 cents at State Savings Bank

THE CLOUDS ROLLED BY.

Business is improving. Men are being hired. It isn't so hard as it was to borrow money—on good security.

Ever see an ice jam in the spring? At first it looks as if it couldn't possibly be budged. Even dynamite doesn't faze it. But by and by the warm sun gets in its work; and then folks worry lest the jam should move too quickly and do as much damage by going as by staying. We don't say that the business problem is like an ice jam in every particular, but there are resemblances. What saves the down country from being flooded by the spring thaw is that the melt by day is checked a little by the freeze at night. The derangement of the world's credit machinery, the conservativeness of bankers and the war uncertanties now guarantee us against a flood of speculation.

But to keep things moving in the right direction and at the proper pace, we need more sunshine It is a time for courage, confidence optimism. Not splashes, not splurges, not yet pinch-penny caution, but manly gumption, grit and go-ahead. Still superior to war news as a topic of interest in the American home is where good values can be found in buying for home necessities at fair prices.

We can't let eating and living lag until Europe moves for peace. The ordinary processes must go on—they are going on but slightly affected, save as we have allowed ourselves to be scared before wo are hurt.

Now that this great nation is regaining its wind and its poise, turn on more sunshine—give hope a shove.

THE RURAL SCHOOL

Why halt ye between two opinions? It is no longer debatable whether it pays to educate country children, yet some will keep their boys out of school until after the corn and cotton are picked, and then the classes are so far advanced in their work the delinquent pupils can hardly be expected to catch up. They are handicapped worse than a horse that is set back in the start of a race.

It is just like you who do not read the papers every day and then try to understand what the European war is all about. Events happen so fast that it takes constant reading to become able to read intelligently. So the boys who pick corn until late in the school year lose interest in the work because they have not had all that leads up to the lessons that confront them when they do enter.

Better hire help if possible than keep children out of school. Education is the one and only thing that will endure, and is the one inheritance they have a right to demand of their parents. You may give them a fortune—and it is something easily lost or squandered. You may give them a good name—it is a thing they can drag into the dust by their acts. You may give them an education—and through poverty and wealth, through sickness and health, through fame and disgrace, education is the one thing they cannot lose.

If the rural school which you pay taxes for, and which your children patronize, is not what it should be, then start a movement to better it. Study the consolidated school question in your club, and grange meetings. No club or grange in your section? This is the reason then that the school is so poor. Organize a club and discuss things worth while. The rural school is a question worth while.—Successful Farming.

WHAT'S THE USE?

Weep and you're called a baby;
Laugh and you're called a fool;
Yield and you're called a coward,
Stand and you're called a mule,
Smile and they call you silly,
Frown and they'll call you gruff,
Put on a front like a millionaire,
And some guy calls you bluff.

COSSON SAYS BETTER LAW ENFORCEMENT IS ONE NEED OF TIMES

Suggests Changes In Method of Handling Criminals—Would Simplify System.

Marshalltown, Ia., Oct. 17.—Greater certainty of punishment for crime and reforms in the handling of criminals are the important factors necessary to stamping out lawlessness in America, declared Attorney General George Cosson in an address on "Establishing Justice," given at a banquet under the auspices of the Y M C A. in this city last night.

Although Iowa has made greater advancement in reforms than other states of the union, there are many changes in the laws required before permanent progress can be made, he said To make sure that criminals shall be punished a better method of apprehending offenders is needed, he asserts

Berlin (via London), Oct 15—Colonel Von Reuter, who was commander of the Zabern regiment last year when trouble broke out between the townspeople and the military, has been awarded the iron cross of the first class for gallant conduct on the field.

Colonel Von Reuter recently was reported to have been in an engagement near Dixmuyde:

WORLD SUPPLY OF WHEAT IS SHORT

American Crop Larger While Most European Countries Report Smaller Yield Than Last Year.

Washington Oct 19 - The world wheat crop this year probably will be less than in 1913 and 1912 although the United States has had a record-breaking wheat harvest The statistics announced today by the department of agriculture, indicate that the crops of all nations aggregated approximately, 3,741,108,000 bushels, against 4,125,310,000 in 1913, and 3 791 875,000 bushels in 1912

"In Europe agricultural conditions, in most countries this season, have been favorable for only moderate yields the department announced "It is practically certain that the present shortage of this season's European yield will be magnified by the complete returns Harvests were pretty well over before or soon after, hostilities began and the grain is believed to have been saved in generally good condition except in territory actually occupied by the contending armies

Great Britain according to agricultural officials reports a crop several million bushels larger than any recent one In France the official estimate of production has not appeared but it is believed the quantity probably will exceed that of last year Italy reports a short yield, and Spain an increase over last year From Germany and Austria no intimation of the grain harvest is available but in Hungary a deficiency is indicated Reports from Rumania and the Balkan states, suggesting short yields, and official cables place the harvest in 73 governments of European and Asiatic Russia at 183 000 000 bushels below the extraordinarily large crop there last year

Italy, Great Britain Spain, Hungary and Russia, normally producing more than two-thirds of the European wheat show this year 237,000,000 bushels less than last year but 34,000,000 bushels more than 1912 Great Britain's total is 6,000,000 bushels more than other while Russia will have 183,000 000 bushels less than a year ago

Decrease in production in other European countries probably will make their aggregate approximate 700 000 000 bushels

The five principal non-European wheat producing countries the United States Canada Argentina British India and Australia which grow all the wheat produced outside of Europe, expecting an export total of from 200 000 000 to 300 000 000 bushels officially report 1 486 606 000 bushels or 60 000 000 bushels less than last year but 20 000 000 bushels more than in 1912 The decrease was due wholly to shortages in Canada Argentina and British India their aggregate output being 300 000 000 bushels less than last year The combined output of the United States and Australia exceeded last year by 110 000 000 bushels

Of the 892 000 000 bushels record crop harvested in the United States, 635 000 000 bushels it is estimated will be required for food in this country, and 77 000 000 bushels for seeding This will leave 290,000 000 bushels available for exportation The largest quantity ever exported from the United States heretofore was 237 000 000 bushels in 1909 Last year 141 000 000 bushels were exported

The scotfall of Pittsburg as determined from careful measurements during the last year, ranges from 595 to 1 950 tons a square mile per annum. The destructive possibilities of this immense deposit may be illustrated by stating that if an equal amount of lampblack were ground with oil so as to form black paint it would cover from 17 to 57 square miles with two coats. Statistics of scotfall at certain places in Great Britain are as follows. Industrial section of Leeds, 529 tons centre of London 426 tons Glasgow 820 tons.

LIFE TERMER MUR[illegible] TO ESCAPE P[illegible]SO

One Guard and Convicts Accomplice Die In Fight—Makes His Escape

Folsom, Cal., Oct 19 [illegible] most daring outbreaks ever Capt. J. B. Drury, of the night [illegible] and Convict George Phelps were killed; Guards Mayer and [illegible] wounded, and a life termer from [illegible] county, named Creek, escaped The outbreak occurred at 8 30 night

The two convicts, who were mates, crouched silently behind [illegible] ner gate in the Folsom [illegible] night, waiting for the change of guards which would apprise them that the guard of the night watch had opened the first bar in their dash for liberty Phelps was sentenced to 20 years from Sacramento county for one of the most daring robberies ever committed in that city, when, in 1911 he held up 15 men in a saloon The second convict was a Tulare murderer named Creek, sentenced to a life term for murder

The gate opened, and Captain Drury stepped in one of the convicts raised a heavy bludgeon and struck him down with all his might, knocked the captain to the floor and the other pounced upon him, snatching his keys and grabbed his two guns Silently they started across the prison yard and crept upon Guard Crutchfield from behind Again the bludgeon again was raised, but some instinct warned the guard and he moved in time to miss the full force of the blow In a moment several shots rang out on the still night air and convict Phelps lay dead in the prison yard, his accomplice fled toward the stone quarry and men streamed out from the prison in pursuit, while the inhabitants of the great grim stone prison moved restlessly about, wondering if Creek was getting away, hoping against hope for a chance to make the break

GUARDING AGAINST EGYPTIAN UPRISIN[illegible]

Khedive, Whose Sympathies Are With Turkey, Cannot Leave Constantinople

London Oct 19 – That the Khedive of Egypt who is now in Constantinople has been forbidden by the British government to return to Egypt for the present, is a belief current among Englishmen who are in touch with Egyptian affairs

The khedive was in Constantinople visiting the sultan when the attempt began and was fired on and slightly wounded by an Egyptian politician The loyalty of the khedive to British rule is strongly questioned by Anglo-Egyptians. His closest associates are members of the pro-Turkish party which is under German influence

With Lord Kitchener absent from Egypt and most of the regular troops garrison withdrawn for service in France, the opportunity for revolutionary outbreaks is an unusual one Under these circumstances, it is possible that Great Britain may use pressure to induce the khedive to prolong his visit in Constantinople until the close of the war or until events take a turn which would insure British success and discourage native plottings in Egypt

There are 15 000 British territorials in the garrisons of Egypt now, which have replaced the regular troops sent to France Other territorial regiments have been sent to India in exchange for regulars to Europe.

Gibraltar and other British possessions are now guarded by territorials These regiments may be sent to the front in their turn, after they have undergone severe training and be replaced by some of the new recruits now being broken in at English camps

MEXICAN PEACE GROUP TO CALL ON ZAPAT[illegible]

This information was reported to the state department today from its agent at Aguas Callentes. The committee is expected to meet Zapata in Cuernavaca tomorrow

Administration officials regarded the move as evidence of the firm purpose of the convention to secure co-operation of all factions for the resoration of peace.

ENGLAND BIG BORROWER BUT GETS CHEAP RAT[illegible]

London, Oct. 19.—The new issue of treasury notes by the government this week makes the fourth sum of $75,000 000 since the war began and indicates that the conflict is costing between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 sterling weekly The war taxes up to date are $175,000 000 and another $75,000,000 is required

At the present moment the government is able to borrow on moderate terms because of the glut of money in the financial district. That last batch of treasury notes was issued at less than 3½ per cent. but these are short term notes and must be repaid within six months

The presence of Uhlans has been reported recently within 40 miles of Calais, but a glance at the map in the region of the cavalry clashes of the last few days, which for a time extended as far west as Hazebrouck, shows that, notwithstanding the German claims of victories the allies have made steady progress, Laventine being considerably east of the town mentioned

DOES "POWER" MEAN "MIGHT" OR "RIGHT?"

John Grier Hibben Says America Must Uphold Standard of Christian Contender.

New York, Oct. 17.—President John Grier Hibbin, of Princeton, who was in Europe late in July, speaking at a laymen's efficiency convention in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, last night declared that the war was affecting the life of every person in America, more vitally than any other influence ever encountered.

"The problem we Americans face in passing judgment on this war, "said Dr Hibben, "is the definition of the word 'power.' We must decide whether it means 'right,' as Christians have preached for 2,000 years, or whether it means merely 'might.'

"We are fortunate in that a call has not come to us for men who know how to die Almost lone we are safe from war's actual conflict yet almost alone we hold to the standard today that right and not might makes the greater strength."

COSSON SAYS BETTER LAW ENFORCEMENT IS ONE NEED OF TIMES

Suggests Changes In Method of Handling Criminals—Would Simplify System.

Marshalltown, Ia., Oct. 17.—Greater certainty of punishment for crime and reforms in the handling of criminals are the important factors necessary to stamping out lawlessness in America, declared Attorney General George Cosson in an address on "Establishing Justice," given at a banquet under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. in this city last night.

Although Iowa has made greater advancement in reforms than other states of the union, there are many changes in the laws required before permanent progress can be made he said. To make sure that criminals shall be punished a better method of apprehending offenders is needed, he asserts.

Recommendations made by the attorney general are:

Establishment of state police under control of the governor or department of justice.

Greater powers to district judges in criminal trials to further justice.

Deny reversals or new trials unless the whole record shows substantial rights of defendant to have been prejudiced.

Simplify criminal procedure. Abolish jail system and make minimum sentence 30 days at productive labor.

Establish district custodial farms where prisoners shall be employed at wages that they may support their families.

Support no man for political office who does not have a respect for the law and its enforcement.

In dealing with crime Mr Cosson said that it is necessary to discard kid glove sociology and parlor economics and get down to real service.

ROCK ISLAND POOR BOOSTER

What's the matter with the Rock Island? The city council have been after them for over two years to fix up the sidewalk and crossing in the north part of town but have never been able as yet to secure any satisfaction Time after time, Agent Mitchell has asked them to install electric lights in the depot and every time they put him off. It seems queer that they would refuse to grant these small matters. If their business was poor at this station it would be a different matter but their annual business at this station would entitle them to the finest depot and there is no reason why they cannot afford it. There is not any reason why the depot should be a dark old hole when for a small monthly rate it could be well lighted and may prove the means of some unavoidable accident. The railroad commission should be asked to take a hand in the matter.

FOUND OUT.

A Trained Nurse Discovered Its Effect.

No one is in better position to know the value of food and drink than a trained nurse

Speaking of coffee a nurse in Pa. writes "I used to drink strong coffee myself, and suffered greatly from headaches and indigestion

"While on a visit to my brothers I had a good chance to try Postum for they drank it altogether in place of coffee After using Postum two weeks I found I was much benefited and finally my headaches disappeared and also the indigestion

"Naturally I have since used Postum among my patients, and have noticed a marked benefit where coffee has been left off and Postum used

"I observe a curious fact about Postum when used by mothers. It greatly helps the flow of milk in cases where coffee is inclined to dry it up, and where tea causes nervousness.

"I find trouble in getting servants to make Postum properly. But when it is prepared according to directions on package and served hot with cream, it is certainly a delicious beverage."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 20c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, made a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet

BY

BURTON E. STEVENSON

Copyright, 1913, by Burton E. Stevenson.

(CHAPTER IV.—Continued.)

"I'll show you, sir" he said, and ran up the steps, along the hall, to the door of the ant room where we had found the Frenchman's body. "In there sir" he sobbed "In there'" and clung to the wall as I opened the door and stepped inside

The room was ablaze with light, and for an instant my eyes were so dazzled that I could distinguish nothing. Dimly I saw Godfrey spring forward and drop to his knees.

Then my eyes cleared, and I saw, on the very spot where d'Aurelle had died, another body—or was it the same, brought back that the tragedy of the afternoon might, in some mysterious way, be reenacted?

I remember bending over and peering into the face—

It was the face of Philip Vantine.

A minute must have passed as I stood there dazed and shaken. I was conscious in a way that Godfrey was examining him Then I heard his voice.

'He's dead' he said

Then there was an instant's silence.

Lester look here" cried Godfrey's voice, sharp insistent 'For God's sake look here

Godfrey was kneeling there holding something toward me

Look here' he cried again

It was the dead man's hand he was holding the right hand a swollen and discolored hand And on the back of it just above the knuckles, were two tiny wounds, from which a few drops of blood trickled

And as I started at this ghastly sight, I was able to believe my eyes I heard a choking voice behind me, saying over and over again

I was that woman done it' It was that woman done it' Damn her' It was that woman done it'

CHAPTER V.

GRADY TAKES A HAND.

I have no very clear remembrance of what happened after that. The shock was so great that I had just strength enough to totter to a chair and drop into it and sit there staring vaguely at the dark splotch on the carpet I told myself that I was the victim of a horrible nightmare, that all this was the result of overwrought nerves and I should wake presently No doubt I had been working too hard I needed a vacation—well I would take it • •

At all the time I knew that it was not a nightmare, but grim reality, that Philip Vantine was dead—killed by a woman Who had told me that? And then I remembered the sobbing voice • • •

Two or three persons came into the room—Parks and the other servants, I suppose I heard Godfrey's voice giving orders, and finally someone held a glass to my lips and commanded me to drink I did so mechanically, coughed spluttered, was conscious of a grateful warmth, and drank eagerly again And then I saw Godfrey standing over me Feel better" he asked.

I nodded

"I don't wonder it knocked you out' he went on 'I'm feeling shaky myself I had them call Vantine's physician—but he can't do anything"

"He's dead then?" I murmured, my eyes on that dark and crumpled object which had been Philip Vantine

Yes just like the other"

Then I remembered, and I caught his arm and drew him down to me

Godfrey," I whispered, "whose voice was it or did I dream it—something about a woman?"

You didn't dream it—it was Rogers—he's almost hysterical We'll get the story as soon as he quiets down."

Someone called him from the door, and he turned away, leaving men staring blankly at nothing So there had been a woman in Vantine's life' Perhaps that was why he had never married What ugly skeleton was to be dragged from its closet?

But if a woman killed Vantine, the same woman also killed d'Aurelle. Where was her hiding place? From what ambush did she strike?

I glanced about the room, as a tremor of horror seized me I arose, shaking, from the chair and groped my way toward the door Godfrey heard me coming swung around, and, with one glance at my face, came to me and caught me by the arms

"What is it, Lester?" he asked

'I can't stand it here," I gasped. "It's too horrible'

"Don't think about it Come out here and have another drink"

He led me to the hall and a second glass of brandy gave me back something of my self-control I was ashamed of my weakness but when I glanced at Godfrey I saw how white his face was.

'Better take a drink yourself," I said

I heard the decanter rattle on the glass

'I don't know when I have been so shaken' he said, setting the glass down empty "It was so gruesome—so unexpected and then Rogers carrying on like a madman Ah, here's the doctor, he added, as the front door opened and Parks showed a man in.

I knew Dr Hughes of course returned his nod and followed him and Godfrey into the ante-room but I had not yet sufficiently recovered to do more than sit and stare at him as he knelt beside the body and assured himself that life had fled Then I heard Godfrey telling him all we knew, while Hughes listened with incredulous face.

"But it's absurd, you know'" he protested when Godfrey had finished "Things like this don't happen here in New York In Florence, perhaps, in the middle ages, but not here in the Twentieth century'"

"I can scarcely believe my own senses,' Godfrey agreed. "But I saw the Frenchman lying here this afternoon, and now here's Vantine.'

"On the same spot?"

"As nearly as I can tell."

"And killed in the same way?"

"Killed in precisely the same way."

Hughes turned back to the body again, and looked long and earnestly at the injured hand.

"What sort of instrument made this wound, would you say, Mr. Godfrey?" he questioned, at last.

"A sharp instrument, with two prongs. My theory is that the prongs are hollow, like a hypodermic needle, and leave a drop or two of poison at the bottom of the wound. You seen, a vein has been cut."

"Yes," Hughes assented. "It would scarcely be possible to pierce the hand here without striking a vein. One of the prongs would be sure to do it."

"That's the reason there are two of them, I fancy."

"But you are, of course, aware that no poison exists which would act so quickly?" Hughes inquired.

Godfrey looked at him strangely.

"You yourself mentioned Florence a moment ago," he said. "You meant, I suppose, that such a poison did, at one time, exist there?"

"Something of the sort, perhaps," agreed Hughes. "The words were purely instinctive, but I suppose some such thought was running through my head."

"Well, the poison that existed in Florence five centuries ago, exists here today. There's the proof of it," and Godfrey pointed to the body.

Hughes drew a deep breath of wonder and horror.

"But what sort of a devilish instrument is it?" he cried, his nerves giving way for an instant, his voice mounting shrilly. "Above all, who wields it?"

He stared about the room, as though half expecting to see some mighty and remorseless arm poised, ready to strike. Then he shook himself together

"I beg pardon," he said, mopping the sweat from his face, "but I'm not used to this sort of thing; and I'm frightened—yes, I really believe I'm frightened," and he laughed, a little unsteady laugh.

"So am I," said Godfrey, "so is Lester, so is everybody. You needn't be ashamed of it."

"What frightens me," went on Hughes, evidently studying his own symptoms "is the mystery of it—there is something supernatural about it—something I can't understand. How does it happen that each of the victims is struck on the right hand? Why not on the left hand? Why the hand at all?"

Godfrey answered with a despairing shrug.

"That is what we've got to find out," he said.

"We shall have to call in the police," suggested Hughes. "Maybe they can solve it"

Godfrey smiled, a little skeptical smiles, quickly suppressed

"At least, they will have to be given the chance," he agreed. "Shall I attend to it?"

"Yes," said Hughes, "and you would better do it right away The sooner they get here the better"

"Very well," assented Godfrey, and left the room

Hughes sat down heavily on the couch near the window and mopped his face again, with shaking hand Death he was accustomed to but death met decently in bed and resulting from some understood cause Death in this horrible and mysterious form shook him, he could not understand it, and his failure to understand appalled him. He was a physician, it was his business to understand and yet here was death in a form as mysterious to him as to the veriest layman It compelled him to pause and take stock of himself—always a disconcerting process to the best of us'

That was a trying half hour Hughes sat on the couch breathing heavily, staring at the floor, perhaps passing his own ignorance in review, perhaps wondering if he had always been right in prescribing this or that As for me I was thinking of my dead friend I remembered Philip Vantine as I had always known him—a kidly, witty, Christian gentleman. I could see his pleasant eyes looking at me in friendship as they had looked a few hours before, I could hear his voice, could feel the clasp of his hand. That such a man should be killed like this, struck down by a mysterious assassin, armed with a poisoned weapon • • •

A woman' Always my mind came back to that A woman! Poison was a woman's weapon. But who was she? How had she escaped? Where had she concealed herself? How was she able to strike so surely? Above all, why should she have chosen Philip Vantine, of all men, for her victim—Philip Vantine, who had never injured any woman—and then I paused. For I realized that I knew nothing of Vantine, except what he had chosen to tell me. Parks would know And then I shrank from the thought Must we probe that secret? Must we compel a man to betray his master?

My face was burning No, we could not do that—that would be abominable • • • The door opened and Godfrey came in. This time, he was not alone. Simmonds and Goldberger followed him, and their faces showed that they were as shaken and nonplussed as I There was a third man with them whom I did not know, but but I soon found out that it was Freylinghuisen, the coroner's physician.

They all looked at the body, and Freylinghuisen knelt beside it and examined the injured hand, then he sat down by Dr Hughes, and they were soon deep in a low-toned conversation whose subject I could guess I could also guess what Simmonds and Godfrey were talking about in the farther corner; but I could not guess why Goldberger, instead of getting to work, should be walking up and down, pulling impatiently at his moustache and glancing at his watch now and then. He seemed to be waiting for some one, but not until 20 minutes later did I suspect who it was. Then the door opened again to admit a short, heavy set man, with florid face, stubbly black moustache, and little, close-set eyes, preternaturally bright. He glanced about the room, nodded to Goldberger, and then looked inquiringly at me.

"This is Mr Lester, Commissioner Grady," said Goldberger, and I realized that the chief of the detective bureau had come up from headquarters to take personal charge of the case. "Mr Lester is Mr. Vantine's attorney," the coroner added, in explanation.

"Glad to know you, Mr. Lester," said Grady, shortly.

"And now, I guess, we're ready to begin," went on the coroner.

"Not quite," said Grady, grimly. "We will excuse all reporters, first," and he looked across at Godfrey, his face darkening.

I felt my own face flushing, and started to protest, but Godfrey silenced me with a little gesture.

"It's all right, Lester," he said. "Mr. Grady is quite within his rights. I'll withdraw—until he sends for me."

"You'll have a long wait, then!" retorted Grady, with a sarcastic laugh.

"The longer I wait, the worse it will be for you, Mr. Grady," said Godfrey quietly, opened the door and closed it behind him.

Grady stared after him for a moment in crimson amazement. Then, mastering himself with an effort, he turned to the coroner.

"All right, Goldberger," he said, and sat down to watch the proceedings.

A very few minutes sufficed for Hughes and Freylinghuisen and I to tell all we knew of this tragedy and of the one which had preceded it. Grady seemed already acquainted with the details of d'Aurelle's death, for he listened without interrupting, only nodding from time to time.

"You've got a list of servants here, of course, Simmonds," he said, when we had finished the story.

"Yes, sir," and Simmonds handed it to him.

"H-m," said Grady, as he glanced it over. "Five of 'em. Know anything about 'em?"

"They've all been with Mr Vantine a long time, sir," replied Simmonds. "So far as I've been able to judge, they're all right."

"Which one of 'em found Vantine's body?"

"Parks, I think," I said. "It was he who called me."

"Better have him in," said Grady, and doubled up the list and slipped it in his pocket.

Parks came in looking decidedly shaky; but answered Grady's questions clearly and concisely. He told first of the events of the afternoon, and then passed on to the evening.

"Mr. Vantine had dinner at home, sir," he said. "It was served, I think, at 7 o'clock. He must have finished a little after 7:30. I didn't see him, for I was straightening things around up in his room and putting his clothes away. But he told Rogers—"

"Never mind what he told Rogers," broke in Grady. "Just tell us what you know."

"Very well, sir," said Parks, submissively. "I had a lot of work to do—we just got back from Europe yesterday, you know—and I kept on putting things in their places and straightening around, and it must have been 8:30 when I heard Rogers yelling for me. I thought the house was on fire, and I came down in a hurry. Rogers was standing out there in the hall, looking like he'd seen a ghost. He kind of gasped and pointed to this room, and I looked in and saw Mr. Vantine laying there—"

His voice choked on the words, but he managed to go on, after a moment.

"Then I telephoned for Mr. Lester," he added, "and that's all I know."

"Very well," said Mr Grady. "That's all for the present. Send Rogers in."

Rogers' face, as he entered the room, gave me a kind of shock, for it was that of a man on the verge of hysteria. He was a man of about 50, with iron gray hair, and a smoth shaven face, ordinarily ruddy with health. But now his face was livid, his cheeks lined and shrunken, his eyes blood shot and staring. He reeled rather than walked into the room, one hand clutching at his throat, as though he were choking.

"Get him a chair," said Grady, and Simmonds brought one forward and remained standing beside it. "Now, my man," Grady continued, "you'll have to brace up What's the matter with you, anyhow? Didn't you ever see a dead man before?"

It ain't that" gasped Rogers. "It ain't that—though I never saw a murdered man before"

"What" demanded Grady sharply. "Didn't you see that fellow this afternoon?"

That was different Rogers moaned. I didn't know him Besides, I thought he had killed himself We all thought so."

And you don't think Vantine did?"

I know he didn't" and Rogers' voice rose to a shrill scream. "It was that woman done it' Damn her' She done it' I knowed she was up to some crooked work when I let her in!"

CHAPTER VI.

THE WOMAN IN THE CASE.

It was coming now, the secret, however sordid, however ugly, was to be unveiled I saw Grady's face set in hard lines. I could hear the stir of interest with which the others leaned forward

Grady took a flask from his pocket and opened it

"Take a drink of this," he said, and placed it in Rogers' hand

I could hear the mouth of the flask clattering against his teeth as he put it eagerly to his mouth and took three or four long swallows.

"Thank you, sir," he said, more steadily, and handed the flask back to its owner A little color crept into his face, but I fancied there was a new look in his eyes—for, as the horror faded, fear took its place

Grady screwed the cap on the flask with great deliberation, and returned it to his pocket And all the time Rogers was watching him furtively, wiping his mouth mechanically with a trembling hand

"Now, Rogers," Grady began, "I want you to take your time and tell us in detail everything that happened here tonight. You say a woman did it. Well, we want to hear all about that woman. Now go ahead, and remember there's no hurry"

"Well, sir," began Rogers slowly, as though carefully considering his words, "Mr Vantine came out from dinner about half past seven—maybe a little later than that—and told me to light all the lights in here and in the next room. You see there are gas and electrics both, sir, and I lighted them all. He had gone into the music room on the other side of the hall, so I went over there and told him the lights were all lit He was looking at a new picture he'd bought, but he left it right away and came out into the hall

Are We Neutral?

From Collier's.

We shall observe President Wilson's neutrality order rigidly And yet suppose Germany should win" Suppose Germany occupied France, wiped out the British army and swept the British navy from the sea? Suppose all this had happened and we in the United States had a day or two to think it over? What would we think and what would we do? Our own notion is that if we were guided by ordinary prudence we would instantly recognize the necessity of making our navy not less than seven times as strong as it now is and raising our standing army to a half million Our German-American friends who criticize us as being prejudiced against the fatherland would then themselves realize the real situation. With a triumph of the military spirit and of absolutism in Europe, we Americans would have to step against our wills into the shoes that France has stood in now for 40 years.

Tax "Doctors" Disagree.

From the Sibley (Ia.) Tribune.

Osceola county taxpayers should brace themselves for another boost in taxes. The raise is not made on account of the war in Europe, as most of the other items in the increased cost of low living are accounted for. Our supervisors claim it is rendered necessary by state laws and administration.

Governor Clarke and the executive council insist that the boards of supervisors are responsible for the high taxes that prevail in Iowa.

The doctors disagree. The taxpayer may believe the state officials or the county officials as he pleases.

But he must pay the taxes.

Simply Terrible.

"A terrible poison has been discovered lately."

"What's that?"

"Aeroplane poison."

"Is it deadly?"

"Well, it only takes one drop to kill a man."

MODEL GERMAN POST RECALL SOME HISTORY

Postal Service Dates Back to Ancient History—Well Organized Under Caesar.

Washington, Oct. 1.—In connection with the exhibit turned over to the National museum by the post office department there are three mail wagon models from Germany, which prove of considerable interest on account of the present disturbances in that country.

These three models were fashioned by an expert metal worker named Robert Liebacher, of Dresden, Germany, in the latter part of the 19th century, and represent three types of typical German post carriers of the 18th and 19th centuries. The largest is a four horse coach built to accommodate about 12 passengers and carry several sacks of mail. It is complete to the minutest detail, and painted a bright yellow with black trimmings and the German arms emblasoned on the doors. The other models are smaller, one being a single horse mail cart, labelled "Kaiserl. Deutsche Post," and the other a two-wheeled chaise. Both the latter were used for mail alone where there was little if any passenger travel along the post routes.

It may not be generally realized that the origin of the post system, which has developed into one of the most effective instruments of civilization, dates back to ancient history, and the old testament. In those early times the fore runner of the postal service was maintained by monarchs and individuals in authority, whose slaves and servants acted as couriers, delivering messages and relaying each other when the distances were great. The first system of this sort is credited to the Persian empire in 559 B. C., Cyrus the Elder posted a number of mounted couriers at different stations within his domain situated about a day's journey apart, that he might receive his provincial reports without delay.

From the Latin word "positus," meaning stationed, this method of communication by means of relays placed at different points along the roads, came to be known as a post system, and eventually as the postal system of today.

In the time of Caesar, about 55 B. C., the courier service was well organized; and it is said that letters sent by him from Britain, to Cicero at Rome reached their destination in 26 or 28 days. Scarcely any private messages were delivered under this early order, but gradually the messengers of the officials came to carry letters for individuals addressed to the same town or city toward which they journeyed. At the end of Third centruy, however, Emperor Diocletian appears to have been the first who installed a public postal system, and later Theodoric the Great Charlemagne, and others built up such services for communication with all parts of their empires. A report on a 13th century organization of China, which included some 10,000 stations, is made by Marco Polo, and it is also known that the ancient Aztecs of Mexico had a foot messenger system which was remarkably complete and efficient.

Near the end of the 13th century the University of Paris established routes in France, originally for the benefit of its students, but eventually for outsiders as well Louis XI maintained first a private mounted messenger service, and later, in 1464, installed post stations on all the main roads of France.

The first actual letter post of Germany seems to have been established in the Hanse towns in the latter part of the 12th or the early part of the 13th centuries. A line of letter posts followed, connecting Austria with Lombardy, in the reign of Maximillian (1459-1519), which is said to have been organized by Franz of Thurn and Taxis, who established another post route in 1516 from Vienna to Brussels, connecting the more distant parts of the domain of Charles V The family of the Prince of Thurn and Taxis continued to hold certain rights with regard to the German postal system until 1806, their posts being entirely distinct from those of the crown.

In 1522 a route was laid out between Vienna and Nuremburg, while Charles V established a permanent riding post from the Netherlands through Liege, Treves, Spire, and Rheinhausen, through Wurtemberg, Aurtemberg, Augsburg, and Tyrol to Italy.

With the increase of correspondence, the courier system became inefficient, and wagons were introduced. Correspondence itself induced travel, so before long, post wagons with seats for several people appeared on the highways, and a combination of post and travel stages resulted. In some places the mail and passengers were kept separate, post chaises, driven by postboys or postilions, being rented from station to station, the mail still going by courier as before. But in other places, on long trips, as was the case in Germany especially the post and passengers went together in great stage and mail coaches, similar to the large model in the National museum collection.

GENERAL PAU GIVES HIS HAT TO PRIVATE

Bordeaux, France.—The whimsical camaraderie, with his men, which has made General Paul Gerald Pau, one-armed veteran of the war of 1870, and present commander of the army of the east, the most popular French commander in the field, is described in a letter from a Bordeaux reservist to his family. The young man writes:

"We left the village of B—— in high spirits. I am apt to play the fool, and in romping about the railroad car I lost my kepi out of a window. The next day I had to march in the ranks bareheaded. People pointed and made fun of me, but I did not mind that. I laughed back and joked with all the girls.

"At headquarters, however, General Pau himself arrived to review the regiment, and I felt a bit ashamed of my appearance. As the general came in front of me he stopped. I expected to be reprimanded, perhaps punished.

"'Hello' he said, quizzically, 'I see you've lost your kepi.'

"'Yes, general.'

"'Would you like to have mine?'

"'I'd be proud to have it,' I stammered, in my surprise.

"The general thereupon took off his kepi and handed it to me, while every one cheered.

"'After marching all day with that bare head I'll bet you're thirsty,' he added, and before I realized what he was going to do he had slipped a five-franc piece into my hand.

"I was so touched I did not know how to thank him. Tears came into my eyes. For a general like that I'd let myself be killed 10 times over. He knows how to treat the soldiers and make them love him."

$48,000 FOR HEIRESS TO ENJOY HERSELF

Indulgent Auntie Thinks Girl Should Have Fun While Young.

Denver.—Miss Patsy Campion whose father, A. J. Campion, made millions in Colorado mining camps, has just cashed a check for $48,000, given to her by her aunt, Mrs. Anna K. Sigel, one of the richest women of the west, who believes in what she calls "the democracy of spending" for young American girls, and is testing her theory in the case of her niece.

"I know Patsy will come into a fortune when her parents die," said Mrs. Sigel, "but I gave her this money to spend in having a good time. I think it is a protection to young girls to be able to satisfy their own ideals as to dress and amusement while they are young, and not to be dependent on their parents' aid. Democracy of spending not only improves a girl's power of judgment, but makes her better qualified to know values in all things and will make her a better housewife.

"Besides, in the case of rich girls I believe in them having a good time while they are young, rather than wait years and years for their parents' estates to come to them, when they are too old for fun."

Miss Campion some day will be very rich, but her mother is very conservative in her ideals, and has steadfastly refused to permit her to wear extreme styles or to indulge in many of the pleasures that other rich girls have. Now, however, she has the means to buy as many fancy gowns as she wants.

A Change In Farming.

Farmers are finding that they must go in for diversified farming, must increase the yield of the crops they have, combine field crops with live stock, grow the stock best suited to conditions, learn to fertilize their soil and to market their crops intelligently. Such are the conclusions of national and state investigations. In an article in the Technical World, F G Moorhead gives figures of the department of agriculture that show $11.15 as the average cost of producing an acre of wheat, while the average amount is 14.1 bushels to the acre. At 80 cents a bushel this is a profit of 13 cents an acre. Corn costs $12.27 an acre and in the last 10 years has averaged a profit of 26 cents an acre. Oats in 10 years has averaged a loss of 25 cents an acre, the cost being $10.66 an acre.

Labor is figured as the largest single item. But there are rent and interest. If it were not that the farmer is being paid for his own labor and gets his own interest where he is an owner the returns would be so small as to discourage him from continuing. All this has been learned from bookkeeping. The result is a change, Mr Moorhead says, that is like a revolution. It includes increasing the yield of the grain crops, planting diversified crops instead of wheat, corn and oats and raising live stock. Extreme specializing has not been profitable. The farmer is becoming a manufacturer in which he converts his "roughage" and waste into beef, mutton and pork

Small farms in New York show that 90 per cent of profits comes from live stock The country over, 75 per cent is set down as the average. An average steer in Wisconsin with beef at 5 cents a pound produces a profit of $6 an acre. Minnesota and North Dakota experiments show $8.90 worth of milk product from cows, which, counting in the cost of pasturage, leaves $2.20 to the acre. A table, based on official state and national experiments and returns shows the comparative acre profit of the grain farmer and the live stock farmer: Wheat, 13 cents; corn, 26 cents; dairy cattle, $2.29; beef cattle, $3.5 swine, $20; oats, a loss of 25 cents an acre.

But there is also the loss in soil depletion. Experiments at the [illegible] agricultural college show that a ton of timothy removes as much from the soil as do 12 tons of butter. The former sells for $10; the latter for from $5,000 to $9,000. A ton of pork removes $5.70 of fertility from an acre. But it sells for $111.40, while a ton of butter which sells for $470, removes only 77 cents worth of fertility, so that a butter farmer will require 238 years to remove as much as a grain farmer removes every year The Iowa college shows that unused cornstalks wasted $12.90 an acre a year. The remedy for the latter is the silo, of which 15,000 were manufactured last year. It preserves the entire plant and stops the waste of 60 per cent of the feeding value of the plant. The conclusion is that there should be an increase in the grain product to the acre and the use of live stock for saving the waste and increasing the yield.

She Had Done It.

It was young Mrs. Robinson's first dinner party and she was suffering from the usual terrors of the inexperienced hostess.

However, the cook rose to the occasion splendidly, and, so far as the dinner itself was concerned, Mrs. Robinson was delighted.

The only fly in the ointment was Jane Jane was the new parlor maid, she was slow, clumsy, and her waiting was bad. But, in addition to these faults, she insisted on keeping her mouth wide open.

This so got on Mrs. Robinson's nerves that at last she exclaimed:

"Jane, your mouth is wide open."

Jane withdrew her gaze from the ceiling and said, looking down with a cherry smile:

"I know it is ma'am; I opened it myself."

Her Idea of Economy.

Gen. W. L. Alexander was discussing the European war. "This war," he said, "will affect even us. We must economize to weather it. And our economy must be general, too.

"We mustn't be like Gayboy, whom a friend asked over a bottle of champagne on a roof garden:

"'Well, apropos of the war, old man, did you give your wife that lecture on economy?'

"'Yes, I did,' Gayboy answered, 'and she went right out and bought me a safety razor.'"

ANCIENT SENLIS, IN NORTHERN FRANCE, DESTROYED BY GERMANS

(c) Underwood & Underwood.

Here is a view of the ruins of Senlis, after the bombardment of that ancient north of France town by the Germans. The beautiful old cathedral lies in ruins. Before the bombardment the town boasted of its sixteen towers of the Gallo-Roman fortifications, which were so jealously preserved through the ages. The city had a population of about 8,000. During the bombardment the mayor and a score of citizens lost their lives.

VON MOLTKE II WORTHY OF FATHER'S NAME

Misgivings of Military Germans Dispelled By Subsequent Accomplishments.

From the Kansas City Star.

For nine years Von Moltke has been chief of the great general staff of the German army. The decisive arbitrament of the present campaign will be necessary to determine whether Gen. Helmuth Von Moltke, nephew of the "Organizer of Victory," is entitled to his celebrated uncle's other sobriquet of "The Battle Winner."

His supreme lord, the kaiser, and the tremendous organization of 5,000,000 officers and men which General Von Moltke heads, at any rate have unalloyed confidence in his ability to vindicate the traditions entrusted to his keeping. Meanwhile, emulating the habits which gave the conqueror of France still another popular title, "The Great Silence Keeper," Von Moltke's energies are devoted to hammering into still more deadly perfection the mightiest war machine the world has yet known. The victories which the German army has won in the first six weeks of war are a striking tribute to his genius.

Succeeded Count Von Schlieffen.

Von Moltke succeeded a brilliant soldier, Count Von Schlieffen, at the general staff on January 1, 1906. He had had a somewhat more than ordinary career in the army up to that time, won his lieutenacy and Iron Cross in the field as a stripling in the Franco-Prussian campaign, and acquitted himself creditably in various grades of the service until he reached his lieutenant-generalcy in 1902. But men inside and outside the army look askance on his elevation to the post so long adorned by Schlieffen. They declared he owed it primarily to Emperor William's passion for the picturesque and a gnawing desire once again to have the magic name of Moltke at the head of the "brains department" of the German army.

Detractors were destined to have their skepticism dramatically undermined. Having scoffed at Von Moltke as a decorative figure, they rubbed their eyes over the first "kaiser maneuvers" held under his auspices before he had been at the general staff 10 months. The great autumn mimic campaign for years past had been distinguished by operations which that oft quoted marshal of France would have called "magnificent, but not war." The kaiser had an unconquerable passion for thrilling cavalry charges over bare fields, which would make splendid cinema films, but cost the lives of a division in war.

Stopped Maneuver Pyrotechnics.

With the taunts of his rivals ringing in his ears that he was a "kaiser staff chief" pure and simple, Von Moltke's first innovation was ruthlessly to obliterate the picturesque from the autumn maneuvers and substitute guelling, practical operations—night fighting, forced marches and all the other trappings of "real" war. Count Schlieffen, who had opposed William II's predilection for pyrotechnics, had finally to leave the general staff in disfavor. Von Moltke, revealing a will of steel, succeeded speedily where his eminent predecessor had failed. His growth in the esteem of the army was consistent and rapid thenceforth. That the German army today is essentially "workmanlike" is to a large degree the achievement of its present chief of staff.

General Von Moltke, born in Mecklenburg-Schwerin in 1848, was 66 years old in May, 1914. He is often mistakenly called "Count" Von Moltke, for the title of count, conferred on his great ancestor in 1870, on the day Metz fell, was inherited by the elder brother of the present Moltke, General Count Wilhelm von Moltke, and ceased with the latter's death a few years ago. The "organizer of victory," whose wife was an English woman, Miss Burt, had no children. General Helmuth von Moltke served as adjutant to his distinguished uncle at the general staff from 1881 until the field marshal's death in 1891. While escorting the latter to the grave, Emperor William informed the then Major Von Moltke that he had decided to elevate him to the rank of a personal aide-de-camp. Five years of service in the kaiser's entourage were succeeded by regimental and divisional commands in the guards until in 1904 Emperor William created a quartermaster generalship of the general staff, hitherto filled only in war time, and designated General Von Moltke to occupy it. The post is that of vice-chief and Von Moltke was thenceforth looked upon as Count Schlieffen's eventual successor.

Not a Spectacular Soldier.

Von Moltke's qualities are not of the dazzling order. Bulky and stocky of exterior, with the ungainly outlines of a Bismarck, blue eyed and blondish gray haired, taciturn to a degree, a famed characteristic of the Mecklenburgers and Schleswig-Holsteiners, from which the Moltkes have sprung, the chief of the general staff is a man of indomitable force, unfailing candor, and mental capacity more disinguished for sanity than scintillating brilliancy. He cares far less for show than a guard lieutenant.

The kaiser offered him the imperial chancellorship when Prince Bulow fell and Von Moltke, believing that a soldier should stick to his trade, declined the invitation. Though he contrived to keep himself thoroughly in the background, his powerful initiative and relentless perseverance are known to have been the influence chiefly responsible for the vast increase in the peace establishment of the German army, carried out at a cost of $250,000,000 in the year immediately preceding the war.

YOUR SHARE OF CORN THIS YEAR 48½ BUSHELS

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

While you were dodging armies in Europe, or whipping a mountain stream for trout, or parading the Atlantic City boardwalk, or sitting quietly at home—I say while you were doing any one of these or other things, Reuben Corntassel was coaxing out of his fields 48½ bushels of grain for you.

That's your individual share—48½ bushels of wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye and buckwheat—or the annual harvest. Last year you had to struggle along with only 45 bushels of these cereals, but in 1912 Uncle Rube did better, and raised 55 bushels.

More than half your allotment of cereals is corn and less than a fifth of it is wheat. I'm happy to inform you that you may eat almost a quarter more buckwheat cakes than you enjoyed last winter.

That's more than a crumb of comfort in a cheerful world.

Salutary Effects of Music.

To what are the beneficial effects of music due? Darwin, who never rested until he could explain a thing, if it were explainable, could nevertheless no more explain why musical tones in a certain order and rythm afforded pleasure, than we can account for the pleasantness of certain odors and tastes. "We know that sounds, more or less melodious, are produced during the season of courtship by many insects, spiders, fishes, amphibians and birds." After all, says The Journal of the American Medical association, we need go no deeper for an adequate explanation than that influences, such as music, which are agreeable, are therefore salutary and music is agreeable because its component tones are regular, periodic vibrations, even auditory waves precisely so many to each note, being in this regard unlike noises, which are irregular, dissonant, conflicting vibrations. Sound waves impinge on the hearing sense, whence the perception is conveyed to the brain. The benignant influence of music physically is by the transmission of its influence from the cerebrum through the sympathetic system, which directs the various organs. Thus not only is music physic for the soul, dissipating mental depression, soothing psychic perturbations; but its influence may also enhance nutrition, further digestion (as by the "liver music" of the French) and restore organic equilibrium. Indeed, the entire wogking of the human mechanism, physical and mental alike, may be lubricated by a stream of music, which art and science should therefore have a place in the medical armamentarium.

How the Kaiser Fought the Boer War.

From the "World's Work."

In his famous interview in the London Daily Mail the kaiser claimed credit for the English plan of campaign against the Boers:

"Nor was that all. Just at the time of your black week, in the December of 1899, when disasters followed one another in rapid succession, I received a letter from Queen Victoria, my revered grandmother, written in sorrow and affliction, and bearing manifest traces of the anxieties which were preying upon her mind and health. I at once returned a sympathetic reply. Nay, I did more. I bade one of my officers procure for me as exact an account as he could obtain of the number of combatants in South Africa on both sides. With the figures before me, I worked out what I considered to be the best plan of campaign under the circumstances, and submitted it to my general staff for their criticism. Then I dispatched it to England, and that document, likewise, is among the state papers at Windsor castle, awaiting the serenely impartial verdict of history. And, as a matter of curious coincidence, let me add that the plan which I formulated ran very much on the same lines as that which was actually adopted by Lord Roberts and carried by him into successful operation."

If the Belgian government carries out a plan to dig a new bed for the river Scheldt there will be no limit to the size of vessels that can reach Antwerp.

LAURA JEAN LIBBEY ON HEART TOPICS

SINKING WITH A SPENDTHRIFT.

(Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Tomorrow can bring nothing,
But He will bear us through.
Who gives the lilies clothing
Will clothe his children, too.
Beneath the spreading heavens
No creature but is fed,
And He who feeds the ravens
Will give His children bread.

There are girls who boast that their sweethearts are too fond of them to be stingy with them—that they are constantly showing by costly gifts that they are never out of their mind.

Prudent people know that this might do for a man who has wealth, but for the lover depending on a modest salary there is a note of warning for the girl in the case. She may appreciate his fondness and anxiety to please her, but she should also realize there is a very essential quality lacking in his makeup—inability to save money.

After they wed trouble soon begins. They commence married life on a scale more extravagant than they should and live up to every penny of his income. They often run behind. One may borrow from a friend a few times. Eventually, however, the borrower is met when asking for another loan with the response: "I'm sorry, my dear friend, to refuse, but I was just about to ask you to pay back the last amount I let you have." As if by one accord he finds the same state of affairs wherever he turns. He has gotten into the rut of spending money. He loses his position. Want looks in at the door of the little home. The wife comes valiantly to the fore; takes a position to eke out the support of the little family.

When a man accepts this situation philosophically, sits down resignedly, then trouble is sure to begin to brew, trouble this time that will not be apt to be temporary.

When the wife is the bread winner, and she knows her husband's spendthrift inclinations, she does not make him her banker. She carries the pocketbook or secrets it so securely that though he searches every nook and cranny he is unable to find it. If there are no babies to tend at home, time hangs heavy, on his hands. Of course, he starts out to look for a position each day, but he is one of the kind who are glad to be turned down at the few places where he applies. He feels injured at his wife not allowing him at least a certain amount each week for his spending money. He has been used to smoking cigars—good ones at that. Where he finds he can get credit, he runs up a little bill, here and there, intending, of course, to pay it as soon as he gets work. His clothes must not show shabbiness, and he spends some of the money which he hopes to get at

He must put his best foot forward in his endeavor to secure a position; therefore, he cannot have shoes with holes in them. Bills sometimes have a reckless habit of coming due. He sits stolidly through his wife's tears and reproaches. She parts with all her treasures at the insistence of the clamoring tradesman. This goes on year after year despite her pleadings, until she wakes to the realization that it is easier to pass a camel through a needle's eye than to reform a spendthrift. When a couple are courting, a girl should study a man's habits and not accepts gifts which he cannot afford. The lover inclined to be too liberal can be checked in time if taken at the outset.

KITCHENER'S SISTER WOULD SEE ABOUT THE CAB NOTICES.

From the London Mirror.

"I wanted a taxicab in the Strand this morning," writes a correspondent. "At the end of my journey I asked the driver if the notice calling for recruits made any difference. He replied that it undoubtedly did.

"Only this morning, he said, a woman engaged him when he was standing third on the rank because the two cabs in front did not sport Lord Kitchener's notice.

"While the woman was paying him she asked why some drivers were without notices. He replied that they did not know where to get them.

"'Oh,' said the woman fare, 'I will speak to my brother about it, so that no taxicab driver will have that excuse in future. I am Lord Kitchener's sister.'"

Guilty, But Modest.

From Tit-Bits.

"Bridget, were you entertaining a man in the kitchen last evening?"

"Well, mum, that's for him to say. Oi done my best wid the materials at hand, mum."

NOVEL IDEA IN WILL MAKING

French Farmer Had Little Money to Leave, but at Least He Could Show His Good Will.

Two New York business men were one day discussing the purchase by one of them of a certain mercantile concern with which, the buyer explained, had come the "good will."

"I hope this 'good will,'" said the friend, "is greater than that of the old French farmer."

"I never heard the story."

"Here it is. The farmer was dying and he sent for the notary to make out the will. Propped up in bed, he dictated

"'To Jean Marcel, our superb coiffeur, 10,000 francs

"'I bequeath 15,000 francs to the fearless Alphonse Bayard, that he may continue his valuable aeronautical experiments

"'To Pierre Deschamps, chemist, 10,000 francs as a mark of affection

"'To my physician, Monsieur Leclair, 15,000 francs.

"'To our eloquent pastor, 25,000 francs, to continue the restoration of—'

"'But, my dear sir,' interrupted the notary, 'I don't believe you have all that money to leave.'

"'I know very well I haven't,' said the farmer, calmly, 'but I want to show them my good will.'"—Youth's Companion

HEAD IN WATERY PIMPLES

R. R. No. 1, Kyles, Ohio.—"My baby's head when about a year old began to break out with small watery pimples causing her head to itch. She would scratch her head till the blood came causing the top of her head to be in almost a solid eruption. The pimples at first were nearly as large as a pea and in patches which would inflame and fester and when they would come open would leave a kind of wet scales there for a few days. Then when it dried up it would leave scales on her head that caused her hair to fall out just in great bunches.

"One day I happened to see Cuticura Soap and also Cuticura Ointment advertised in a paper and I ordered a sample of each. They seemed to help her head so much that I purchased a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment and in two weeks' time her head was sound and well. Her hair had stopped falling out and was also free from dandruff." (Signed) Mrs. J. L. West, Feb 20, '14.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address postcard "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."—Adv.

Woman's Desire for Liberation From Wrecked Train Accompanied by Terrible Threat.

A fast limited was bowling over the sands of Arizona. Just how it happened was frequently explained, and never understood, but as the train sped along the side of a parched river it suddenly left the rails, rolled down the bank and landed in three feet of muddy water at the bottom of the river bed.

Within the cars there was some natural confusion. Men, women and lunch boxes were thrown into a heap, and not an umbrella or a parcel was left in the racks.

One by one the occupants of the rear car extricated themselves from the mass and sought for means of escape, while stanching various wounds caused by broken glass. Every exit was jammed tight. Just then, in the midst of the doubt and confusion, rose a woman's voice in emphatic demand:

"Let me out! Let me out! If you don't let me out, I'll break a window."

Buzzard Carries Off Dog.

Eagles are said to be game enough and strong enough to carry off almost anything from a man to cat, but the first instance known when a buzzard carried off a dog was witnessed on a recent afternoon. The incident happened a few miles from Bessemer.

A very brave little fox terrier was endeavoring to chase off a large buzzard that had alighted on the ground. He only succeeded in making the buzzard fly close to the ground for a short distance. The buzzard stopped on a short stump and waited for the dog, which came barking around the root of the stump.

The buzzard, seeing his chance, jumped from the stump, seized the dog in its mouth and claws, and flew to a thicket near by.—Birmingham (Ala.) Dispatch to the Atlanta Journal.

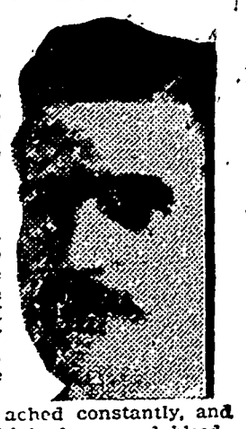
Peruna Cured This Man Of Catarrh.



Mr. J. B. Reese, Habnab, Maryland, writes: "Two years ago I became a sufferer with catarrh, which continued to grow worse and made me miserable. I could scarcely smell at all, and my taste had almost left me. My head ached constantly, and at times had high fever and bleeding at the nose. I was a perfect wreck.

"I tried several doctors, but derived no relief. I read in one of your little booklets, called 'Ills of Life,' of Peruna being a remedy for catarrh, and procured a bottle at once. After the use of one bottle I felt some better, so I tried the second and the third, and now I am a well man."

Why He Objected.

A parson and a a leading parishioner were not on good terms, and there was much speculation in the village as to the reason.

"It's all on account of parson refusing to christen master's youngest child," the housemaid confided to her friend of the dusting brush at the house across the way. "Master wanted her to be named Dora Ruby Ines North Kathleen, but the parson wouldn't do it."

"It was like parson's cheek," replied her friend, "even if he was asked to give the child a hundred names—"

"Oh it wasn't the number of names which bothered him," returned the servant. "He objected to the initials, that's all You see, master's name is Beer, and the girl's initials are D. R. I N K., and parson declined to be a party to her having to sign herself when she grows up, 'Drink Beer.'"—London Answers.

The Cause Laid Bare

Tea and coffee drinkers often notice backache, headache, rheumatic pain, dizziness, drowsy, tired feelings, disturbed urination and other signs of kidney weakness. The constant use of narcotic or alcoholic drinks is very apt to irritate the kidneys, and weak kidneys need prompt help to avert all danger of dropsy, gravel or fatal Bright's disease. Avoid the use of stimulants, drink more water, get more rest, fresh air and exercise. To tone and strengthen the tired kidneys, use Doan's Kidney Pills, the most successful and highly recommended kidney remedy.

An Iowa Case

Miss Marvilla Fisher, Market St., Vinton, Iowa, says "For years kidney trouble clung to me and gave me much pain and annoyance. I had severe backaches and my joints felt sore and achy. My complexion got sallow and I knew my kidneys were disordered. After doctoring without relief I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they cured me. My whole system was toned up and strengthened."

Nervous Emotional Dizzy Depressed ?

Mrs. Addie Curtsinger of Cedar St., Cairo, Ill., writes Dr. R. V. Pierce as follows:

"I send 31 cents for your 'Common Sense Medical Adviser' for my daughter who has recently married and I know the book will be of much value to her. I have read and used for 25 years the valuable treatments contained in the 'Medical Adviser' and have taken many bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and have been restored to health each time I used it. It is a great remedy for women as a strength builder, fine for the nerves and general health."

Solving the Low Cost of Buying

Everybody is talking about the high cost of living and racking their brains for a solution.

That's easy. All you have to do is to solve the "Low Cost of Buying." Study carefully the Quality and the Price before you part with your money, for the one is as essential as the other. A few pennies saved on each article used by the average family would amount to a considerable sum in the run of a year. It reduces the cost of living.

We have solved the "Low Cost of Buying" from the manufacturer, and you will solve it when you come to us; for we are slicing off the pennies for you which the manufacturer had to slice off for us.

Meet us face to face, and you will go home with a smile.

DUESENBERG'S CONTINUE TO WIN

Won 100 Mile Race at Minneapolis Last Week

Ben R. Lau, a former Klemme boy, but who now makes his home in Minneapolis sends us the following clipping in regard to the races held at Minneapolis last week and it will be seen that the Duesenberg's are continuing to win and their many friends in this community certainly wish them continued success. Read the following interesting account of the Minneapolis race in which one of their cars established a new world's record and their three cars finished, one, two, three:

"Tom Alley, driving a Duesenberg car on the rim for the last mile and a half, won the 100 mile race at the state fair grounds yesterday in world's record time, 91 minutes, 30 seconds. The former record 92-54, was made at Galesburg, Thursday, by Alley's teammate, Mulford, who was a mile in the rear yesterday.

But if Alley won, it was Bob Burman who furnished what thrills there were were. The "wild man" drove the fastest miles of the race, but was compelled to stop half a dozen times to change tires and bolster a leaking oil pipe.

When Alley crossed the line at the completion of the 100 miles the other drivers had made the following distances: Mulford, Duesenberg, 99 miles; O'Donnell, Duesenberg, 98 miles; DePalma, Mercedes, 97 miles; Callaghan, Keaton, 87 miles; Burman, Pegeot, 86 miles; Marsh, 83 miles. They followed him across the line without changing the order.

The victory was a signal one for Duesenberg cars, three entered taking the first three places. This car will in the future be manufactured in Minneapolis.

There were 7,000 saw the race. Burman shot into the lead on the first mile with De Palma and Alley dogging him close. At the ninth mile Burman pulled into the pit with a flat tire, but before he had lost a lap, shot out again and fairly burned the track in pursuit of DePalma, who was leading, with Alley second.

Burman caught DePalma on the twenty-second mile and forced the king of road racers to send his car almost to the breaking point, for two laps later he stopped with engine trouble, lost five miles and was never, thereafter, a contender.

Just as Burman was comfortably settled in first place and streaking away with miles in 52 and 53 seconds, his oil pipe sprung a leak and in stop after stop he lost six miles. Even at that whenever he took the track he shot away after the leaders and kept interest in the grind from dying.

Alley, after he got the lead on the sixtieth mile, kept up a sullen grind that eventually brought him the money. On the ninety-ninth lap, he lost a rear tire, never slackened speed visibly and tore one rest of the way at his record-breaking clip.

The only real excitement of the race was between the thirty-ninth and forty-fifth miles. Then, Burman, Alley and DePalma, bunched, had many a brush and though five miles in the rear by actual count, DePalma fought with the "wild man." On the turns DePalma would nose out way ahead. Then on the stretches Burman would close him up in a flash of speed. Alley hung at the heels of the two ahead and never once faltered."

Dobbin As Cannon Food

Within a few months thousands and thousands of American horses, many of them pets, will be galloping into the shrapnel of German soldiers, tugging and straining at the traces as they drag heavy artillery over the half frozen roads or lying wounded, helpless and dying on some French, Belgian or German battle field. For, despite the humane sentiment of our people and despite everything, trainloads of American horses are leaving Chicago every day, for Canada, to be shipped to England. Other trains leave St. Louis, Kansas City and Louisville, daily for New Orleans, whence the horses are shipped to France. These horses are being bought now, today, in the rural districts of the middlewest, as well as from the ranges further west. Many a family pet will be bullet-shattered and will die a lingering death in the cold of the coming winter, for there are no Red Cross societies to care for wounded horses.

BELMOND MAN MEETS FATAL ACCIDENT

C. A. Johnson Injured Saturday, Dies Sunday

The people of this locality were shocked last week to hear of the serious accident and subsequent death of Chas. A. Johnson, senior member of the firm of Johnson & Johnson, hardware and implement dealers. It seems that Mr. Johnson went out to the farm of Carlton Johnson in Belmond township last Saturday afternoon to set up a corn elevator, that in raising the machine it in some manner toppled over and fell upon Mr Johnson, crushing the unfortunate man against the wheel of the machine. Dr. Meyer was immediately called and went to the scene of the accident and brought the injured man to his home in town. Upon examination it was found that eight ribs were fractured and other internal organs had been injured so seriously that the patient had but a slight chance for recovery. He suffered untold agony for about twelve hours, until relieved by death at 5 o'clock Sunday morning. It is not understood just how the accident happened, but is thought remarkable that he was not killed instantly, as the machine which fell upon him weighed over 1,000 pounds. This is a sad accident indeed, and a fearful blow to the widow and four small children. As this is written, it is not known just when the funeral will be held, but if possible, Tuesday will be selected. It is reported that about a month ago Mr. Johnson took out an accident insurance policy of $5.000. Death is always sad, but when a young, active progressive business man is stricken without warning, the grief is doubly hard to endure. The heartfelt sympathy of the entire community goes out to the stricken family and other relatives in this their hour of trial. — Belmond Herald-Press.

In order to reduce the noise of street cars and particularly the flat wheel nuisance it was suggested at a recent meeting of the Tramways association, in Newcastle England, that street cars be provided with tires of rubber It was argued that the wear on the rails would be much reduced, and the life of the rubber tire would exceed that on motor trucks and buses which are credited with an average life of 20,000 miles It was also argued that a higher rate of speed would be possible with the flexible tire

M. W. A. INSURGENTS GAIN CONTENTION TO ANNUL APPEAL CASE

Court Holds No Issue Pending Since Rates Have Been Put at Old Figures.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 24.—The M. W. A. insurgents have won another important victory through a supreme court ruling today permitting dismissal of the rate injunction appeal case.

When the head camp tried to put in force a general rate raise an injunction was secured in the Polk district court against the increase. The head camp officials instituted an appeal to the supreme court.

In the meantime the insurgents showed such strength all over the country that the head camp officials promised temporary acceptance of the old rates as their campaign slogan. Although going back to the old schedule temporarily the head camp crowd wanted a chance to make a showing in the Iowa case that the proposed increase was justified, as a basis for later activities.

The insurgents, however, contended that there is no issue before the court since the old rates have been restored and Attorney C W Lyon, representing the insurgents, applied to have the appeal dismissed His view was upheld in an opinion rendered today by the supreme court justices.

Other decisions handed down today were

GERMAN ARMY REINFORCED BY 600,000 FRESH TROOPS; BATTLE LINE WAVERS BUT NEITHER GETS ADVANTAGE

Kaiser's Forces Have Made Gains to the North of Dixmude In Belgium and at La Bassee In France, While Allies Have Advanced Between Lille and Armentierres and to the East of Nieuport—Both Sides Admit Outcome of This Engagement Will Largely Influence Conduct of Future Campaign.

ZEPPELINS RAIN SHELLS UPON ALLIES' ARMIES

Berlin Military Expert Describes Present Conflict As Most Violent and Most Important of the War and London Concurs In That Opinion—French Report Further Advances Between Metz and Verdun, Claiming to Have Cut Crown Prince's Communications and Say They Are Planning an Assault.

Two months ago today the British army began its retreat from Mons. Today the battered forces of Sir John French are 50 miles to the northwest of Mons. In the intervening period the impetuous German advance penetrated almost to the gates of Paris, only to be hurled back again in the crucial battle of the Marne, and now the hostile forces are deadlocked 50 miles to the northwest of Mons

Today's reports throw little new light on the course of the battle. On the fighting on the plains of Flanders, in the opinion alike of German, French and British observers, depends in large measure the outcome of the whole campaign.

The official French statement indicates with what intensity the opposing forces are contesting the issue. It is admitted that the Germans have advanced to the north of Dixmude and in the neighborhood of La Bassee, but as a counter stroke, it is said, the French have pushed forward of Nieuport, in the region of Langemarck and between Armentieres and Lille. These, in the language of the French war office, are "inestimable fluctuations of a contest waged so fiercely."

The war office contented itself with the general statement that the line of combat as a whole has been maintained

The official communication, given out at the Paris war office, this afternoon says

The battle continues on our left wing The enemy has made progress to the north of Dixmude and in the vicinity of La Bassee We have made very perceptible advances to the east of Nieuport in the region of Langemarck, and in the region between Armentieres and Lille. It is a question of inevitable fluctuations in the line of combat, which, however, maintains itself as a whole.

"On the rest of the front several German attacks by day and by night have been repulsed At various places we have made slight progress. In the Woevre district our advance has continued in the direction of the forest of Montmare, to the south of Thiaucourt and the forest of Le Petre, north of Pont-a-Mousson

Germans Waging Life and Death Struggle In Battle of Flanders

London Oct 26 -What a German military expert has called a life and death struggle for Germany is still raging along the coast end of the western battle front and every indication shows that the invaders are hurling their full strength against the allies in a determined effort to capture Dunkirk and Calais.

Strange reports come from various captured cities in Belgium of evacuation, or the preparation for departure, of German forces, but these movements may merely mean that every available man is being thrown forward to the Franco-Belgian frontier and does not necessarily forecast the abandonment of positions Antwerp is said to have been practically deserted and the wives of German officers in Brussels are said to have received orders to leave within 48 hours.

Paris reports that the action on the allies' left continues with great violence, especially around Arras, La Bassee and Armentieres, where some of the most desperate fighting of the war has taken place Here the usual see-saw occurs, first the allies giving some ground and the Germans doing the same at some other point, but without either gaining what might be called a technical advantage over the other

A special dispatch states that the allies have advanced further on the coast, their lines now extending from the coast to a point between Slype and St Pierre Capelle Other dispatches relate that the Germans, after a success on the Yser are leaving the coast and working around by Dixmude to Lille, thereby clearing the way to Ostend and leaving their position open to a flanking movement by the allies.

One thing emerges clear from all these reports and that is incessant fighting prevails over the west Flanders front from Roulers to Thourout and between Nieuport and Ostend.

Greatest Battle of War Being Fought on Franco-Belgian Border

London, Oct. 26.—Superlatives have been so frequently used in the attempts to describe the engagements of the present war that the emphasis of such terms as 'most desperate,' 'violent' and 'crucial,' has been weakened by daily use, but, today, as by mutual agreement, both German and British newspapers characterize the conflict along the front from Lille in France to the Belgian seaboard as the greatest struggle of all

London newspapers were quick to seize the suggestion of a German military expert as cabled here from Berlin that this is the crucial conflict of the whole campaign and whether this be so or not it is contended that the outcome is likely to decide the future of German operations in France Reinforcements of 600,000 men are said to have been rushed to the German right wing and it seems no exaggeration to say that these operations spell the supreme effort of the invaders to break through the allies' line

Being denied the use of warships, which have been rendering good service for the allies, Germany is said to be throwing her air craft, and particularly Zeppelins, more and more into the fray, and news dispatches relate that the operations of Zeppelins have been a marked feature of the fighting to the southwest of Ostend, toward which seaport the troops of France, England and Belgium are said to be working their way

This, in brief is a broad view of the situation in France and Belgium from the English standpoint. Which side had the advantage is not known except to the general staffs of the opposing armies. All the public will know, barring something unforeseen in the nature of a catastrophe to one army or the other, will be that the terrific artillery duel, near the Belgian coast, has continued and that one side was pushed back here only to advance there, as was explained in the official communication issued in Paris last night.

BELGIAN KING LAYS CASE BEFORE AMERICA

Hopes United States Will Remember Belgium Fought to Remain Neutral.

London, Oct 24—King Albert of Belgium, issued a statement today, containing a special message to America. It follows

"I hope the United States will remember Belgium has been scrupulously exact in carrying out its obligations as a neutral country It never had been Belgian policy to interfere in international politics The nation had undertaken no warlike preparations when Belgium was invaded, the army was concentrated in the center of the country far from any frontier.

"As an indication of the attitude toward those who were compelled to leave Belgium when the war began the American minister, Brand Whitlock, and his secretary, Mr. Gibson, can testify how the Belgian soldiers tended to comfort them

"His majesty hopes the American nation as a neutral will not forget the neutrality of Belgium was violated. When the war is ended this fact should bear heavily on the terms of peace"

38 MEN ROB FORCE OF WAR MATERIALS

Burglarious Methods Employed By Cape Colony Guards to Stem Mutiny.

Cape Town (via London), Oct. 24.—The correspondent of the Cape Times, at Carnarvon, Cape Colony, describing the recent revolt of Lieut. Col. Solomon Gerhardus Maritz, says:

"When Maritz came to Kakamas, in the Cape province, as commandant of the defense force, he took away all the rifles of the local garrison on the plea that he needed them to arm a force against the Germans. Maritz went away and was returning with 700 Germans and traitors when the garrison luckily heard of his approach.

"Thirty-eight daring men went to his camp in the night and took rifles, ammunition and horses. Maritz caught up with them 30 miles away. There was a three hours' fight; then the men from the garrison took to the bush, where they played hide and seek for six days before they escaped with the loss of only one man."

YS GERMANY WILL NEVER VIOLATE MONROE DOCTRINE

unt Von Bernstorff, Ambassador From Kaiser's Government, Declares He Has Given United States Assurance That If Successful In War, Law Will Be Respected.

Washington, Oct. 26.—The German ambassador Count Bernstorff, said, today, that early in the European war he had assured the United States government that whatever the outcome of the conflict, Germany would respect the Monroe doctrine.

Count Bernstorff said he had filed with the state department, on September 3, soon after his arrival in this country from Berlin, a written official statement that Germany would not infringe on the Monroe doctrine, no matter what the outcome of the war

The ambassador said that his assurance had first been given informally in conversation with one of the officials of the state department—he could not recall whether it was Secretary Bryan or Counsellor Lansing. Mr. Lansing said, today the assurances had not been given to him and that he did not know of them Secretary Bryan is in the west, speaking in the congressional campaign

The ambassador said the statement was made because of statements from various English sources, that Germany, if successful would not respect the Monroe doctrine and doubtless would attempt to make a great colonization scheme in South America

The ambassador said that he later put the matter in writing

NORRIS TO PROBE LIQUOR LOBBYISTS

Charges That Wet Interests Showed Marked Activity In Connection With Revenue Bill.

Washington, Oct. 26.—Senator Norris is busily engaged in getting the names of all persons whom he believes should be subpoenaed before the Senate lobby committee and questioned about the existence of a whisky or liquor lobby. Senator Norris has submitted some of the names of those he wants subpoenaed to Senator Overman.

Senator Overman told Senator Norris he would conduct the investigation, but could not do it before December He asked Senator Norris to complete his list and give it to him December 1. Senator Norris is pursuing this plan.

"I shall submit a list to Senator Overman December 1," said Senator Norris today. "I did not have the list completed and am working on it. I do not expect to let the matter drop."

Senator Norris charges there has been an active lobby in Washington for the purpose of protecting whisky, beer and wine as far as possible from the war taxes The names he intends to submit to Senator Overman will be in part representatives of whisky interests and in part representatives of wine and brewing interests.

He called attention today to the fact that after the Senate had put an increased tax of $1.10 on beer and a tax on rectified spirits, the beer tax was reduced and the whisky tax knocked out in conference.

San Antonio, Tex., Oct. 24.—Relief work among destitute sufferers from yesterday's flood along San Pedro and Alazan creeks, in which 11 persons were drowned and 2,000 made homeless, was well under way today

Nearly 200 houses were swept away and the property loss was estimated at between $150,000 and $200,000. The flood was confined to the low lands, where the poorer classes lived. Several persons were still missing today and it was feared the death list might be increased.

TRADE DOMINATED BY EUROPEAN SITUATION

Depression In Some Lines and Stimulation In Others Is Traced to War.

New York, Oct. 24.—Bradstreet's today says:

Cross currents in trade and finance, domestic and foreign, give a very irregular appearance to commercial and financial affairs. The war abroad is still the dominating element in the entire situation and whatever dullness or, on the other hand, stimulation, is visible takes its rise apparently in the hostilities in Europe.

On the favorable side of the picture are to be found the rather better tone of financial matters caused by international efforts to bring about a resumption of normal conditions in the exchange market, the cotton export situation and the reopening of the stock markets.

Bank clearings for the week ending October 22, according to Bradstreet's were $3,733,346,000, a decrease of 24.6 per cent from the same week last year, business failures were 336, against 246 last year; wheat exports, including flour, 5,438,478 bushels, against 8,325,388 bushels last year.

DEFENDER OF LIEGE MAY BE DESERTER

The Hague, (via London), Oct. 24.—Newspaper advices from Halle, Germany, says the German authorities have opened an inquiry to discover whether General Leman, the defender of Liege, who is a prisoner at Magdeburg, can be identified as Heinrich Lehman, a soldier of the German army, who deserted during the war of 1870. There appears to be an extraordinary likeness, the advices say, between the men.

RAISE UNJUSTIFIED THORNE DECLARES

Iowa Commissioner Says Business Depression Affects Shippers and Railroads Alike.

Washington, Oct. 26.—The hearing of the railroads' appeal for an increase in rates and the protest of the shippers to the Interstate Commerce commission came to an end late yesterday with the presentation of the statement of Clifford Thorne, railroad commissioner for Iowa. Mr. Thorne acted as counsel for several western railroad commissions and shippers' associations. Arguments on the appeal will begin next Thursday.

Mr Thorne took the position that the railroads have not shown that any business depression exists which affects them more than the shippers and that the proposed advance would, therefore, be unjust.

Mr Thorne's statement follows.

"The carriers are proposing a 5 per cent advance in the freight rates not only in official classification territory, but in the through rates between all points in this eastern territory and those states west of the Mississippi river, which I represent. We will pay the advances on the raw products moving to the east and on the manufactured products moving from eastern factories to the west. We catch it both ways, coming and going, and we are subject to the long hauls.

"The market prices of many of our products are controlled by the prices at the Atlantic coast less freight rates. An advance in our freight rates is equivalent to moving our farms and industries that much farther from market it reduces our prices that much In the aggregate that will amount to a very large sum of money These are a few of the reasons that I am here.

Mr. Thorne's Aim.

"My purpose is simply to help see that the public side of these issues is fully presented to the commission. If the carriers are entitled to an increase we hope the commission will grant it, if not, we trust and believe that the commission will deny the petition of the carriers. We favor advances on such materials as do not yield adequate compensation today, likewise we favor reductions where conditions are the reverse. As to interstate traffic, it is the function of our state commissions to represent the shippers before this tribunal. This is established and required by statute.

"There is not the slightest spirit of hostility in our attitude toward the railroads. We fully appreciate their vast importance in the commercial life of the nation. So is the prosperity of the farmer basic and fundamental to the welfare of the nation Likewise the welfare of the laboring man is of tremendous importance to the prosperity of the country. A general advance of 10 per cent in wages during this period of depression, according to the pleasing logic we have been listening to during the last few days, would put that much more money into circulation. No man spends his money more freely than does the laboring man.

"Those whom I am authorized to represent placed no restrictions whatever on what I shall say or do. However, I desire at this time to relieve them entirely from such responsibility. Their object has simply been a pecuniary step to help see that both sides may be fully developed. I assume personal responsibility for my statements.

All Business Suffers.

"This is the third time American railways have sought to force a general advance in freight rates. In 1910 they claimed a crisis existed. Instead of a crisis the commission found that to be the most prosperous year in the whole history of American railways. In the original 5 per cent case in the year 1913 the claim of a crisis was again made, and concluded 'that there is no crisis in the condition of the railroads in official classification territory, taken as a whole.' Now, for the third time, the railroads claim there is a crisis. Today they have some foundation for their claim But this emergency upon which the carriers are relying today affects practically all of us in the same manner. It is following a period of marked depression in business for about a year, subsequent to the Balkan wars, disturbances in Europe and the short crops of last year

"It is just as hard for the manufacturer, the farmer, the laborer, the telephone or the beef trust to borrow money as it is for the railroads to do so.

"The railroads are asking for a sort of war tax, they are asking the government to lift the burden off part of the community and shift it over to the shoulders of the others. They asked the wage earner, who has lost his job, or has wages reduced, the cotton planter who cannot sell his cotton, and the manufacturer, who has been compelled to close his shop or reduce his force, they ask these men to carry the burden of the railroad in addition to their own

"If it is right for the government to shield the railroads from the effects of the war; if it is right for the government to make good the losses of people in different industries, I am going to propose a measure that will require every hen in Iowa to lay an egg every day, and when she fails to do so the government will make up to the owner the value of the egg she did not lay. This will enable the farmers to have more money with which to buy machinery. This in turn will make the factories keep busier, it will keep money in circulation and make the crops bigger and better And why not tax everybody for the benefit of everybody else and thereby make everybody rich" How perfectly splendid!

"Freight rates are not the cause of the present trouble. The railroads have 'advanced freight rates' on the brain Whatever ails them, financial difficulties, overcapitalization, general depression in business, oversupply of gold whatever the cause, they have just one remedy—advance freight rates, a sort of cure-all or panacea.

3,000,000 BUSHELS OF WHEAT START ABROAD

One Day Record Broken on Chicago Exchange—All Prices Up.

Chicago, Oct. 24—All 24-hour records for export business in wheat since European hostilities began were surpassed by the totals reached today, 3,000,000 bushels. The broadening out of trade was accompanied by rumors that agents of the German and English governments had been in active competition.

One result of the huge trans-Atlantic sales of wheat was to stimulate transactions in other staples, notably corn and provisions, so that the interest shown in the speculative pits, as well as at the sample tables was the greatest displayed for a long time

The excitement, however, such as characterized the early days of the war did not develop and the widest variation in price was a rise of 2⅛c in December wheat, a gain that was narrowed to 1¾c at the close Latest sales of the December option were at $1.17⅛, as compared with $1.15⅜ last night.

Italy was credited with paying today the top figures so far reached this season for cash wheat in the United States. The reason appeared to be the necessity of supplying Switzerland, which now has been cut off completely from grain shipments except through the one neighboring country to the south.

General need of wheat from Uncle Sam was specially emphasized today by advices that, despite recent rain, there was no likelihood of any exportable surplus in Australia and by reports that the yields in Canada were worse than had heretofore been made known. To a slight extent, other cereals as well were bullishly affected by the Germans' wholesale destruction of steamships that trade with Argentina

SALVATION ARMY AIDS BRITISH TOMMY ATKINS

London, Oct. 24, (by mail).—The Salvation Army has made a hit with Tommy Atkins. Three thousand of him may be seen any day at the recreation tent which the Salvation Army maintains at Colchester, devouring some 25 dozen pork pies, having a look at magazines and newspapers, writing letters home, and occasionally participating in some religious service. But the demands for food have been so great that the army has, as yet, had little time for song and prayer.

CARMAN DEFENSE CLOSES ITS CASE

Woman Accused of Crime Confident That She Will Be Acquitted—Attorneys Begin Arguments.

Mineola, N. Y. Oct 26—The defense of Mrs Florence Conklin Carman, on trial for the murder of Mrs Louise Lasley rested shortly before noon today Counsel prepared to sum up and indications were that the case would reach the jury late this afternoon

After testifying on cross examination and after listening to the testimony of her little daughter Elizabeth her parents Mr and Mrs Conklin her sister Mrs Ida Powell her niece Mrs Helen Powell Gotay and her husband Mr Edwin Carman, the accused woman returned to her cell last night predicting that the jury would return a verdict of acquittal

Mrs Carman's face was wreathed in smiles when she entered the courtroom. She bowed to several friends, kissed her daughter Elizabeth greeted her husband with a nod and smile and chatted with him, and her lawyers until the proceedings began

Rudolph Lowe the first witness, testified he was on his way to Dr Carman's office and within 15 feet of the window when the shot which killed Mrs Lasley was fired Lowe heard the shot looked up and saw a man run across the lawn and leap over the fence

Although very deaf, Loewe was positive he heard the shot The witness said that after hearing the shot he looked into Dr. Carman's office and saw the doctor with a woman in his arms

Loewe said he looked into the doctor's office for about 30 seconds and that before he left the scene he saw a door open and a woman in white enter the office By that time he said the woman who had been shot was lying on the floor

There were two women in front of the house the witness added He said he also saw a man he did not know standing in the vestibule to the doctor's office

John J Dunbar, a Freeport policeman testified that after the murder he brought bloodhounds to the Carman house He said he saw the broken picket in the fence mentioned in the testimony yesterday The picket was opposite the broken window, he said. On the premises next door he found near the fence a place where a man's feet had been apparently the man had been standing there for some time

After bringing the bloodhounds to the house, Dunbar said he took them to the trampled ground and they went from there to the broken picket. Then the dogs were allowed to smell the window sill They growled, ran all the way around the house, came up to the place where the picket was broken, left the premises and went west as far as Lynabrook, three miles away where they stopped, having lost the trail

On cross examination Dunbar said he had taken the screen off the window the night of the murder, propping it up with a piece of new shingle which he found near a small outhouse being built in the rear of the Carman residence. The dogs, after smelling the window sill, went to this house, he said The district attorney sought to show that the animals followed Dunbar's back trail

RUSSIANS REPORT KAISER NARROWLY ESCAPED CAPTURE

Central News Correspondent Says German Emperor Had Narrow Escape In Vicinity of Warsaw.

SAY GERMANS ARE FLEEING

Retirement From Vistula Continues—Austrian Resistance Stubborn — Muscovite Army Pounding Hard.

London Oct 26—The Petrograd correspondent of the Central News, sends the following

Soldiers from the Warsaw front say that Emperor William was personally on the field of battle He was almost taken a captive, barely escaping by automobile

That the Russians generally speaking continue to hold the upper hand in the eastern area of war is the gist of most of the dispatches reaching London and accepting this as true England thinks that the putting of Germany on the defensive in this territory will prevent her from transferring any forces to the western arena.

The French official statement today says of the eastern situation

"The Germans are retreating to the south of Warsaw as well as to the west of Ivangorod and Nova Alexandria. Desperate fighting continues in Galicia on the Sandomir front At Przemysl the Russians have taken 2,000 Austrians prisoners.

Petrograd reports a continuation of the pursuit of the Germans retreating from Warsaw and admits an unexpectedly stubborn resistance to the Russian offensive from the Austrians on the San while the official Vienna report after detailing success before Przemysl and dashing movement towards the Vistula, admits that the Russians were permitted to cross the San in several places.

Petrograd describes the situation as follows

"The energetic offensive of our armies, which have crossed the Vistula on a large front, encountered no resistance on the part of the Germans who continue to retreat the official communication issued by the Russian general staff tonight says

"In the trenches below Ivangorod we took large quantities of war stores and ammunition abandoned by the reserve corps of the Prussian guard in its hasty retreat

"The Austrian armies continue to fight with stubbornness on the Vistula, on the San, and particularly to the south of Przemysl

HERE IS BATCH OF NEWS FROM GERMANY

Officials Issue Information Concerning Alleged Condition of Allies.

Berlin (by wireless), Oct 26.—Information was given out from official quarters in Berlin today as follows

"The entire socialist party of Italy again has decided to support a policy of the strictest neutrality

"The Manchester (England) Guardian says it has received hundreds of letters from British women who have returned to England from Germany, and declare that they were well treated while in this country

"Prisoners of war also are well treated. In view of these facts the destruction and looting of German shops in the Borough of Dempford, London, was a fit of hysteria.

"The chief of the Russian socialist party has pointed out officially to Emile Vandervelde, the Belgian socialist leader, that a victory of the Russian government would mean the strengthening of the anti-democratic policy in Russia and abroad. The Russian government would then become the center of the reactionary world. The policy, therefore, of the Russian proletariat would under no circumstances be to help the Russian government.

"The London Economist declares that 500,000 British workmen are out of employment in the British cotton industry

In the newspaper Popolo Romano, the Italian general, Bompiani, estimates the strength of the German army at 5,000,000 thoroughly instructed soldiers and 4,000,000 recruits.

"The Montenegrins are much depressed over the inefficiency of the French blockade of the Dalmatian coast."

STOCK EXCHANGES TO OPEN EARLY IN 1915

Bankers, Reserve Board Members and English Representatives Discuss Conditions.

Washington, Oct 26 — Financial forces of the government the wisdom of some of the most prominent men in the American banking world and the friendly counsel of representatives of Great Britain were turned toward a solution of the problem of a readjustment of the foreign exchange market to meet conditions which have arisen as a consequence of the European war

For more than three hours the federal reserve board Sir George Paish and Basil B Blackett representing the English treasury, and some of the best known bankers in New York, discussed the situation in all its aspects According to those present, there was not a note of pessimism heard to mar the harmony of the conference, and there was every reason to believe that all the problems which loomed so large on the financial horizon a few months ago will be solved without great difficulty

Here are the salient points discussed by the conference and the results anticipated

American bankers stand ready to pay their obligations to England in cash The $100,000,000 gold pool already formed and $80,000,000 raised by a New York syndicate to meet New York city's obligations probably will suffice to satisfy England Payment of this total may not be necessary

The New York and London stock exchanges will not be opened possibly before the beginning of 1915. A conference between committees of the two exchanges will consider opening beforehand

The federal reserve board is to hasten consideration of the proposed cotton loan fund plan designed in part to give bottom to the cotton market.

The cotton exchanges in New York, New Orleans and Liverpool to be opened as soon as possible. The New York exchange probably will confer through a commitee with the Liverpool exchange before such action is taken.

A committee consisting of Benjamin Strong, jr A. H. Wiggin, James Brown of New York, Governor Hamlin and Paul M Warburg, of the reserve board, will hold further conferences with Sir George Paish about adjustment of the plans Any such plan would have to be submitted to the British government.

TRADE OF FRANCE IS AN OPEN MARKET NOW

Commerce Aggregating $360,000,000 Yearly Must Be Placed Elsewhere.

Paris Oct 26 (by mail)—French trade aggregating 1,800,000,000 francs, or $360,000,000, a year is thrown into the market as a result of the war Such was the total value of goods purchased by France last year from Germany and Austria, the balance of trade being in favor of Germany to the amount of 205,000,000 francs, and in favor of Austria to the amount of 54,000,000 francs.

Local committees are being organized with a view to placing this business to the best advantage The committee of industrial and commercial defense is taking up the interests of small manufacturers, who have not been in touch with the foreign consumer in a way to enable them to make new connections directly Proposals are being made to English business organizations with a view to an exchange of visits in the two countries of representatives of commercial and industrial concerns. The importance of this work to the United States may be understood from the fact that of the purchases from Germany last year there were 177,000,000 francs in machinery, while France purchased from the United States only 57,000,000 francs in this line. Germany supplied 103,000,000 francs in cereals, while the United States supplied 35,000,000.

LOOTING PRIVILEGES DENIED GERMAN ARMY

The Hague, (via London), Oct 26.—Major General Von Bodenhausen, military commander of Antwerp, has issued a proclamation, countersigned by Burgomaster Devos, of Antwerp, warning the German troops that they are not permitted to commandeer anything whatsoever, and that this privilege is only allowed to officers in accordance with the necessities of military occupation.

Anything the soldiers need they must buy, the general's proclamation recites, and he strictly forbids them to break into shops. Antwerp, he says, was only surrendered on the understanding that the troops would not misuse their power

"OBSERVER" COMES AGAIN WITH A FEW MORE IDEAS FOR YOU

BY "OBSERVER"

Here comes the old maid—or old bachelor again (we'll leave the sex to you) to tell you something about your children, first, and then to give you a hint on a useful household article that I feel sure you will appreciate.

In speaking of children in this article I mean especially those boys and girls in school. Do they get enough sleep? The eminent authority, Dr. L. Emmett Holt, says every child under sixteen years of age should sleep not less than nine hours every night.

Another point too frequently overlooked is the drinking of sufficient pure water. The great American trouble is constipation. Water helps largely to overcome it. A drink of pure water the first thing in the morning and the last thing at night is conducive to good health.

Most children bolt thier food in order to get back to thier play. Insist on thorough mastication. Attend to their teeth at least once in six months. Decayed teeth are a camping ground for germs. The eyes and throat should be looked after during school months. Many headachs and nervous trouble could be traced to the eyes.

Avoid excitement, threats, or the arousing of fear. Fear paralyzes and does incalculable harm.

A HOUSEHOLD HINT

Purchase an inch wide roll of surgeon's adhesive plaster at the drug store. it will prove a friend in scores of ways. We have used it as follows:

To wrap around a cut finger. It stays in place better than a bandage

To put over a blister.

To put inside the heel of a shoe worn rough so that it breaks the stocking

To fasten plants to up-right supports.

A strip placed inside rubbers, umbrella etc makes a white surface upon which the name may be written in black ink.

A leaky faucet may be temporarily mended with it.

A painful corn may be protected by cutting a circular piece with a hole in the middle out of chamois, placing this so that the corn comes through the opening and binding the chamois, in place with adhesive.

NOVEMBER

Perhaps the greatest crime for which November ever has been responsible was the patenting of the gramaphone in 1887 Remember the gramaphone? But of course you do. It used to be the whole show at every picnic, and we gladly paid a dime to poke its rubber tubes into our ears to hear a scraping noise that sounded something like a human voice. But, weak as its vocal chords were, the old gramaphone has sired some wonderful progenies The modern machines can talk as plainly, as long, and almost as fast as any woman.

November also is responsible for Italian Grand Opera, it having been born in New York during this month of 1824. We cannot say, however, that grand opera has kept pace with the gramaphone in improving itself. And still another false alarm in November was the dissolving of the oil trust in 1911. We expected much of that dissolve—and have gone right along expecting every since.

Hannibal the Great was born in November—247 B. C. We were very young at that time, and living some distance from the Hannibal home, never learned much about him. Andrew Carnegie, too, came into this world in November—1837 During his seventy-seven years among us Mr. Carnegie has made a great many friends—most of whom wish they were a relative. We do not know just what Mr. Carnegie's income is, but unless he sometimes overdraws his bank account considerably, it is greater than ours

November, so the poets say, cheerless, sober, gray, and seer, but I have always figured it the greatest month of all the year No melancholly thoughts are mine because the green has turned to brown—to me it seems new life is put in all the countryside and town.

When the frost is on the pumpkin, and the fodder's in the shock, then our appetite is sharpened for the dishes piping hot—Yaller Jersey sweet p'taters, spare ribs, gravy, biscuits, too. I can see no melancholly in such days as these. Can you?

A Refugee

By EUNICE BLAKE

My sister Rose and I were both girls of a keen sensibility. We were inseparable, and often when together Rose would mention something that I was thinking about, or perhaps it was I who would mention something that Rose was thinking about. For a long while we considered this thinking about the same thing at the same time simply due to coincidence, but at last we came to wonder if it were not thought transference.

When this solution was first suggested we both laughed at the idea, but after a few more very pointed coincidences of the kind we believed it to be true.

Our first separation occurred in the spring of the breaking out of the war between the triple alliance and the triple entente. Rose found an opportunity to go abroad with a party of friends, who took her along as their guest. With much reluctance at leaving me she accepted the invitation and sailed when the annual summer hegira of Americans commenced. During the month of July I, who needed rest instead of the excitement of travel, went into the country as far as I could get from a railroad and where the only newspaper was a weekly journal with no news in it except what was of interest to the surrounding farmers.

One night I dreamed that I was in a foreign city. I say I dreamed it, for my consciousness was more like a dream than any other sensation. I was in a hotel situated on a square. I looked out through a window on the square below, thronged with people all in a state of intense excitement. Some of them were throwing up their caps and shouting, others were hurrying in and out of the houses, while cab drivers were guiding their horses or autocars were endeavoring to get through the crowds without running persons down.

Then without being conscious of any transition I was on a railway train. Every town it passed through was filled with soldiers, and everybody seemed to be bent on doing something in the least possible time. In the fields women were gathering in the harvest, not a man being there to help. Mules were dragging great cannon along roads, and locomotives were drawing other munitions of war on platform cars. Everybody and everything was moving in the direction our train was moving.

By and by we passed into another country. There were long drawn breaths of relief by my fellow passengers. We were in a valley on one side of which loomed fortifications into which soldiers were hurrying There were two lines of these works, and they extended about a city, almost encircling it. These two lines were so filled with men that in the distance they looked like myriads of insects

Our train entered the city, and I, with others, was hurried to another train. Soon I was again flying across the country. Now the people instead of hurrying in the direction I was going hurried in the other direction. Soldiers were marching in great multitudes on the road, and presently I saw some bearing the English flag There seemed to be less worry on the part of all of us, our only course of anxiety being to catch a steamer, which was to sail from a coast we were approaching.

The next phase of this sensation was running through a fog on the ocean without lights and without a sound to indicate our presence. None of us slept, and most of us were in the cabin grouped in terror Stewards were going from room to room stuffing pillows against the portholes or hanging curtains over them to conceal from without every ray of light.

My dream, my vision or whatever it may be called faded away In the morning I awoke feeling as if I had been flayed. In dreams we never see anything we have not seen while awake. I had seen sights that were absolutely new to me. I could not understand it. Naturally I connected it with something that had happened to Rose abroad.

So impressed with this was I that I determined to go to the city I was driven twenty miles to a station Along the route the country people were pursuing their daily vocations, some of them getting in hay, others moving leisurely over the roads. When I arrived at the station I saw a man standing on the platform reading a newspaper. I saw in big black letters running across the page:

"The Belgians Still Hold the Forts at Liege."

I asked him what it meant, and he told me that all Europe had suddenly burst into a war flame. I bought a newspaper and read an announcement of the arrival of a ship at New York from Antwerp bringing American passengers from Europe, some of whom had left Germany on the last train that was allowed to come through. I wondered if Rose had not made her escape from Munich, where she was when I had last heard from her, and come out on that train.

I reached home in the evening. As I went up the steps the front door was opened, and out rushed Rose, and, throwing her arms about me, she exclaimed:

"I have escaped; but, oh, what a harrowing experience!"

When I told her of my dream, giving her such impressions of scenes that were vivid, she told me that I had gone through in my dream what she had gone through in reality.

lfalfa Produces $75 Per Acre In Muscatine County

lfalfa growing is not an extensive industry in Muscatine y. One of the noted attempts has been made by Sam T. tt, living just outside of the city of Muscatine. The crop commanded $15 per ton unbaled. A considerable amount of the product old on the farm.

A WARTIME BLUFF

It Was Worked by Stonewall Jackson, and It Won.

HIS MOST IMPORTANT ORDER

It Was Given by the Cool Headed Confederate Commander to a Confused Federal Soldier, and It Was Promptly Obeyed—A Lucky Escape.

Perhaps the most important order that Stonewall Jackson ever issued—certainly the most vital to himself—is not in the official war records. The order was given in person by Jackson to a northern artillery officer as he stood in full uniform ready for battle beside his gun, and, strangest of all, was at once executed by him, with the result that the battle was lost by the Federal arms.

Jackson's action on this occasion furnishes a striking illustration of the value of a cool head and presence of mind in an emergency—on an important occasion when the entirely unexpected happens—at a time when wavering or indecision would result in disaster. That he was able instantly to grasp the situation and daringly master it is a tribute to his quickness of judgment and his courage.

It was on a spring morning in 1862, just before the battle of Port Republic. Jackson in advance of his troops, with only a single escort, galloped across the bridge over the Shenandoah river into the town, which stood on the east bank. Learning that the army of General Shields was still a good many miles away and confident that his own troops would be in possession long before the enemy, he rode to a residence at the farther end of the village, where he spent nearly an hour.

But meantime the energetic Shields—whom Jackson declared to be his most formidable opponent—had thrust forward a small, swift column to occupy Port Republic, seize the bridge and halt Jackson's advance. So rapidly did it move that it gained both objects without firing a shot. More than that, Jackson was a prisoner—if any one had known it!

Jackson, in utter ignorance of the disastrous change, mounted his horse and ambled down the main street to the bridge. What was his astonishment to see groups of soldiers—in blue!—busily moving to and fro about the bridgehead and throwing up intrenchments and fortifications. Planted on a little knoll that commanded the bridge and its approaches was a formidable field gun.

Fortunately for Jackson, the recent campaigns up and down the valley had faded both blue and gray uniforms into a nondescript drab. As Jackson sat on his horse and watched the busy scene he formed his plan swiftly. He could not go back. He must cross that bridge. That was his only chance. It was the frowning field gun that he feared. He must put it out of commission long enough to get beyond its range. Throwing up his hand to attract attention, he shouted to the officer in command of the gun:

"What are you doing with that gun up there? I didn't order it there, and I don't want it there!" There were authority and petulance in his voice as he added, "Limber up and run it over on that knob over there!"

The officer at the gun, thinking that he had to deal with some superior officer recently arrived, hastened to obey without question, explaining in self defense that he had understood his orders otherwise.

Sitting on Little Sorrel while the Federal troops worked busily about him, Jackson calmly waited until the gun was lumbering off to its new position. Then he rode quietly across the bridge and up the other bank until he was well out of musket range. Then he turned, waved his hand to the astonished Federals, and, putting spurs to his horse, galloped away from the rain of bullets that pattered harmlessly in the rear.

Had he been captured the Confederate victory at Port Republic which he won a few hours later would not have happened. The able and energetic Shields would have defeated his troops, stunned by his loss.—Youth's Companion.

Palace and Hovel.

Probably in Constantinople, which has been described as the "city of hovels," there is a greater contrast between the public and private buildings than in any other city in the world. The streets are narrow, tortuous and dirty, and even the better class of private houses are mean in comparison with those of a similar class in other countries. On the other hand, the mosques and palaces are magnificent in size, design and materials of construction, most of them being of marble, white or gray. The seraglio is one of the finest buildings in Europe.

Often Happens So.

"I wonder," says old Pop Crabbe, "why it is that when you've stood around in a store for twenty minutes and finally given your order half a dozen clerks immediately rush up and ask if you've been waited on."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

MODERN WAR IS MERCIFUL

Under Existing Conditions the Wounded Are Given a Fair Chance to Recover Health.

A general impression is that with powerful weapons of great precision greater loss of life and greater pain are caused. The view is almost certainly inaccurate The modern bullet, says the Scotsman, unless it is of the soft-nosed type, is on the whole merciful, and either kills outright or gives its victim a fair chance of recovery It does not as a rule, mutilate.

The ambulance corps was practically unknown 50 years ago and not only is aid brought more rapidly to the wounded but is far more effective than in the prior days Rapidity of conveyance has increased beyond all comparison In the present war it is true to say that in many cases men are being treated in a British hospital 24 hours of receiving their wounds the risk of being hit is the chances of recovery from injury have been immensely increased

Miss Carroll says that side positions will prevail and that most of the steps will be executed with the gentleman walking at the side of his partner The half and half promises to sweep over the country on a popular wave It appeals because of the beauty of the steps and the restfulness of the dance The hesitation is somewhat slower and shows a strong tendency toward the dip. EUROPE IN DESPERATE NEED OF RED CROSS HELP

The leading editorial in the European war number of the American Red Cross Magazine which is the regular October issue, appears under the caption Help the Brother That Has Fallen" and follows

"'God of our fathers known of old—
Lord of our far-flung battle line—
Beneath whose awful hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine—
Lord God of Hosts be with us yet,
Lest we forget lest we forget'

"Many Americans and others dwelling in lands now enjoying the manifold blessings of peace and plenty have been dazed by the enormity and awfulness of a war in which the greater part of the old world is engaged or else we have been slow to realize how widespread and terrible is the suffering in the path of the great armies and navies pitted against each other in the catalysmal combat

Nothing so calamitous nothing so blighting, no thing so bloody nothing so inhumane, nothing so freighted with agonies, sorrows and tears has happened since the mighty hordes of the middle ages engaged in sanguinary conflict

"No earthly hand can make full reparation for the havoc being wrought No human effort can lighten the burden of grief which has fallen heavily on countless thousands of homes where fathers husbands and brothers have gone to return no more Rarely if ever recorded in the history of mankind that the Grim Reaper has gathered so rich and so bountiful a harvest of human lives

Darkening the sky like a black storm cloud from which are loosed all of the thunderbolts of Jove the shadow of death hovers over Europe

You who are reading this recall to mind for a moment the intense grief you suffered as a result of the death of some one dear to you or how your heart was wrung when you witnessed such an one writhing in pain from some wasting sickness or cruel injury Then try to imagine many many thousands of persons just as dear to others experiencing at once the suffering you saw and many thousands more feeling the agony you felt By some such process only can we in America make ourselves even vaguely comprehend the existing conditions amongst the peoples in the war-stricken lands beyond the oceans

Perhaps the destruction of life and property has been so tremendous that it has appeared to us at a distance of little use to try to give relief But to such thought should be entertained for a second It not only is very needful but a bounden duty for everybody to do his utmost no matter how trivial that utmost may seem to ameliorate the suffering of the fallen brother Therefore the American Red Cross, in cooperation with all foreign Red Cross organizations urges most earnestly and begs with all its heart that Americans give as liberally as their means will permit in support of the relief work abroad

"Hundreds of Americans have contributed generously already and have enabled 'the humanitarian arm of the United States' to reach across the seas and deliver to the sorely distressed countries practical relief in the form of about a dozen hospital units with three surgeons and 12 enrolled Red Cross nurses to the unit equipped with large quantities of surgical and hospital supplies A ship was chartered for this purpose and started across the Atlantic on its mission of mercy in September

"But the American Red Cross feels that this relief expedition is only a small offering when the wide extent of the misery and woe is considered It should be appreciated that every dollar contributed to the Red Cross will lessen the pain and perhaps save the life of a wounded soldier Just think what that means! A small donation may result eventually in the restoration of a father to his children or of a son to his mother Can anybody overlook humanitarian opportunities like this?

Let all Americans and all others who will take up the battle cry of the Red Cross! Let them thunder it so that it will reverberate around the world.

It is 'Neutrality—Humanity'"

How Long Will War Last?

From the Outlook.

A dozen eminent English specialists in finance who had demonstrated not long ago that a European war was impossible are now arguing that within a few months Germany will be quite bankrupt. German financial writers have for years pointed out that the wealth of England and France is very largely based on credit, and that credit functions only in times of peace

But I do not believe either side will have to throw up the sponge because of lack of change. A French banker in 1910 told me that there was no chance of the little Christian nations in the Balkans going to war against Turkey "They haven't enough money," he said. They not only fought the war against Turkey, but as soon as that was finished they started a new war among themselves.

The question of food supply is equally uncertain Of course as long as the allies keep the command of the sea there is no danger of their starving But is there any chance of their bringing Germany to her knees with hunger? If Holland and Italy maintain their neutrality which means freedom to trade with both belligerents, it will be very hard to blockade Germany effectively But even if Germany and Austria are absolutely sealed up, it seems to me that the length of time they can [illegible] depends most of all on how well the national commissary is organized In every community an immense amount of nourishment is normally wasted. There are a great many unemployed now in Germany who might be put to work making hothouses to grow vegetables through the winter Sugar beets could be eaten instead of crystalized There are no end of expedients by which the food supply could be conserved and increased.

Large as the German and French armies are [illegible] neighborhood of 4,000,000 each [illegible] a drain to their supply of men. If they use up these 8,000,000 men now, there are no more in sight for years to come till the boys grow up At the end of our civil war the north had more men in the field than at any time before, and had not begun to run short of men But the theory of modern war is to put every available man in the field within the first month The English—and the Russians, if they can find the equipment—can increase their armies. France and Germany and Austria cannot

Another consideration is that the supply of arms and ammunition while great, is limited and cannot be quickly replaced. Take for example such very necessary equipment as field artillery A modern cannon with its recoil absorber is an intricate mechanism. The life of each gun is known just as a target's figure out the average life of men. Some of the great guns are said to be dangerous after 50 shots other lighter guns are good for 500 [illegible] But even normal wear and tear a certain number of guns are captured more are smashed by the enemy's shells

But today war is so technical and complicated a matter that a nation might have to sue for peace because it had exhausted its supply of something that Napoleon never heard of Gas for dirigible balloons, for instance was a thing about which he never worried

A modern army might be entirely disorganized by the failure of its supply of insulated copper wire for field telephones. Fuel for transportation purposes is an even more important item

The Woman's War and the Real War.

By S M Crothers, in the Atlantic

We are able to understand the so-called militancy in England better than we could a short time ago We see its relation to the movement for suffrage to be more or less accidental Now that a great war has come we see how feverish was the condition of the peoples who looked forward to it with suppressed passion and vague foreboding Not knowing just whom they were to fight, but feeling that fighting was inevitable, they conceived of everything in militant form.

There were to be not only wars between Slav and Teuton, but between Celt and Saxon, class wars and industrial wars without number Even the efforts in behalf of the public health were conceived of under warlike imagery There were wars proclaimed against the fly and the mosquito and the germs of tuberculosis.

Earnest women, perceiving that they had been denied civil rights, and accepting the prevalent philosophy, imagined that when they were breaking tradesmen's windows and destroying works of art and setting fire to unguarded buildings they were making war. It was supposed to be that appeal to force through which all human rights have been won. Then suddenly to those who were playing with fire, the great conflagration came. War, grim and relentless is upon the world. All make-believe militancies shrink into insignificance.

Roosevelt on "Drys."

From the Chicago Post

"Do you want to let the liquor interests dominate your parties, your public life and your government?"

When Colonel Roosevelt asked this courageous question in Ohio he propounded the "liquor problem" as it presents itself to thousands of Americans who are not directly interested in the knock-down-and-drag-out-fight between prohibition and "rum."

Always these observers have found the corrupt machines of both democratic and republican parties tied up with the evil liquor lobby It is so in this state in the senatorial campaign.

And decent Americans have revolted against the dominance of their politics by this special interest just as they revolted against railroad dominance a decade ago.

Colonel Roosevelt has put his finger upon a vital practical issue in our politics today

Italian Attitude Toward the War.

The natural impulsive chivalry of the Latin nature would undoubtedly cause the proletariat to sink their domestic difference, and fly to arms were their nation or racial sympathies awakened. No government would have the slightest difficulty in carrying with it the vast majority of the Italian people in a war against Austria in defense of the Italians of Trieste or the Trentino, or against Germany in behalf of the Latins in France But no government would find it possible to unite the country in a war of agression against nations of the Latin race, or to count on the support of the Italian masses in any war, unless their sympathies or passions were aroused. There can be no question but that Signore Salandra realized that a declaration of war against Russia or France would have been the signal for a general strike in Italy, which might have resulted in the fall of the dynasty.

MANY COMMODITIES MORE DANGEROUS THAN DYNAMITE TO CARRY

Chemicals Peril of Sailors—Some Give Off Gas When Exposed to Air.

From Titbits.

Ask the average landsmen what is the worst cargo for a ship to carry and he would probably say dynamite.

The sailor would differ. He would tell you that there are worse things with which to fill a ship's hold than even such a terrible explosive as dynamite.

Carbide of calcium, for instance, is a deal more dangerous than dynamite. This is the chemical from which accetylene gas is made, and the gas is constantly given off if the carbide is exposed to air. Some little time ago the Hamburg barque Hebe was towed into Plymouth sound in a disabled condition. Aboard her were 200 tons of carbide.

The commander in chief at Devonport at once ordered all the war vessels in the sound to take refuge in the Hamoaze, and forbade the Hebe to come in for repairs until the whole of her perilous cargo had been removed by a war department barge.

The cargo carried by the burnt Volturno was of a sort calculated to make a pretty bonfire. It included rags, peat moss, barrels of spirits, tar and oils, together with drums of various chemicals. Small wonder that water had little effect in subduing the flames.

Chemicals form a very dangerous cargo, especially acids such as nitric or sulphuric, which are both carried in tens of thousands of tons in the course of a year

Two years ago the Phoenix liner Michigan was caught in a gale while on a voyage westward across the Atlantic. She had a deckload of sulphuric and muriatic acid in metal drums.

A huge sea struck her bows and covered the forward deck, breaking a number of drums from their lashings and sending them crashing around the deck. The captain called for volunteers to throw the loose drums overboard. The men responded bravely, but some of the drums were cracked and leaking, and the deadly acid burnt the flesh like fire.

For an hour or more the battle went on. Man after man was forced to fall out and go below to get his wounds dressed. At last came another huge wave which ended the men's toil. It swept the deck from end to end, and when it passed the whole cargo of acid had gone, taking with it the lee rail.

All shipmasters dislike carrying drums of acid where they cannot be got at A Chilian ship put in at the Falkland islands, leaking badly. Her cargo was mainly drums of acid which had been packed in chalk. The acid had eaten through the drums and mixed with the chalk, so forming carbonic acid gas, which is the same as "choke damp."

Consequently the crew could not go below at all. Meantime the leaking acid had collected at the bottom of the hold and eaten away the iron frames of the ship, damaging her so badly that she was practically a wreck.

Cotton is another deadly cargo. If a little oil happens to touch raw cotton the result is what is called spontaneous combustion. A single bale of cotton partially saturated with such an oil as boiled linseed, and lying at the bottom of a hold, is every bit as dangerous as a slow match attached to a bomb.

Other forms of cargo are dangerous to sailors rather than ships. Coffee, for instance. While the odor of green coffee is at first not unpleasant, it rapidly palls upon the nerves of smelling. In damp weather it becomes dreadful. It seems to impregnate everything in the ship, and eventually the crew lose all appetite and often become seriously ill.

Sugar is as bad. Put some hundreds of tons of cane sugar in casks in the hold and let the ship steam through a belt of hot weather. The odor is sickening; you cannot get the sweet taste out of your mouth. The men simply crave vinegar or lemon juice—anything sour. Deliver us from sugar is the sailor's prayer.

Onions give off fumes which are actually deadly. The Yarra, a French steamer bringing a cargo of onions from Alexandria, lost one man, and had three others rendered insensible by fumes rising from the tons of onions in her hold.

ATE HORSE MEAT IN FIRST SIEGE OF PARIS

In the Woman's Home Companion a French woman gives her personal recollections of the siege of Paris, at the close of the Franco-Prussian war, when the half starved people resorted to the most desperate efforts to obtain food. What they were forced to eat is described in the following extract from the article:

"For four months I never saw a piece of bread. A few potatoes we had, but long before the siege was over they had gone. All horses disappeared from the streets. The government took them, and the elephants in the parks. We were issued a card on which was indicated how much horse or elephant meat would be alloted to use every four days. Horse meat was not bad, but dogs—I could not bear it. And there were those who ate much worse than dogs.

"I walked home alone one afternoon in the dusk: Two old men, beyond the age of military service, walked in front of me, and as they came opposite our house one stopped and snatching something ghastly from the ground, hit it in a bag. 'It will mean food tomorrow,' he said triumphantly to his companion.

"Afterward I discovered what is was that they had snatched up so eagerly. It was our cat."

The Unity of Life.

H. Fielding-Hall, in the Atlantic.

There is nothing, I think, that brings home to one more conclusively the unity of life, and, therefore, the unity of knowledge of that life, than the attempt to study any particular subject by itself and confine yourself to it alone. You find very soon that you cannot do so. No aspect of life can be separated from the rest and understood even in any small degree without some knowledge of the rest of life. No part of life stands alone. Every phenomenon of life is the result, not of one or two causes alone, but of the interaction of innumerable causes. To get near the understanding of only one item you must be able to estimate more or less truly all the forces that make life, and the objective of life. As with the eddy of a river, to estimate it you must know not merely the eddy but much also of the river, its volume and its speed, the density of its waters, the configuration of its banks and its general direction. The observation of the eddy only would lead you into the wildest fallacies.

With [illegible] capital done in this time to [illegible] an opportunity? How many [illegible] bought or started to buy [illegible] the American flag? How many [illegible] it contracted to have built?

The answer is that it has done [illegible] It is buying no ships. It is building [illegible] ships. Aside from the activity [illegible] two large concerns in transferring [illegible] ships from the British to the [illegible] flag, which has not increased our transportation facilities by [illegible] this private capital has done [illegible] overcome the great emergency [illegible] great opportunity. Trouble With Our City Govern

The basic difficulty, as I conceive that we made the mistake of fastening the forms of our city government [illegible] the governments of the nation and states; and that, having thus set up a system of administrative machinery ly unsuited to its purposes, we proceed logically perhaps, to run our cities with reference to their own needs and business interests, but upon the issues of national politics. The fact that the administration of a city has nothing what[illegible] do with divisions of opinion upon [illegible] national policy has but recently come to us, and is still strange doctrine to parts of the land. Thus—to cite one instance that sums up the system is the question of the choice of a city commissioner of street cleaning, whose sole it would be to clean the streets effectively and to help protect the public health would be determined according to [illegible] held by the voters upon the tariff, currency, or the proper method of regulating the trusts; and the so-called "commissioner," when so appointed, must depended upon to turn both contractors subordinate appointments over to [illegible] who had made him politically possible When we consider such a situation [illegible] fectively, it seems difficult to conceive anything more ridiculous. And so the American people, who pride themselves upon their keenness in business and have for generations tolerated a system handling the purely business interests their communities that sets aside the principles of business, and has resulted an appalling bill of waste in every city the land.

A Question of Degree.

"Gertie," said a mother to her five-year-old daughter, "here's a dime run down to the drug store and get me a bottle of sweet oil."

Gertie started down the street, but soon came running back to ask: "How much sweet do you want it, mamma?"

A bottle of wine left in Philadelphia when the British evacuated that city during the revolution has been presented to a local society and will be drunk in 1992 when the society will celebrate its centennial and the wine will be 100 years old.

The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet

BY

BURTON E. STEVENSON

Copyright, 1913, by Burton E. Stevenson.

CHAPTER VI.—(Continued.)

"'I don't want to be disturbed, Rogers,' he said, and come in here and shut the door after him.

"It was maybe twenty minutes after that that the doorbell rung, and when I opened the door, there was a woman standing on the steps."

He stopped and swallowed once or twice, as though his throat was dry, and I saw that his fingers were twitching nervously.

"Did you know her?" questioned Grady.

Rogers loosened his collar with a convulsive movement.

"No, sir, I'd never seen her before," he answered hoarsely.

"Describe her."

Rogers closed his eyes, as though in an effort of recollection.

"She wore a heavy veil, sir, so that I couldn't see her very well, but the first thing I noticed was her eyes—they were so bright, they seemed to burn right through me. Her face looked white behind the veil, and I could see how red her lips were—I didn't like her looks, sir, from the first."

"How was she dressed?"

"In a dark gown, sir, cut so skimpy that I knowed she was French before she spoke."

"Ah!" said Grady. "She was French, was she?"

"Yes, sir; though she could speak some English. She asked for Mr. Vantine. I told her Mr. Vantine was busy. And then she said something very fast about how she must see him, and all the time kept edging in and in, till the first thing I knowed she was inside the door and then she just pulled the door out of my hand and shut it. I ask you, sir, is that the way a lady would behave?"

"No," said Grady, "I dare say not. But go ahead—and take your time."

Rogers had gained his self-confidence, and he went ahead almost glibly.

"'See here, madam,' says I, 'we've xhad enough trouble here today with Frenchies, and if you don't get out quietly, why, I'll have to put you out.'

"'I must Mistaire Vangtine,' she says, very fast. 'I must Mistaire Vangtine. It is most necessarie that I see Mistaire Vangtine.'

"'Then I'll have to put you out,' says I, and took hold of her arm. And at that she screamed and jerked herself away, and I grabbed her again, and just then Mr. Vantine opened the door there and came out into the hall.

"'What's all this, Rogers,' he says. 'Who is this party?'

"But before I could answer, that wild cat had rushed over to him and began to reel off a string of French so fast I wondered how she got her breath. And Mr. Vantine looked at her kind of surprised at first, and then he got more interested, and finally he asked her in and shut the door, and that was the last I saw of them."

"You mean you didn't let the woman out?" demanded Grady.

"Yes, sir, that's just what I mean. I thought if Mr. Vantine wanted to talk with her, well and good; that was his business, not mine; so I went back to the pantry to help the cook with the silver, expecting to hear the bell every minute. But the bell didn't ring, and after maybe half an hour, I came out in the hall again to see if the woman had gone; and I walked past the door of this room but didn't hear nothing; and then I went on to the front door, and was surprised to find it wasn't latched."

"Maybe you hadn't latched it," suggested Grady.

"It has snap lock, sir; when that woman slammed it shut, I heard it catch."

"You're sure of that?"

"Quite sure, sir."

"What did you do then?"

"I closed the door, sir, and then come back along the hall. I felt uneasy, some way; and I stood outside the door there listening; but I couldn't hear nothing; and then I tapped, but there wasn't no answer; so I tapped louder, with my heart somehow working right up into my mouth. And still there wasn't no answer, so I just opened the door and looked in—and the first thing I saw was him—"

Rogers stopped suddenly, and caught at his throat again.

"I'll be all right in a minute, sir," he gasped. "It takes me this way sometimes."

"No hurry" Grady assured him, and then, when his breath was coming easier, "What did you do then?"

"I was so scared I couldn't scarcely stand, sir; but I managed to get to the foot of the stairs and yell for Parks, and he come running down—and that's all I remember, sir."

"The woman wasn't here?"

"No, sir."

"Did you look through the rooms?"

"No, sir; when I found the front door open, I knowed she'd gone out. She hadn't shut the door because she was afraid I'd hear her."

"That sounds probable," agreed Grady. "But what makes you think she killed Vantine?"

"Well, sir," answered Rogers, slowly, "I guess I oughtn't to have said that; but finding the door open that way, and then coming on Mr. Vantine sort of upset me—I didn't know just what I was saying."

"You don't think so now, then?" questioned Grady, sharply.

"I don't know what to think, sir."

"You say you never saw the woman before?"

"Never, sir."

"Had she ever been here before?"

"I don't think so, sir. The first thing she asked was if this was where Mr. Vantine lived."

Grady nodded.

"Very good, Rogers," he said. "I'll be offering you a place on the force next. Would you know this woman if you saw her again?

Rogers hesitated.

"I wouldn't like to say sure, sir," he answered, at last. "I might and I might not."

"Red lips and a white face and bright eyes aren't much to go on," Grady pointed out. "Can't you give us a closer description?"

"I'm afraid not, sir. I just got a general impression, like, of her face through her veil."

"You say you didn't search these rooms?"

"No, sir. I didn't come inside the door."

"Why not?"

"I was afraid to, sir."

"Afraid to?"

"Yes, sir; I'm afraid to be here now."

"Did Parks come in?"

"No, sir; I guess he felt the same way I did."

"Then how did you know Vantine was dead? Why didn't you try to help him?"

"One look was enough to tell me that wasn't no use," said Rogers, and glanced, with visible horror, at the crumpled form on the floor.

Grady looked at him keenly for a moment; but there seemed to be no reason to doubt his story. Then the detective looked about the room.

"There's one thing I don't understand," he said, "and that is why Vantine should want all these lights. What was he doing in here?"

"I couldn't be sure, sir; but I suppose he was looking at the furniture he brought over from Europe. He was a collector, you know, sir. There are five or six pieces in the next room."

Without a word, Grady arose and passed into the room adjoining, we after him; only Rogers remained seated where he was. I remember glancing back over my shoulder and noting how he huddled forward in his chair, as though crushed by a great weight, the instant our backs were turned.

But I forgot Rogers in contemplation of the scene before me.

The inner room was ablaze with light, and the furniture stood haphazard about it, just as I had seen it earlier in the day. Only one thing had been moved. That was the Boule cabinet.

It had been carried to the center of the room, and placed in the full glare of the light from the chandelier. It stood there blazing with arrogant beauty, a thing apart.

Who had helped Vantine place it there, I wondered? Neither Rogers nor Parks had mentioned doing so. I turned back to the outer room.

Rogers was sitting crouched forward in his chair, his hands over his eyes, and I could feel him jerk with nervousness as I touched him on the shoulder.

"Oh, is it you, Mr. Lester?" he gasped. "Pardon me, sir; I'm not at all myself, sir."

"I can see that," I said, soothingly; "and no wonder. I just wanted to ask you—did you help move any of the furniture in the room yonder?"

"Help move it, sir?"

"Yes—help change the position of any of it since this afternoon?"

"No, sir; I haven't touched any of it, sir."

"That's all right, then," I said, and turned back into the inner room.

Vantine had said that he intended examining the cabinet in detail at the first opportunity; I remembered how his eyes had gleamed as he looked at it; how his hand had trembled as he caressed the arabesques. No doubt he was making that examination when he had heard a woman's cry and had gone out into the hall to see what the matter was.

Then he and the woman had entered the anteroom together; he had closed the door; and then • • •

Like a lightning flash, a thought leaped into my brain—a reason—an explanation—wild, improbable, absurd, but still an explanation!

I choked back the cry which rose to my lips: I gripped my hands behind me, in a desperate attempt to hold myself in check, and, fascinated as by a deadly serpent, I stood staring at the cabinet.

For there, I felt certain, lay the clue to the mystery!

CHAPTER VII.

ROGER GETS A SHOCK.

Grady, Simmonds and Goldberger examined the room minutely, for they seemed to feel that the secret of the tragedy lay somewhere within its four walls; but I watched them only absently, for I had lost interest in the procedure. I was perfectly sure that they would find nothing in any way bearing upon the mystery. I heard Grady comment upon the fact that there was no door except the one opening into the ante-room, and saw them examine the window catches.

"Nobody could raise these windows without alarming the house," Grady said, and pointed to a tiny wire running along the woodwork. "There's a burglar alarm."

Simmonds assented, and finally the trio returned to the ante-room.

"We'd like to look over the rest of the house," Grady said to Rogers, who was sitting erect again, looking more like himself, and the four men went out into the hall together. I remained behind with Hughes and Freylinghuisen. They had lifted the body to the couch and were making a careful examination of it. Heavy at heart, I sat down near by and watched them.

That Philip Vantine should have been killed by enthusiasm for the hobby which had given him so much pleasure seemed the very irony of fate, yet such I believe to be the case. To be sure, there were various incidents which seemed to conflict with such a theory, and the theory itself seemed wild to the point of absurdity; but at least it was a ray of light in what had been utter darkness. I turned it over and over in my mind, trying to fit into it the happenings of the day—I must confess with very poor success. Freylinghuisen's voice brought me out of my reverie.

"The two cases are precisely alike," he was saying. "The symptoms are identical. And I'm certain we shall find paralysis of the heart and spinal cord in this case, just as I did in the other. Both men were killed by the same poison."

"Can you make a guess as to the nature of the poison?" Hughes inquired.

"Some variant of hydrocyanic acid, I fancy—the odor indicates that; but it must be about 50 times as deadly as hydrocyanic acid is."

They wandered away into a discussion of possible variants, so technical and besprinkled with abstruse words and formula that I could not follow them. Freylinghuisen, of course, had all this sort of thing at his fingers' ends—postmortems were his everyday occupation and no doubt he had been furbishing himself up, since this last one, in preparation for the inquest, where he would naturally wish to shine. I could see that he enjoyed displaying his knowledge before Hughes, who, although a family practitioner of high standing, with an income greater than Freylinghuisen's many times over, had no such expert knowledge of toxicology as a coroner's physician would naturally possess.

The two detectives and the coroner came back while the discussion was still in progress and listened in silence to Freylinghuisan's statement of the case. Grady's mahogany face told absolutely nothing of what was passing in his brain, but Simmonds was plainly bewildered. It was evident from his look that nothing had been found to shed any light on the mystery and now that his suicide theory had fallen to pieces he was completely at sea. So, I suspected, was Grady, but he was too self composed to betray it.

The coroner drew the two physicians aside and talked to them for a few moments in a low tone. Then he turned to Grady.

"Freylinghuisen thinks there is no necessity for a postmortem," he said. "The symptoms are in every way identical with those of the other man who was killed here this afternoon. There can be no question that both of them died from the same cause. He is ready to make his return to that effect."

"Very well," assented Grady. "The body can be turned over to the relatives, then."

"There aren't any relatives," I said. "At least, no near ones. Vantine was the last of this branch of the family. I happen to know that our firm has been named as his executors in his will, so, if there is no objection, I'll take charge of things."

"Very well, Mr. Lester," said Grady again, and then he looked at me. "Do you know the provisions of the will?" he asked.

"I do.

"In the light of those provisions, do you know of any one who would have an interest in Vantine's death?"

"I think I may tell you the provisions," I said, after a moment. "With the exception of a few legacies to his servants, his whole fortune is left to the Metropolitan Museum of Art."

"You have been his attorney for some time?"

"We have been his legal advisers for many years."

"Have you ever learned that he had an enemy?"

"No," I answered instantly, "so far as I know, he had not an enemy on earth."

"He was never married, I believe?"

"No."

"Was he ever, to your knowledge, involved with a woman?"

"No," I said again. "I was astounded when I heard Rogers' story."

"So you can give us no hint as to this woman's identity?"

"I only wish I could," I said, with fervor.

"Thank you, Mr. Lester," and Grady turned to Simmonds. "I don't see that there is anything more we can do here," he added. "There's one thing, though Mr. Lester, I will have to ask you to do. That is to keep all the servants here until after the inquest. If you think there is any doubt of your ability to do that, we can, of course, put them under arrest—"

"Oh, that isn't necessary," I broke in. "I will be responsible for their appearance at the inquest."

"I'll have to postpone it a day," said Goldberger. "I want Freylinghuisen to make some tests tomorrow. Besides, we've got to identify d'Aurelle and these gentlemen seem to have their work cut out for them in finding this woman—"

Grady looked at Goldberger in a way which indicated that he thought he was talking too much, and the coroner stopped abruptly. A moment later, all four men left the house.

Dr Hughes lingered for a last word.

"The undertaker had better be called at once," he said. "It won't do to delay too long."

I knew what he meant. Already the face of the dead man was showing certain ugly discolorations.

"I can send him around on my way home," he added, and I thanked him for assuming this unpleasant duty.

As the door closed behind him, I heard a step on the stair, and turned to see Godfrey calmly descending.

"I came in a few minutes ago," he explained, in answer to my look, "and have been glancing around upstairs. Nothing there. How did our friend Grady get along?"

"Fairly well; but if he guesses anything, his face didn't show it."

"His face never shows anything, because there's nothing to show. He has cultivated that sibylline look until people think he's a wonder. But he's simply a stupid ignoramus."

"Oh, come, Godfrey," I protested, "you're prejudiced. He went right to the point. Do you know Roger's story?"

"About the woman? Certainly. Rogers told it to me before Grady arrived."

"Well," I commented, "you didn't lose any time."

"I never do," he assented blandly. "And now I'm going to prove to you that Grady is merely a stupid ignoramus. He has heard all the evidence, but does he know who that woman was?"

"Of course not," I said, and then I looked at him. "Do you mean that you do? Then I'm an ignoramus, too!"

"My dear Lester," protested Godfrey, "you are not a detective—that's not your business, but it is Grady's. At least, it is supposed to be, and the safety of this city as a place of residence depends more or less upon the truth of that assumption. On the strength of it, he has been made deputy police commissioner, in charge of the detective bureau."

"Then you mean that you do know who she was?"

"I'm pretty sure I do—that is what I came back to prove. Where's Rogers?"

"I'll ring for him," I said, and did so, and presently he appeared.

The Royal Prize of Trade.

From the New York World.

The trade of the golden east has been the dream of Europe since Prester John, and of American since we have had a Pacific coast. It has been fought for, schemed for, begged for. Treaties have been made for it, missionaries enlisted in quest of it. Dollar diplomacy pushed to its most insolent extremes to compel it by blackmail. Yet the trade of the three A. B. C. countries of South America, which showed their friendliness to us in the Mexican conferences at Niagara, surpasses, by more than $500,000,000, that of China and Japan together, with 14 times the population.

Buenos Ayres is second only to New York in our continent, and surpasses in value of commerce any port of Italy, Austria or Russia. Santos is the peer of Southampton or New Orleans; Rio of Philadelphia or St. Petersburg; Montevideo is not far behind Odessa. And such accomplishments are but a splendid beginning.

To have our own "place in the sun" in South American commerce two things are necessary: The first is that every business facility shall be extended to it; more important is it that the political attitude of our government shall express fellowship and understanding—shall be the attitude not of the big stick but of the big brother.

NEARLY CRAZY WITH ECZEMA

354 Plum St., Youngstown, Ohio.—"Blotches like ringworms started to come out all over my face and neck. Later it took the form of white flakes and when I would rub they came off in little white scales. The eczema so disfigured me that I was ashamed to go out anywhere. It itched all the time and whenever I perspired or got my face the least bit wet, it would burn until I very nearly went crazy. The more I rubbed or scratched the more it spread and it made me so restless I could not sleep at night.

"One day a friend prevailed upon me to get a sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. They caused the itching to stop instantly and in a very few days my face and neck began to show a marked improvement. I used three cakes of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment and my face and neck are completely cured." (Signed) Newton D. W. Chapman, Feb. 27, 1914.

Boils Biliousness Malaria Constipation

Are You Troubled?

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

Perhaps this case may be similar to yours

J. Wesley Tilly of (Box 673,) Salem, Col., writes:

Gentlemen:—"It gives me much pleasure to be able to send you a testimonial, if by its reaching some sufferer your medicines will do as much for him as they have for me. At the age of fourteen I was troubled a great deal with malaria and biliousness, accompanied with the worst sort of large boils. I was persuaded by my parents, who have always been strong believers in Dr. Pierce's remedies, to try the Golden Medical Discovery. I took one bottle and the boils all disappeared, but I did not stop at one bottle, I took three and the malaria all left me and I have had no more boils to this day, thanks to the 'Golden Medical Discovery' for my relief.

"Following an operation for appendicitis two years ago I was troubled very much with constipation, and I have been taking Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets and they have rid me of the troublesome ones and have helped me in curing the whole trouble; thanks again for the 'Pellets' and for the advice I have obtained from The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." Send only 21 cents for this 1008 page book, for over forty years has been lending its aid to just such cases as this. In our possession we have thousands of testimonials of like character.

Perhaps you are skeptical, but isn't it worth at least a trial in view of such strong testimony? Isn't it reasonable to suppose that if it has done so much for others it can do as much for you?

Your druggist will supply you in liquid or tablet form, or you can send 50 one-cent stamps for a trial box. Address

I C. Hastings of Garner and Peck Hanson of Crystal Lake, republican candidates for county Attorney and County Auditor respectively, were in town a short time Wednesday. They are two big handsome, whole souled fellows well met, and look like they would be able to take care of themselves most anywhere you could put them. They both should fret about their election.

I have been urged by the voters of Supervisor District No. 3 to become a candidate for Supervisor on the Independent ticket. A number of my friends having taken the trouble to get the required signatures necessary to file and urging me to do so. I feel it my duty to make the race and will certainly greatly appreciate your vote and support at the general election, to be held November 3rd. Valentine Josten, Jr.

Congressman Woods, who never speaks except to blunder, has made the magnificent statement that Hill and Carnegie financed the democratic congressional campaign, the former in return for the repeal of the Panama canal tolls bill and the latter for the reason that he spent a large part of his time in England. This is the sort of statesman who represents the Tenth Iowa District at Washington. If the people in the Tenth do not elect Quarton or Kelleher at the next election to succeed Woods they should be subject to the illiteracy test.—Thompson Courier.

That war is fought by boys is a familiar truth that we often forget. But records of our own civil war prove it overwhelmingly. The department rolls show that in the great rebellion there were enlisted in the army of the north 2,778,309 men, and of these 25 were 10 year old and younger, 225 12 years and under, 844, 891 16 years and under, 1,151,438 18 and under, 2,159.798 21 and under and 618,511 were 22 years and over. Thus the average of the whole army was 19 7 years. When war thus takes away the young manhood of the country, who can estimate its cost?—Chicago Post.

When you go the polls next Tuesday, there is one candidate we would like to have you consider and that is Judge W. B. Quarton, candidate for congress on the progressive ticket. Mr. Farmer, think twice before you vote against him. He is the most capable man in the race and at the same time is the real farmers friend and champion. He stands for things that would be a benefit to you. Woods never made a speech in his life or never will—because he is not capable of doing it. Quarton is an orator and if you give him an opportunity he will be heard from and will prove a credit and an honor to the district he would represent. Woods happens to be on the republican ticket because it was the most popular one. Before the 1912 campaign he styled himself a progressive but is now sweet on the standpatters and would be a Democrat to-morrow if thereby he could gain a few more votes and save his bacon. Vote for Quarton, he is every inch a man deserves your support and is not a straddler

Best of Political

The political parties that I call great, are those which cling to principles than to consequences to general, and not to special ideas, and not to men—such parties are usually distinguished by nobler character, more generous passions, more genuine conviction, a more bold and open conduct to others.—De Tocqueville

Sad Regrets.

She—"If I'd known before we married that you swore so, I'd have accepted you." He—"Confound it! That's what comes of being a hypocrite."

Solving the Low Cost of Buying

Everybody is talking about the high cost of living and racking their brains for a solution.

That's easy. All you have to do is to solve the "Low Cost of Buying." Study carefully the Quality and the Price before you part with your money, for the one is as essential as the other. A few pennies saved on each article used by the average family would amount to a considerable sum in the run of a year. It reduces the cost of living.

We have solved the "Low Cost of Buying" from the manufacturer, and you will solve it when you come to us; for we are slicing off the pennies for you which the manufacturer had to slice off for us.

Meet us face to face, and you will go home with a smile.

Griewe-Ortmeyer Nuptials

Last Thursday evening, Nov. 5, at 7 o'clock, in the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. Griewe, occurred the marriage of their youngest daughter, Ella L., to Mr. Fred W. Ortmeyer, of Ft. Dodge, Ia., Rev. F C Griewe, brother of the bride, assisted by Rev. W. J. Witter, of this place, officiating. Only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties were invited.

At the appointed hour the wedding march pealed forth, rendered by Mrs. Alb. Jahnke, upon which the bride and groom were ushered into the parlor preceded by the "flower girls," Miss Ethel Wellemeyer and Miss Dorothy Griewe, who carried lovely bouquets of pink roses.

After the ceremony the guests were seated at a handsomely decorated table after which a three-course supper was served.

The bride is one of Klemme's most highly esteemed and respected young ladies, the daughter of a most honorable family, having, during the past years of her residence here, won for herself a large circle of friends and admirers.

She was educated in our public schools, graduating from the normal course at Charles City College, after which she entered upon a successful career of teaching in our country schools.

Miss Griewe is a young lady of very fine character, possessing many fine habits and abilities, and we promise ourselves that she will be for the "one of her choice" a very fine homemaker.

The groom, a young man of exceptional good habits and fine qualities, was born in Indiana, who received an academy education as well as the first two years of college work at Charles City College, finishing the college work at Cornell College, Mt. Vernon, Iowa. After a period of teaching in the high schools he decided to take up the work with the Y M C. A., and is at present employed as "Associate and Educational" Secretary at the Y. M. C A. of Ft. Dodge.

The happy pair left for their new home at Ft. Dodge Friday morning. We extend to them our congratulations and wish them a long, happy and prosperous wedded life.

The guests from out of town were as follows: Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Ortmeyer, Mr. Edward and Miss Carrie Ortmeyer, from Charles City, Mr. Will Ortmeyer from Oskaloosa, Mr. and Mrs. Alb. Jahnke from Buffalo Center, and Mr. and Mrs. John Griewe and daughter, Marie, from Garner, Rev. and Mrs. F. C. Griewe and daughter, Dorothy, from Winslow, Ill.

How Cities Are Made

A station is a point on any railroad where there is a cinder platform on one side of the track and an elevator on the other. The inhabitant of station operates the platform twice a day and the elevator three months in the year. The remainder of his time is spent in an effort to make a living for his family. It requires only two generations and continued good crops to attract a general store, newspaper and a cemetery. The opera house, church, school and politician follow in their order, after which the station has only to await the next census enumeration to get on the map in lower case letters and be referred to in the marginal index as a village. The village stage in municipal life is that era in which the post office box numbers do not run higher than 275, and while the residents point out a telephone pole with more than one cross-arm as evidence of their right to recognition in the commercial world. Another twenty years, void of cyclones and conflagrations, generally develop such a feeling of unrest that something more than matrimonial ties is needed to hold the population together and keep the municipal metamorphosis headed in the right direction. The village board then meets and orders a city charter and the destiny of City is placed in the hands of its first mayor. This dignitary either starts a "reform" of some kind and kills the town forever, or he inaugurates an annual chautauqua, encourages clean sports, harmless amusements and even perhaps permits Sunday baseball, all to keep the young fellows interested in their new city and then he sits back and sees the town grow faster than a politician's appetite for power.

As an example of a palindrome, that is to say, a sentence which reads the same backward as forward, a Minneapolis man sends the following speech, which might conceivably have been spoken by Napoleon "Able was I ere I saw Elba" This is a supreme example of the palindrome, for not only does the sentence read backward the same as forward, but the separate words readbackward as well as forward This is not true of the famous "Madam, I'm Adam"

CLARKE LEAD GROWS IN COUNTRY REPORTS; VICTORY QUITE SURE

Cummins Also Has Safe Lead and May Win By 40,000—Clarke Majority Less.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 7.—Indications today are that A. B. Cummins has won the election for United States senator by more than 30,000 over Maurice Connolly, democratic nominee, and that Governor Clarke has defeated John T Hamilton, the democratic nominee for governor, by less than 25,000

On fairly accurate reports from 1,748 precincts, out of a total of 2,296 in the state, Governor Clarke has 154,307 votes to Hamilton's 135,521, giving the governor a lead of 17,786 on the precincts reported It is estimated by the republicans that this lead will be increased to some extent by the other precincts, probably giving Governor Clarke a majority of less than 25,000.

The precincts tabulated on the senatorship give Cummins 160,125 and Connolly 128,705, a lead for Cummins of 32,420. On the basis of these averages the Cummins majority should go above 40,000 and may reach 50,000

Returns on the vote for lieutenant governor from 786 precincts in 31 counties showed Harding leading at a ratio that should give him approximately 30,000 plurality in the state as a whole He had 59,105 and Myers had 45,766

Secretary of State Allen said incoming returns indicated he was running ahead of the governor in some counties and behind him in others.

It looked as though Treasurer of State Brown, Frank S Shaw, candidate for auditor, and Attorney General Cosson would have pluralities of between 35,000 and 50,000, though adequate totals on counties are not available

For railroad commissioners the returns indicated the certain election of Clifford Thorne and James Wilson republican candidates Thorne appeared to be leading the ticket

SALINGER SEEMS ASSURED OF SUPREME COURT BERTH

Des Moines, Ia Nov 7 -With only scattering returns available on the vote for judges of the supreme court, the indications are favorable to the election of Weaver Salinger and Thomas. On precinct reporting, Weaver is in the lead with Salinger and Thomas next in line and well ahead of Ladd, Withrow and Prouty These tabulations apply to about 25 of the 99 counties of the state In many sections of the state there was an attempt to work the three present judges Weaver Ladd and Withrow as a slate combination This effort seems to have been quite effectively offset by many voters taking in the Thomas Salinger combination although these candidates had not promoted or encouraged the alliance It is stated that plunker votes were much in evidence in the supreme judge contests

BOOSTER OFFICERS IN DES MOINES SEEKING TO DISCREDIT CHIEF

Claimed They Secured Evidence of Damaging Nature While on Milwaukee Trip.

Des Moines, Ia. Nov 4—Former City Detectives W. D. Sims and Jess McKercher, who, with Thomas Denholm, were ousted from office recently by Council Mitchell of the public safety department, returned from Milwaukee at 7 30 o'clock yesterday morning where they have spent the last five days

"We went to Milwaukee to investigate the stay of Chief of Police Ed Crawford in that city," said Sims, "and we have in our inside pockets just what we went after despite the fact that we were shadowed by private detectives every hour we were there."

When asked what he had to say about the charges againt him Sims replied

"Only this. That I have been charged with something for which I could be indicted if proves guilty. They cannot prove them in 1,000,000 years. I know they can't and I will show the city of Des Moines that they are false I'll also show the people of this town just what kind of a man Ed Crawford is and how fit he is for chief of police, and all my evidence will not come from Milwaukee."

The detectives declare that they have dozens of affidavits from business men and other citizens of Milwaukee to produce at the trial Sims declared that he and McKercher were shadowed by private detectives all the time they were in Milwaukee.

KEELINE LOSES EYE FROM ACCIDENT WHILE HUNTING

Council Bluffs, Ia., Nov 4—Drs Dean and Henniger, who have been carying for Oscar Keeling of Council Bluffs who was accidentally shot while hunting in Nebraska, have found it necessary to remove the left eye.

Three duck shots struck Mr Keelin in the face one squarely in the center of the forehead and the others, one in each eye. The injury to the left eye was much more severe than to the right and there was little hope from the start of saving it The shot penetrated near the iris and an X-ray examination disclosed it buried near the center of the ball There was no possibility of removing it without complete escape of the aqueous matter, which was constantly exuding from the wound Removal of the eye thus became a necessity to save the other The wound in the right eye did not injuse the eyeball and the leaden missile was removed without difficulty

Mr Keeline is still kept in total darkness as the right eye has been protected by an opaque shield Dr Dean said last night that the sight of the eye would not be impaired

GERMAN ARMY GUIDED BY PICTURES OF COWS

French Troops Discover Crude Drawings Were Work of Kaiser's Spies—Position of Animal Indicated Location and Size of Opposing Forces.

Paris, Nov. 9.—Crude drawings of cows of varying proportions, some in attitudes of defense, belligerency or alarm, and others in grazing positions, were noticed by French officers during the early days of the campaign on the Aisne. The sketches at first were considered the simple ones of school children, but the frequency with which this subject appeared on walls, buildings, bridges and in every available place in the departments of Oise and Somme, puzzled French officers, who conducted a thorough investigation They are now convinced that the system was used by German scouts to direct the armies that were to follow

There was a great variety in the sizes of the drawings and in the positions of the heads and other particulars. By comparing notes and dates it was discovered that these crude pictures had a very intimate relation with passing events Certain categories of the pictures coincided in every case with the same developments in the military operations, and, continuing their researches, they discovered that a perfect system of communication had thus been organized, similar to the system often employed by gypsies and tramps, for indicating information to those of their confreres that come after.

NAVY BATTLE OFF PERUVIAN COAST?

British, German and Japanese Warships Engaged Reports Say—Outcome Not Known—Mercantile Firms Believe Chilean Waters Were Scene of Struggle.

Lima, Peru, Nov 7, (delayed) —Four warships passed Callao southbound today They kept far out from the shore and their nationality could not be made out

San Francisco, Nov 9 Private advices to prominent British shipping agents from their correspondents in Valparaiso yesterday reported that a naval engagement was then taking place off Yayos, Peru, between British, German and Japanese warships. Press dispatches telling of a previous German-British naval engagement are confirmed in the messages

No details of the engagement were given. Closer reading of the cable message seemed to indicate that Yayos was not the name of a town off which the engagement was in progress, but a code word which had been left blank of meaning in the firm's code book An inquiry to the firm's home office at London for a translation of "Yayos" brought no answer

This translation was substantiated by the fact that the Peruvian town of Yauos, first thought to have been intended, is some distance inland and that it did not seem likely the German squadron would have had time to reach the Peruvian coast in the short time since the first engagement

The firm believed the battle was taking place somewhere off the coast of Chile

The French then delivered a bayonet charge forcing the enemy into the river A pontoon bridge was quickly constructed and the French crossed They succeeded not only in regaining the post position but in esablishing themselves in an advanced position at Tracy

PATTON DEFENDANT IN CONSPIRACY CASE

Sherman Law Suit Grows Out of Alleged Corner of Oats Market In 1902.

New York, Nov 7—James Patten, Chicago grain dealer, is named among defendants in a Sherman law suit filed in the United States district court here yesterday, charging Patten and others with having restrained trade by cornering the market in certain grades of oats in July, 1902

The complaint charges that the defendants, through "a conspiracy," purchased on the Chicago board of trade upwards of 1 000,000 bushels of No. 1 and No. 2 white oats for July 1902, delivery, in excess of the available or visible supply and that excessive artificial and monopolistic prices were charged for oats sold in the United States and shipped to foreign countries, which enabled the defendants to gain enormous profits.

The plaintiffs are Charles Waite of Chicago, and Robert Henry Thorburn, of this city, who from January 1899, to July, 1902, were members of the firm of Waite, Thorburn & Co., grain commission merchants in Chicago and members of the Chicago board of trade. They demand $300,000 representing triple damages for the loss of $100,000 they claim they suffered Named as defendants with Patten are William H Bartlett, of New Mexico, and Frank P Frazier, of this city, who were members of the Chicago grain brokerage firm of Bartlett, Frazier & Co., at the time of the alleged corner in oats.

FARMER HIT WITH AX AND MAY DIE

Frank Krajcka, Near Thurston, Neb., Decoyed to Barn Late at Night—Attack Then Made on Woman.

Pender Neb., Nov 9—Frank Krajcka, a Bohemian farmer, residing east of Thurston, was decoyed to his barn late Thursday night and was struck over the head with an ax. Although he is still alive, it is said that his injuries will prove fatal.

Following the attack on Krajcka, the assailant went to the house and attempted a criminal assault on Mrs. Krajcka. She made a successful resistance against the intruder and escaped to a neighboring farm house A posse of several farmers was quickly organized by the aid of the telephone, but when they reached the Krajcka home there was no trace of the assailant.

As the result of investigation by officers yesterday, John Sangford was arrested as a suspect and lodged in jail at Pender Mrs. Krajcka identifies him as the man who attacked her, but Sangford stoutly protests his innocence Sangford is a transient laborer, claiming to hail from Kansas, and has been working for a short time on a farm about three miles from the Krajcka place

Mr and Mrs Krajcka had retired for the night when they were aroused by a rap at the door Mr Krajcka responded to the summons and the man at the door claimed to have a very sick horse asking Mr Krajcka to come out to the barn and assist him with the animal

Mr Krajcka dressed hurriedly and passed out of the house. It is supposed that the assailant had placed the ax in a convenient place and that he struck Mr Krajcka just as he was entering the barn

In the territory around the Krajcka home a great deal of feeling has been aroused by the crime and there has been [illegible] agitation for the organization of a posse to storm the Pender jail and take Sangford away from the officers

NORTH SEA FISHERMEN FIND NAKED CORPSES

German Mines Also Raked Up By Nets—Discoveries Are Worrying London.

London, Nov 9.—An Amsterdam dispatch to Reuter's Telegram company says:

"The Handelsblad learns that many fishing vessels from Katwijk Aan Zee, fishing village of the Netherlands, are arriving at Ymuiden and will not leave again for the fishing grounds. Most of the vessels report that floating mines were caught in the nets which had to be cut. They say that fishing is impossible.

"The fishermen also saw many floating corpses some naked."

London, Nov 7—The feeling is growing here that the recent raid of a German fleet of Yarmouth was not the total of naval activities in the North sea and this impressed by the fact that Dutch fishing vessels have floating mines so thick they had to give up their occupation.

SING TAU FALLS BEFORE ASSAULTS OF ALLIED TROOPS

Japanese Leaders Successful In Prolonged Siege of Last German Colonial Possession In Orient.

ASSAILANTS LOSE HEAVILY

Risky Teutonic Garrison Entitled to Great Credit For Resistance Against Every Modern Device.

Washington Nov 3.—Official dispatches telling of the fall of Tsing Tau were received today at the Japanese embassy and interpreted as signaling the beginning of an offensive naval campaign in the Pacific. Three squadrons of warships which have been occupied in blockading Kia Chow, will now be released, it was said, to hunt down the German ships in the Pacific. It was stated at the embassy that in all probability, a joint occupation of British and Japanese forces would take place at Tsing Tau immediately.

Tokio, Nov 9—After desperate assaults, in which the Japanese in the face of heroic resistance that rivalled the bravery of their forces at Port Arthur, Tsing Tau surrendered at 9 20 o'clock this morning At that hour the hoisting of white flags, on the forts, and an officer with a flag of truce to the Anglo-Japanese lines

At 4 o'clock this afternoon the Japanese and German officers opened a conference at Moltke barracks when the formalities of capitulation were concluded

The Japanese officers pay unstinted tribute to the bravery of the Germans who fought tenaciously to the last Official reports are that the Germans blew up what was left of their forts before surrendering and practicaly the whole town is in ruins A Japanese torpedo boat, flotilla that entered the bay found that nearly all the ships had been destroyed

Prisoners to Japan.

An official estimate places the Japanese killed in the final assault last night at 35 with 182 wounded The British took an important part in the victory and two British officers were wounded No statement of the German casualties is available, but it is believed that they were heavy

The minister of war states that the lessons learned from the siege were first, the destructiveness of the new heavy guns that the Japanese used for the first time, and second, the effectiveness of the aeroplane observation service whereby the methods of the defense were discovered The prisoners who will number, it is said, between 6,000 and 8,000 will be brought to Japan.

Tokio, Nov 7—Tokio is celebrating today the fall of the German fortress Tsing Tau after an actual siege of a few days more than three weeks. It was in the middle of September that the real attack began although preparations were begun immediately after war was declared by Japan on August 15.

Crowds collected everywhere and many processions were formed by the enthusiastic people dragging floats decorated with flowers as a symbol of victory Japanese and British flags were floating everywhere throughout the city.

The final and successful attack on Tsing Tau began shortly after midnight Friday morning and the first inroad by the allied forces, which was largely instrumental in the fall of the place, was the taking of the middle fort of the first line of defense This was accomplished by a brilliant charge of infantry and engineers led by General Toshimi Yamada.

Dash Forward Crying "Banzai."

Simultaneously with the charge of General Yamada others were made the troops dashing forward with cries of "Banzai."

Taitungchen the fortification on the east fell at 5:35 in the morning. Chung Chiawa was captured soon thereafter with its two heavy cannon.

A detachment of the first line occupied the Iltis, Bismarck and Moltke forts at 7 in the morning and then the enemy hoisted the white flag on the weather astronomical station adjoining the governor's office. Another white flag was hoisted on the coast forts at the mouth of the Hai Ho at 8:30 o'clock.

The closing hours of the siege of Tsing Tau and the fall of the fortress here are briefly but dramatically described in offical reports which were sent to the government by Vice Admiral Sadakichi Kato, the commander of the Japanese naval forces, and Lieutenant General Kamio, commander of the troops operating in Kaio Chow.

Taken With Grand Rush.

After the capture of the central fort it appears from their statement the left wing of the attacking forces advanced and occupied Chanshan at 5 10 o'clock yesterday morning. Chanshan was the base of the righ wing of the German line and is a triangular fortification. Then the other forces at the point of the bayonet captured the forts of the first line, including the intricate and dangerous defense works connecting them. Other forces advanced in rushes on the main line of defenses

"Suddenly," the report says, "the flag of surrender ran up in the morning breeze on the weather bureau mount towering above the sea and land."

In the last two days of the fighting it is stated the war ships continued a terrific rain of shells on the fortress and the city from the east and south, inflicting great damage. Taisichen fort official accounts say, seemed to explode.

Vice Minister of the Navy Suzuki in making today of the future of Tsing Tau said:

"While the European war continues Tsing Tau will be administered by Japan. At the conclusion of the war we will open negotiations with China.

Official details of the Tsing Tau affair in Tokio show that the Germans made desperate efforts to reinforce their garrison by sea to their batteries, but were unsuccessful. Japanese shells fell fast at work and again destroyed batteries. Projectiles from the warships started fires in many parts of the city, certain of which were burned.

Havre, France (via Paris), Nov. 7 The following Belgian official communication was given out today.

"The situation on the Yser shows no change The enemy has kept on the left bank of the river but has contended himself with a feeble artillery fire directed against the roads in the environs of Fumescapelle

The details in Russian Poland seem to have resulted in the complete rout of the enemy's troops in Belgium There has been reported movements in this connection the departure toward the east of a division of 5,000 men who have been seen marching from Bruges toward Ghent. Furthermore troop trains left Brussels recently going in the direction of Louvain.

Paris Nov 9 The German attempt to reach the straits of Dover, prosecuted with such reckless abandon and courage as to wring praise even from the foe, appeared today to have failed temporarily Along the Yser, near the sands of the North sea coast to the ruined town of Dixmude, the situation today was reported "relatively quiet."

Along the rest of the battle line which stretches across France, it is said advantages are said to have been won by the allies Today's official French statement says that the British and French forces have repulsed German attacks along almost the entire front and that northeast of Verdun, where the territory has long been disputed with exceptional ferocity, two villages have been captured by the allies

The fighting there has all but ceased and the tide of battle has rolled southward, leaving behind it the countless dead South of Ypres, on the line extending down over the French border to Arras, the Germans are preparing another furious onslaught, spurred on by their emperor The main battle there upon which depends so much for the Germans and allies alike, has not yet begun.

Concentrate On Arras.

Paris is watching with the keenest interest the battle in the north and every word from official and other sources is eagerly discussed

Having been driven by gun fire and flood from the road to Dunkirk, the Germans appear to be concentrating all their energies on the Ypres Arras line with the object of reaching Boulogne through the valley of the Canche river Three recently formed army corps, the Eighteenth, from Frankfort, the Eighth, from Coblenz, and the Tenth, from Hannover, have been brought up to stiffen the German troops, who are exhausted after nine days of ceaseless fighting. The troops are being massed around Arras, behind strong positions at Beauvais, Tilloy and St Laurent De Blangy.

Preparatory cannonading has become intense in the last two days, according to a resident of the district just arrived in Paris, and infantry attacks have apparently had the object of testing the French strength. It was remarked that the enemy seemed to be abandoning the mass methods of advancing and tried attacking in open order making use of all available cover, making forward by short spurts and throwing themselves down when the French quick firers opened.

Topography Favors Allies.

The result it is aid, has been no better as the men seem to lack the initiative required to make this method effective. None of these attacks so far has made an impression on the French line. The country between Arras and Boulogne is well wooded and hilly lending itself admirably to defensive fighting and every preparation has been made to utilize it, for it is realized that the Germans will make an even greater effort if that is possible than before particularly in view of the critical situation on the Russian front.

Following is the official statement issued by the French war office today

"On our left wing the situation is relatively quiet on the Yser downstream from Dixmude The Belgian troops who advanced along the right bank of Yser from Nieuport in the direction of Lombaertzyde and who had been counter attacked by the Germans were sustained in time The situation has been entirely re-established in this locality

"At Dixmude the marine fusiliers repulsed a fresh counter offensive movement Further to the south the attacks of the enemy around Bixschowte also were repulsed by French troops who subsequently advanced.

"To the east of Ypres the situation is without change. To the southeast of this town we have resumed the offensive in combination with the British troops operating in this region and repulsed an attack particularly violent and pronounced by detachments belonging to the active army corps recently brought into this region by the Germans

"Between Armentieres and the Canal of La Bassee the British army on its side repulsed a violent attack of Neuve Chapelle Between the canal of La Bassee and Arras, as well as between Arras and the Oise several counter attacks, delivered by night and by day, have been checked. We even made some slight progress in the region of Vermelles and to the south of Aix Noulette

COUNTRY MOTHERS CITED WAYS TO HELP THEIR COMMUNITY

BY "OBSERVER"

No fair minded man or woman is going to censor those good women in rural districts for the interest they take in the churches in their respective communities, but we do sometimes wonder why an equal interest is not taken in the rural schools by the patrons.

It is not enough to elect or appoint a board of directors, who in turn employ a teacher, and then turn the whole school system over to them. We do not believe any board of directors wish to assume the entire responsibility for a school's welfare, and certainly no individual teacher does.

In the cities and towns women's clubs, or at least civic leagues do much toward improving school life. Happily, too, these clubs are being formed among country women, and there is no reason why the women of every rural community should not have their own little club for the moral and educational welfare of their community.

Mrs. Emma Gary Wallace, who conducts the Home and School Club work department of the American Fatherhood magazine, is persistently urging these local organizations among the mothers of country school districts.

There may be those readers of the times who will think Mrs. Wallace's views too "modern" to be practical in this community, but they are not. If the methods of supervision that were in vogue twenty or forty years ago are allowed to rule in this day, we should expect no better results than were obtained twenty or forty years ago—and the boy or girl of today can not get very far in the business, or even social world if he leaves school with the three r's that were everything in education forty years ago.

Mrs. Wallace suggests a Rural Mothers' club look after the following things as connected with the school or the schools in their district:

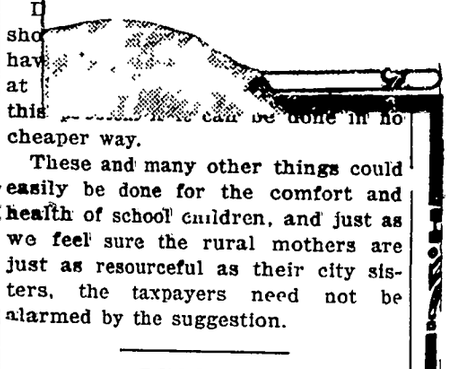
WORKS AT ESSEN G AND MYSTERIOUS FIGURE



great Krupp works at Essen on the Ruhr in Prussia, where were made the "Busy Berthas" which battered the way for the German hosts through Liege, Namur, Maubeuge, Laon, La Fere and Antwerp, stands a woman Frau Bertha Krupp Von Bohlen und Halbach Still young (she is 28), she is a commanding and somewhat mysterious figure

Mystery has always been a characteristic of the Krupp family The sudden production of the 42-centimeter gun, the existence of which was known to but a handful of army officers, illustrates this trait, and military observers will be surprised if more innovations bearing the trade mark "Fried Krupp" are not soon forthcoming The Krupps are never interviewed They do not make speeches, or write books, or allow their personalities to be exploited in many ways considered quite proper and usual in correct circles in the United States.

About Bertha Krupp, as around her father, grandfather and great grandfather, a crop of legends and tales of varying degrees of probability has grown up. Her personality has caused much interest and has been subject to as widely differing interpretations as that of a royal personage Indeed, she is royalty to a great degree The kaiser never came into the vicinity of Essen during her father's lifetime without paying a visit to Krupp. He paid Krupp a regular annual visit besides. This is an honor usually reserved by the kaiser for royal families.

Moreover, the kaiser has conferred on the Krupps a peculiar distinction, unique in Germany, if its like is to be found anywhere. By imperial decree he has allowed Bertha's husband to assume the name "Krupp" in addition to his own. The little son of the cannon maker also will have the right to the name, but a second son could not use the name Krupp. This is to be—so the kaiser has decreed—a name or title going with ownership of the Krupp gun works. The works and the name Krupp shall descend like the throne of Prussia, by primogeniture.

Her Personality.

At first glance one sees in Frau Krupp only a somewhat plain, stolid German hausfrau of more than average height. But deeper study reveals clearly the Krupp intelligence, firmness and iron pertinacity. "Arrogance," some have called it ,and "cold and haughty" are terms which have found their way into the German press at times in describing the mistress of dinary drawing room graces to run an industrial organization which on July 1, 1913, was estimated to number 255,959 workers and members of workers' families, all under the paternalistic Krupp wing.

Frau Krupp is the richest person in Germany. The census figures on which the income tax is based make her fortune at $71,000,000. Baron Max Goldschmidt, the next wealthiest, has only $23,000,000. The kaiser has not so much property, although his yearly income is greater. Her income is $3,150,000.

CALIFORNIA DEMOCRATS CLAIM CONGRESSMAN

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 7.—The democratic county central committee claimed today the election of Charles H. Randall, as congressman in the Ninth California district, by a plurality of 50 over Representative Charles W. Bell, progressive. The claim was based on figures from all but two of the 325 precincts in the district. Progressive headquarters had not heard from 15 precincts and was not prepared to concede the election of Randall.

KROONLAND RELEASED.

Washington, Nov 7—The American steamer, Kroonland, has been released by British officials at Gibraltar, and will sail today, leaving the copper and rubber of her cargo for a verdict of a prize court.

London Nov 9—The correspondent of the Express on the Belgian frontier under date of Friday telegraphs the following

"The kaiser is lose to the front in Flanders, making efforts to inspire his troops to gain Calais

Despite the nearly successful bomb attack on him by a British aviator at Thielt, Sunday the kaiser continues to drive daily through the territory behind the Bruges and Courtrai roads. His route is always kept secret and he uses a car of different appearance each time

"Daily he singles out certain soldiers for acts of exceptional bravery and personally gives them the Iron Cross. He visits the field hospitals and talks to the wounded invariably saying

"Good day comrade The kaiser wishes you a speedy recovery

"The kaiser dined with the staff at Ghent yesterday and returned to headquarters thoroughly dissatisfied with recent events in the campaign."

PLAN EXTENSION OF SOUTHERN BUSINESS

Washington, Nov. 7.—Trade relations between the United States and Argentine and means for developing the new avenues of commerce opened as a result of war in Europe were discussed today at a conference between Secretary Redfield and Ambassador Naon. A cablegram from the Argentine minister of foreign relations to the ambassador suggested that American manufacturers, to obtain trade formerly controlled by European houses, must take the initiative by sending cargoes in ships which would return with the products of Argentine and adopt a system of credits.

CHICAGO & ALTON RAILROAD INDICTED

Chicago, Nov. 7.—A trip taken by the late Edward Morris, the packer, and seven members of his family to Hot Springs, Ark., January 26 1912, in a private car was made the basis of federal indictments against the Chicago & Alton railroad and W. L. Ross, its former vice president.

It is charged that six full fares and two half fares were paid by Mr. Morris, while the statues require the payment of 18 full fares for the use of a private car.

VOTE VERY CLOSE ON GOVERNOR AND CLARKE MAY LOSE

Governor Has Lead of Less Than 5,000 In Returns From One-Third of Precincts —Cummins Wins.

PROBABLE WINNERS.

Iowa.

Governor—George W Clarke, republican. (Not conceded by democrats.)

United States Senator—Albert B Cummins republican

South Dakota.

Governor—Frank M Byrne, republican majority about 10,000

United States Senator—Ed S Johnson, democrat, leading on face of returns (Burke committee still claiming victory for their candidate)

For Congress—First district, Dillon, republican. Second district, Johnson, republican: Third district, Gandy, democrat

Nebraska.

Governor—John H Morehead, democrat.

Congress—Third district, Dan Stephens.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 4.—Governor Clarke had, at least, a very close shave in the Iowa election yesterday and there is almost an even probability that he may have been defeated Figures have been received here only from 666 precincts on the governorship, less than one-third of the total, and these give Clarke 66,773, Hamilton, 61,935. Clarke's lead on the precincts reported is only 4,838, with a majority of the country precincts yet to hear from, in which the governor is sure to suffer some losses from the normal republican vote

The democratic committee still expresses confidence that Hamilton has won, claiming that the democratic candidate for governor is showing strength in unexpected places and that the complete returns will show a decisive Hamilton majority In the few country precincts reported the trend has been against Clarke and if this average is maintained, or even partially maintained, Governor Clarke has been defeated by 5,000 to 10,000 majority

There seems little reason to doubt the victory of Senator Cummins, though his majority will fall below the early estimates It may go as high as 20,000 or may fall short of 19,000 Tabulations have been made of 752 precincts on the senatorship and these give Cummins, 76,258 Connolly 64,145, giving Cummins a plurality of 12,113 on precincts reported It is estimated that Connolly's comparative strength was more in the city precincts than in the country precincts and that the country districts will increase the Senator's present lead.

The precincts reported are fairly representative of the different districts of the state For instance both Jackson and Muscatine counties, democratic, have reported in full The former goes to Connolly by about 3,000 majority and for Hamilton by the same vote Muscatine county gave Cummins a majority of nearly 7,000 votes, and Clarke a lead of 6,000 votes

Cash Dowell, republican, is elected for congress from the Seventh district over John Mulvaney, democrat, by about 2,000

HULL PROBABLE WINNER IN SECOND IOWA DISTRICT

Davenport, Ia., Nov 4.—Incomplete returns indicate Harry Hull, republican, is elected to congress over W J. McDonald, democrat, in the second Iowa district, by a majority of 1,500 The entire republican county ticket is elected by a safe margin.

Iowa City, Ia., Nov 4.—Early returns from the Second congressional district give McDonald, democrat, a slight lead over Hull, republican. McDonald carried Johnson county by about 500. Connolly and Hamilton carried the county by about 700 Iowa City returns are: Cummins, 913, Connolly, 1,110; Clarke, 896, Hamilton, 1,143; Hull, 932; McDonald, 1,125. Coast, republican, is elected to the legislature over Koontz, democrat and incumbent, by 200. Iowa City gave Koontz 968, Coast, 1,078.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 4.—Congress: Iowa, Fourth district, Gilbert N. Haugen, republican, re-elected.

Fifth—James W. Good, republican, re-elected.

Seventh—Cassius C Dowell, republican, re-elected.

Eighth—Horace M. Towner, republican, re-elected.

Ninth—William R. Green, republican, re-elected.

DES MOINES BULLETINS.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 4.—One hundred and fifty-three precincts, including 48 in Des Moines, give Clarke 17,682, Hamilton, 13,879. At republican state headquarters, Dowell, republican candidate for congress, admitted the outlook is not encouraging for himself, but he will probably win by a close margin. Governor Clarke made a similar statement.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 4.—One hundred and eighty Iowa precincts, including Des Moines, give Cummins, senator, 20,970; Connolly, democrat, 17,132. Indications are that Cummins will have a very close race

Manson—Lincoln township: Hamilton, 185; Clarke, 168; Cummins, 190; Connolly, 175; Schenk, 24; White, 19.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 4.- Des Moines, complete, gives Cummins 6,379; Connolly, 4,186, Schenck, 966; Spurgeon, 591, Clarke, 7,330; Hamilton, 4,254; White, 715; Harding, 6,251, Meyers, 3,742; Betty, 666; Dowell, republican, for congress, 5,679; Mulvaney, democrat, 3,543; Holmes, progressive, 812

Cedar Rapids — William Dennis, chairman of Linn county republican central committee, claims Congressman Good's majority in the Fifth district will be higher than ever and that his re-election is assured. The republicans also claim Cummins has carried the Fifth district.

Burlington—Whittaker carried this county by about 160, but the latest available figures from the district show the election of Kennedy.

Dubuque—Eleven precincts out of 35 in Dubuque county give Cummins 1,377; Connolly, 3,450.

Waterloo—Burton Sweet, republican, probably elected to congress over J. C. Murtagh, democrat, by 5,000.

Oskaloosa—Basing an estimate on returns reported, Mahaska county will give Ramseyer a majority of 400 to 500 over Hamilton in the Sixth district for congress.

Council Bluffs—The vote on congressman in the Ninth district is being returned slowly, but the re-election of Representative W. R. Green, republican, by about 1,200 plurality is certain Green will have a slightly reduced majority in Guthrie county, while in Cass and Audubon he will have about the same vote he had in 1910 The democrats carried but one county, Shelby, in the district if returns thus far in are maintained

Algona—Kossuth county goes republican by about 1,000 majority except Representative Sullivan, democrat, who will go to the legislature with about 1,200 majority Woods, republican, and Quarton, progressive, in congressional fight, will about break even in the county Quarton carries his home city by a 2 to 1 vote. The progressive vote was small on other offices. County division snowed under Denison—First ward gives Cummins 100 votes, Connolly, 79, State Senator Jewell, 119, Caswell, 106 Third ward, Cummins, 103, Connolly, 83; Jewell, 96, Caswell, 138. Manilla, Cummins, 211; Connolly, 157, Clark, 221, Hamilton, 166.

Marshalltown—Ten precincts out of 28, Marshall county, give Cummins, 1,288, Connolly, 698 Nine precincts give Clarke, 1,036, Hamilton, 651. Republican gains are shown in every precinct so far in Only two precincts in on congressional ticket, but no doubt Good will carry this county over Mekota.

Ames—The final count for all four wards in the city of Ames for senator and governor Senator, Cummins, 405; Connolly, 177. Governor, Clarke, 434; Hamilton, 172. Eight county precincts, including Ames, give Cummins, 826; Connolly, 350; Clarke, 899; Hamilton, 331, and White, 331.

DEMOCRATS OPTIMISTIC ON HAMILTON'S CHANCES

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 4.—Congressman Connolly carried Dubuque county by about twice the majority accorded Senator Cummins in Polk county, judging from incomplete returns. Twenty-six precincts out of 36 in Dubuque gave Connolly 6,573 and Cummins 2,348. The senator's lead in Des Moines was 2,200 over his democratic opponent.

Nineteen out of 23 precincts in Dallas county, the home of Governor Clarke, gave the governor 600 the better of Hamilton. On the other hand Hamilton's home county, Linn, in 10 out of 38 precincts, gave the democratic candidate 2,257 to 1,403

There is no doubt that the entire state ticket will be elected although reports have not been received on anything but the heads of the tickets.

A prominent republican supporter today made the prediction that if Governor Clarke's lead at noon today was less than 8,000 votes he would be defeated His lead is scarcely more than half of that.

The democrats are pinning their faith on the country precincts, where capitol extension was the issue.

Paul Kersch, manager for Hamilton, last night predicted that his chief would win by 8,000, but today he is even more optimistic

DEMOS STILL CLAIMING PROSPECT OF VICTORY

Des Moines, Ia. Nov 4—Dr J W. Dreynolds, democratic state chairman, said this afternoon

"We concede the defeat of no one. We think Hamilton will get enough votes out of the river counties and the rural districts to overcome Clarke's lead."

Miss Eleanor Connolly sister of Congressman Connolly, said "Congressman Connolly still has a good chance to win. We count upon the remaining precincts to favor the democrats. For instance, we have word from Woodbury county that Hamilton and Connolly have carried it by 1,000 majority."

Charles A. Rawson, republican state chairman said: "We see no reason for changing our original prediction on Senator Cummins that he will win by a majority of between 35,000 and 50,000. Clarke will win by about 10,000 to 20,000 over Hamilton."

ONLY MEAGER RETURNS ON SUPREME COURT JUDGES

Only scattering precincts on candidates for judges of the supreme court could be secured late today With 79 precincts reported, representing five counties exclusive of Polk, Justice Silas M Weaver is leading with a majority of over 400 votes over Seth Thomas, his nearest opponent. ...med They Secured Evidence ... Damaging Nature While on Milwaukee Trip.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov 4.—Former City Detectives W. D. Sims and Jess McKercher, who, with Thomas Denholm, were ousted from office recently by Council Mitchell of the public safety department, returned from Milwaukee at 7 30 o'clock yesterday morning where they have spent the last five days.

"We went to Milwaukee to investigate the stay of Chief of Police Ed Crawford in that city," said Sims, "and we have in our inside pockets just what we went after despite the fact that we were shadowed by private detectives every hour we were there."

When asked what he had to say about the charges against him Sims replied

"Only this. That I have been charged with something for which I could be indicted if proves guilty They cannot prove them in 1,000,000 years I know they can't and I will show the city of Des Moines that they are false I'll also show the people of this town just what kind of a man Ed Crawford is and how fit he is for chief of police, and all my evidence will not come from Milwaukee."

The detectives declare that they have dozens of affidavits from business men and other citizens of Milwaukee to produce at the trial Sims declared that he and McKercher were shadowed by private detectives all the time they were in Milwaukee

KEELINE LOSES EYE FROM ACCIDENT WHILE HUNTING

Council Bluffs, Ia Nov 4—Drs Dean and Henniger, who have been carying for Oscar Keeling of Council Bluffs who was accidentally shot while hunting in Nebraska, have found it necessary to remove the left eye

Three duck shots struck Mr Keelin in the face one squarely in the center of the forehead and the others, one in each eye. The injury to the left eye was much more severe than to the right and there was little hope from the start of saving it The shot penetrated near the iris and an X-ray examination disclosed it buried near the center of the ball There was no possibility of removing it without complete escape of the aqueous matter which was constantly exuding from the wound Removal of the eye thus became a necessity to save the other The wound in the right eye did not injure the eyeball and the leaden missile was removed without difficulty

Mr Keeling is still kept in total darkness as the right eye has been [illegible] in opaque shield Dr Dean said last night that the sight of the eye would not be impaired

COUNTRY MOTHERS CITED WAYS TO HELP THEIR COMMUNITY

BY "OBSERVER"

No fair minded man or woman is going to censor those good women in rural districts for the interest they take in the churches in their respective communities, but we do sometimes wonder why an equal interest is not taken in the rural schools by the patrons.

It is not enough to elect or appoint a board of directors, who in turn employ a teacher, and then turn the whole school system over to them. We do not believe any board of directors wish to assume the entire responsibility for a school's welfare, and certainly no individual teacher does.

In the cities and towns women's clubs, or at least civic leagues do much toward improving school life. Happily, too, these clubs are being formed among country women, and there is no reason why the women of every rural community should not have their own little club for the moral and educational welfare of their community.

Mrs. Emma Gary Wallace, who conducts the Home and School Club work department of the American Motherhood magazine, is persistently urging these local organizations among the mothers of country school districts.

There may be those readers of the Times who will think Mrs. Wallace's views too "modern" to be practical in this community, but they are not. If the methods of supervision that were in vogue twenty or forty years ago are allowed to rule in this day, then we should expect no better results than were obtained twenty or forty years ago—and the boy or girl of today can not get very far in the business, or even social world if he or she leaves school with the three "R's" that were everything in education forty years ago.

Mrs. Wallace suggests a Rural Mothers' club look after the following items connected with the school or schools in their district:

Every east, south, and west window should have a shade so that bright light need never shine directly on the blackboard or in the pupils eyes.

Outhouses should be carefully supervised, the approaches screened,and weekly disenfection with chloride of lime insisted upon.

Sometimes the wells go a long time without being cleaned. This should not be, and individual drinking receptacles should be used.

The school should be furnished with a receptacle for liquid soap which is both economical and sanitary. Wash basin and paper towels also should be had.

During cold weather provisions should be made that children could have a warm drink with their meals at noon. Vacuum bottles will solve this problem if it can be done in no cheaper way.

These and many other things could easily be done for the comfort and health of school children, and just as we feel sure the rural mothers are just as resourceful as their city sisters, the taxpayers need not be alarmed by the suggestion.

Surprisingly Reasonable!

It does not follow that you have to buy the highest-priced piano to get a really high-grade instrument.

If care is taken in the selection, you can secure an instrument that will more than fulfill every home requirement at a remarkably reasonable cost.

After hearing the Howard Piano and appreciating its absolute durability, you would naturally expect it to be among the costly ones, but it is not.

Considering value with price it is positively the most economical instrument for the home.

It gives you all the qualities of the high-grade instruments at so reasonable a price because it is a product of one of the manufacturing companies of the greatest piano organization in the world—The Baldwin Company.

No other instrument of equal quality can be sold at the price because no other makers possess the facilities and resources.

THE "Howard Manualo", the Player Piano that is all but human, is distinguished by Quality, Durability, Reliability and Attractive Price. It is a quality proposition throughout. Be sure to examine it.

COSACKS DASH AWAY TO WAR NOT KNOWING WHO FOE WILL BE AND SCARCELY CARING

Brave Villagers Far Removed From Outside World, 1,000 Miles From Railroad, Conjecture What Nation Czar Will Fight As Preparations For Start Are Made—Priest Anoints Recruits.

By Stephen Graham in New York American

Petrograd.—This will show how 2,000,000 Russians went to war, not knowing whom they were to fight or why And some started from 5,000 miles away.

I was staying in an Altai Cossack village on the frontier of Mongolia when the war broke out. It was in the far south of the Siberia railway. At 4 a m July 31, the first telegraphic order to mobilize came. I was awakened by my peasant hostess crying out to me, "Have you heard the news? There is war!"

A young man on a fine horse came galloping down the street calling, "War! War! Horses out! Uniforms! Swords!"

The czar had called on the Cossacks, they gave up their work in the fields and turned to fight the enemy. Who was the enemy? Nobody knew The telegram contained no indication.

Same as Call for Japan.

All the villages population knew was that the same telegram had come as it came 10 years ago when they were called to fight the Japanese.

All the morning it was persisted that the yellow peril had matured and that war with China had been declared. Then the rumor went round "It is with England"

Only after four days did something like the truth come to us. Then nobody believed it Two days after the first telegram a second came This one called out every man between the ages of 18 and 43 Astonishing that Russia should at the very outset begin to mobilize its reservists 5,000 miles from the scene of hostilities!

Flying messengers arrived on horses, breathless and steaming, delivered packets into the hands of the head man of the Cossacks—secret instructions. Fresh horses were at once given them and they were off again within a few minutes of their arrival in the village.

I spent much time watching the village veterinarian certifying or rejecting horses. One that could not go 50 miles a day was not passed. Each Cossack brough his horse up plucked its lips apart to show its teeth, explained the marks on the horse's body, mounted bareback and showed its paces. The examination was strict, for the Cossacks had a thousand miles to go to get to the railway at Omsk and it was necessary to have strong horses.

God is with us" said the priest, "victory will be ours"

Vodka for a Day.

Sunday was a holiday and no preparations were made. Monday the examination of horses went on again. The Cossacks brought also their uniforms, swords, hats, halfshubas, overcoats, shirts boots belts—all that they supposed it necessary to provide in the way of a kit The headman checked and certified each soldier's portion. On the day of setting out came a third telegram from St. Petersburg stating that the vodka shop, which had been locked and sealed during the great temperance struggle which had been in progress in Russia, might be opened for one day only, the day of mobilization. After that, however, it was to be closed again until further orders.

What scenes there were that day! At 8 o'clock in the morning the holy water basin was taken from the church and placed with the triple candles on an open, sun-blazed mountainside The Cossacks met there as at a rendezvous. All their women folks, in multifarious bright colored dresses and tear-stained faces walked out to say the last religious good-bye.

A strange mingling of sobbing and singing went up to heaven from the crowd. After the consecration service only did we learn the almost incredible fact that the war was with Germany. It made the hour and act and place even more poignant. I, at least, understood what it meant to go to war against Germany, and the destiny that was in store.

"God is with us," said the priest in his sermon, tears running down his face. "God is with you. Never turn your backs on the foe. Remember that if you do you endanger the eternal welfare of your souls."

Every Soldier Anointed.

Each soldier dismounted and prostrated himself in prayers. Each soldier at last kissed the cross in the priest's hands, was anointed on his brow with holy water, and, when anointed he passed away from the priest.

Leading his horse by the bridle, he sought out his mother and wife in the waiting throng, embraced them, was blessed amidst sobbing that wrung his heart, and was away Two miles from the village an ox had been killed and cooked by the side of the road Gallon bottles of vodka waited in the grass The soldiers got into the saddle again and rode out through the crowds of women, old men and children, and a great number followed them to the place of the picnic. An ox was cooked over a great fire by the roadside Cossacks came up quickly, and, getting down from their horses, tied them to trees. Buckets, kettles and glasses brought also many plates, but no talbes

One man held up a rouble showing the emperor's face All the soldiers sang "God save the czar," and then danced around the coin

The horses waited in the green shade, men danced and sang, women sobbed and keened There was an hour of it. Then the officer in command gave the word. All the men were in the stirrups again. The long journey and farewell began. Even so, the women on horseback accompanied their husbands 20 or 30 miles, then said good-bye.

So these Russians from Mongolia started for the war, 5,000 miles away So at least 2,000,000 Russians went to war not knowing whom they were to fight.

War Correspondent's Army Corps.

If another war cloud should hover over this country during the present administration with Hon. Lindley M. Garrison as secretary of war, he will be able to inaugurate his plans for organizing war correspondents in the field The experience at Vera Cruz in April, 1914, has suggested that a press corps be organized, occupying a neutral position on the field, and still having access to the points from which the news can best be obtained. The secretary suggests that the correspondents wear a special uniform, and that strict rules be enforced concerning the qualifications for membership, and have the membership limited as far as possible, without running the risk of incurring the charge of discrimination. Secretary Garrison believes that the press corps should be a separate military entity and carry a flag in time of action bearing a special insignia, also to be displayed over their camps, which would be recognized by both armies, as the Red Cross ensign is internationally respected The press corps, properly officered and heady for all the exigencies of the field and liable to be court martialed for misdemeanors, would eliminate the sensational and irresponsible reports that some times make more trouble than muskets.

The secretary of war insists that there is no time when it is more important that the people should have authentic news than during hostilities, and even more so when acute situations are to be met in allaying racial passions and war furors. Under these conditions the secretary has outlined an innovation liable to be adopted by other governments that will add real glory to the war correspondents

Trade For Everybody.

From the Wall Street Journal.

Among the current economic fallacies is the idea that we shall secure trade with South America, or elsewhere, only at the expense of other people. This is essentially the wrong view to take. Big trade connections are built up, not at the ruin of our own customers, but on the basis of everybody becoming prosperous and exchanging freely with everybody else. This is the essence of export trade.

The point is the more particularly worth making at this time when we are seeing what is in some respects a war for trade, just as terrible as any other war.

It is not too much to say that the German attitude toward Great Britain has been based upon the false assumption that Germany cannot prosper if Great Britain prospers also. This is absolutely unsound economically, and contrary to all historical record.

Germany's foreign trade has increased wonderfully, and at a rather greater rate than that of Great Britain in the past half century This has been to the advantage of both countries, and in each succeeding year they have been better customers of each other If this is true of two belligerent nations, one of whom at least believes that its commerce depends upon the extinguishment of the other, it must be true of a neutral nation like the United States.

All artificial attempts to change the natural course of trade are vicious. People here will buy goods "made in America" if they are better made than the imported article, at a price they can afford. Agriculturists in South America will buy American agricultural machinery if it is better than that of our foreign competitors, and can be sold on terms which suit the buyer.

By creating banking connections in South America, or anywhere else for that matter, we can build up trade that never existed before. And we can leave our competitors prosperous, and therefore the better able to buy more of us. This is the essence of international commerce, and if Germany had only realized that competition in trade is not hostility but exchange, there might never have been a war at all.

We at least should get that incontrovertible fact into our minds, and realize that whatever markets we may make abroad, they will not be helped but prejudiced by injury to the trade of our less fortunate customers

A Redoubtable Partisan.

By Bennett H. Young, in National Magazine.

Beginning as a private, Forrest had reached most distinguished rank. Both friends and enemies awarded him a high place among the great commanders of the war, whether in infantry or cavalry. Fort Donelson, Shiloh, Nashville Murfreesboro, his raid into west Tennessee, his capture of Streight, and conflicts at Brentwood, Harper's Bridge, Chickamauga, his raid into middle Tennessee, West Point, Mississippi and the capture of Fort Pillow, had woven about him and his work a crown of romance and glory, and had justly, on his absolute merits, made him one of the most renowned leaders of the confederacy.

His enemies feared and hated him, as they did no other general of the south. War with Forrest was not only "hell," but savagest hell. His idea of war was to fight and kill and destroy with savagest energy. It has been said that he considered the raising of the black flag as the most economical and merciful way of ending the war. His methods were not calculated to impress his foes with admiration. The many reverses they had suffered at his hands, the wholesome fear of his presence, his desperate courage, boundless resources, rapidity of movement, rapidity of onslaught, recklessness in facing death, and insensibility to fatigue, made failure practically unknown in his campaigns, and he became a terror to his foes and a tower of strength to his comrades.

The Future of the Belgians.

From the New York Sun.

How many hundreds of thousands of Belgians, innocent of any degree of war guiltiness, are now fugitives from their native land it is impossible to say. Yesterday they were reported as still pouring into Rotterdam and the border towns of Holland. In England it is becoming a serious question what to do with them. Meanwhile the Belgian government, itself in exile, has called to the colors every male inhabitant of the kingdom between the ages of 18 and 45.

The future of this brave, industrious and intelligent people is in the lap of the gods. Their bearing during the most terrible trial that a nation can be made to undergo has commanded for them the admiration and sympathy of almost everybody in the world except their oppressors and the apologists of the oppression. If the soil of Belgium should be cleared again for them by the result of the war nothing is more certain than that they will fall to and rebuild their towns and cities and restore their shattered fortunes with incomparable energy. If their destiny is less fortunate, it is equally certain that a considerable part of the population will refuse to return to be the subjects of a process of Germanization under a hated rule.

Where would immigrants with the racial and individual qualities of the Belgians be deemed more desirable or be surer of a welcome than in the United States?

The Sarajevo Trial.

From the Washington Times.

The trial of the conspirators accused of the assassination of the archduke and duchess of Austria, has been concluded at Sarajevo, Bosnia. Twenty-four defendants have been convicted of complicity in the plot, and it is expected that all of them will be sentenced to death

If Austria had not insisted on inventing a pretext to go to war, the trial would have been held just the same, and with the same result. Servia was ready to concede everything essential to the conduct of the trial under Austrian auspices, even to the point of allowing Austrian officials to enter Servian territory All that Servia refused to concede, of the extraordinary demands of Austria, was that the conditions of this extra territorial proceeding be determined by The Hague tribunal. On this point Austria made her pretext to break off the negotiations.

So the world was plunged into the most excuseless, most wasteful war of all modern times. How insignificant was the pretext has now been shown by the termination of the trial. It has resulted in the conviction of the defendants, exactly as it would surely have done if Servia had been at peace with Austria and bound to give facilities to the Austrian officials to get at the facts. Absolutely everything that has been secured during the state of war would have been secured the more readily if the state of war had not existed.

The trial has ended The guilty assassins will within a few days be executed. But the war cannot be stopped.

Growing Older.

Cornelia A. P Comer, in the Atlantic.

What is growing older, anyhow? When young people think of it crudely, physically, it seems to them the wearing out of the body, baldness, wrinkles, obesity, a hardening of the arteries, a general stiffening of the members and the faculties, making responsiveness to life difficult or impossible

Viewing it on a less material plane, they see in it a wearing down of ideals, a crushing out of the dreams, a loss of the glory.

As I see it, growing older is the process of the reconciliation of the spirit to life. Living is simply getting acquainted with the world we live in. The real purpose of a body is that it shall be used up, worn out—and then thrown away—in feeding the spirit. Whatever happens to you in the outer world translates itself, finally, into such sustenance That is what it is for, just as the purpose of food is not to look pretty on china plates, but to be transformed into blood and muscle. It is in the natural order of things that the body should be thus used and exhausted, the unnatural and horrible thing is that the body should be worn out and yet the spirit remain unnourished

When We Meditate.

S. M Crothers, in the Atlantic.

In meditation we are free. We can consider one side and then the other without embarrassment. If we change our opinion because the weight of evidence has shifted, there is no one to exult over us and make us ashamed. If we recognize that we have been mistaken in our assumptions, there is no one to say, "I told you so." We quietly make the necessary adjustments to ever changing reality, and go on with our business of thinking. We are not required to reach any predetermined conclusions. We have no nervous anxiety to catch any particular train of thought, as we are traveling on our own feet, and are willing to put up wherever the night finds us. Hence it is that while discussions go on with great vigor, and few are convinced except of the righteousness of their own cause, meditation often brings unexpected results When we meditate we sometimes change our minds. This is a beneficent achievement, for it renders it unnecessary for us to spend all our strength in attempting to change the order of the universe and the whole direction of human progress, in order to get a sense of the fitness of things.

Accuracy.

From Life.

Accuracy is the longest distance between two points Inaccuracy does not have to consider it is right or not. It can, therefore, arrive at any result it wishes without any trouble or annoyance. But accuracy has to weigh everything, to test each step in the process. That is why it is unpopular Its work consists of a constant series of failures, produced in the most uninteresting manner.

To be accurate is always to be doubtful. The accurate man is therefore a coward. He is constantly building intrenchments. As all of the facts about any particular thing can never be collected, the accurate man has always something to learn. He never gets through. He is interminable. Nowhere does there exist a bigger bore. Having learned the habit of constant evasion and postponement, he is the incarnation of the immoral. He is the apotheosis of negation. The public has no use for him The public is right.

Inaccuracy, on the other hand, is courageous, dramatic and almost invariably delightful. It has the elements that make for success. It is moral because all of its actions are based upon a disregard for self. This it sacrifices, with joyous disregard for consequences. Without it life would be too dull to live.

In Servia when a lover has made up his mind that the girl is ready to marry him, he and his friends arm themselves with rifles, go up to the girl's house, seize and carry her off to a church, and get married on the spot

DEFENDS POPULAR REMEDIES

Speaker Says Newspapers Should Investigate Merits of Medicines Before Barring Advertisements.

That an organized attempt has been made to blacken the reputation of the popular family remedies of this country, and to mislead the newspaper publishers into rejecting the advertising of such medicines, was the charge made by Carl J. Balliett, of Buffalo, N. Y., at the convention of the Advertising Affiliation at Detroit.

Mr. Balliett is a director of the Proprietary Association of America, which includes in its membership two hundred firms which make the popular prepared medicines of America.

Mr. Balliett pointed out that it is the duty of the newspaper publisher to refuse the advertising of any fake or fraudulent medicine, just as it is his duty to refuse any fake or fraudulent advertising, but it is not right to shut down on all medical advertising because there have been some fakers, any more than it would be right to refuse to publish all department store advertising because certain stores have made a practice of lying about bargain sales.

Disease and death are mysteries. People who are perfectly well are skeptical. They laugh at the time-worn patent medicine joke, just as they laugh again and again over the many variations of the operation joke—"The operation was a success but the patient died" This so-called humor has perhaps hurt the medicine business with well people, but when the hitherto healthy man feels a severe pain or illness, he immediately wants medicine, and will bless the cure whether it be at the hands of a regular doctor, a homeopath, an osteopath, a Christian Scientist or patent medicine. There is nothing more deadly than disease; nothing more honorable than to cure it.

Mr. Balliett refuted the idea sought to be spread about that patent medicines are unpopular by showing that from 1900 to 1912 the amount of prepared medicines consumed in America increased from $100,000,000 to $160,000,000 annually. He showed that, although the American Medical Association is trying as an organization to exterminate so-called patent medicines, the family doctor, individually, is not fighting them but prescribing them. He estimated that 40% of the prescriptions written by doctors today include proprietary medicines.

The writings of Dr. Harvey W. Now the fact that Vantine had accidentally come into possesion of a Boule cabinet would probably seem negligible to Grady, whereas it is the one big essential fact in this whole case. And it was you who saw it."

"You saw it,' too," I pointed out. "as soon as I mentioned it."

"Yes; but you mentioned it in a way which made its importance manifest. I couldn't help seeting it. And I believe that we have both arrived at practically the same conclusions. Here they are," and he checked them off on his fingers. "The cabinet contains a secret drawer. This is inevitable, if it really belonged to Madame de Montespan Any cabinet made for her would be certain to have a secret drawer—she would require it, just as she would require lace on her underwear or jeweled buttons on her gloves. That drawer, since it was, perhaps, to contain such priceless documents as the love letters of a king—even more so, if the love letters were from another man!—must be adequately guarded, and, therefore, a mechanism was devised to stab the person attempting to open it and to inject into the wound a poison so powerful as to cause instant death. Am I right so far?"

"Wonderfully right," I nodded. "I had not put it so clearly, even to myself. Go ahead."

"We come to the conclusion, then," continued Godfrey, "that the business of this unknown Frenchman with Vantine in some way concerned this cabinet."

"Vantine himself thought so," I broke in "He told me afterwards that it was because he thought so he consented to see him."

"Good! That would seem to indicate that we are on the right track. The Frenchman's business, then, had something to do with this cabinet, and with this secret drawer. Left to himself, he discovered the cabinet in the room adjoining the ante-room, attempted to open the drawer and was killed."

"Yes," I agreed, "and now how about Vantine?"

"Vantine's death isn't so simply explained. Presumably the unknown woman also called on business relating to the cabinet. She, also, wanted to open the secret drawer, in order to secure its contents—that seems fairly certain from her connection with the first caller"

"You still think it was her photograph he carried in his watch?"

"I am sure of it. But how did it happen that it was Vantine who was killed? Did the woman, warned by the fate of the man, deliberately set Vantine to open the drawer in order that she might run no risk? Or was she also ignorant of the mechanism? Above all, did she succeed in getting away with the contents of the drawer?"

"What was the contents of the drawer?" I demanded.

"Ah, if we only knew!"

"Perhaps the woman had nothing to do with it. Vantine himself told me that he was going to make a careful examination of the cabinet. No doubt that is exactly what he was doing when the woman's arrival interrupted him. He might have let her out of the house himself, and then, returning to the cabinet, stumbled upon the secret drawer after she had gone."

"Yes; that that is quite possible, too. At any rate, you agree with me that both men were killed in some such way as I have described?"

"Absolutely. I think there can be no doubt of it."

"There are objections—and rather weighty ones. The theory explains the two deaths, it explains the similarity of the wounds, it explains how both should be on the right hand just above the knuckles, it explains why both bodies were found in the same place since both men started to summon help. But, in the first place, if the Frenchman got the drawer open, who closed it?"

"Perhaps it closed itself when he let go of it."

"And closed again after Vantine opened it?"

"Yes."

"It would take a very clever mechanism to do that."

"But at least it's possible."

"Oh, yes; it's possible. And we must remember that the poisoners of those days were very ingenious. That was the heydey of La Voisin and the Marquise de Brinvilliers, of Elixi, and heavens knows how many other experts who had followed Catherine de Medici to France. So that's all quite possible. But there is one thing that isn't possible, and that is that a poison which, if it is administered as we think it is, must be a liquid, could remain in that cabinet fresh and ready for use for more than 300 years. It would have dried up centuries ago. Nor would the mechanism stay in order so long. It must be both complicated and delicate. Therefore, it would have to be oiled and overhauled from time to time. If it is worked by a spring — and I don't see how else it can be worked—the spring would have to be renewed and wound up."

"Well?" I asked, as he paused.

"Well, it is evident that the drawer contains something more recent than the love letters of Louis XIV. It must have been put in working order quite recently. But by whom and for what purpose? That is the mystery we have to solve—and it is a mighty pretty one. And here's another objection," he added. "That Frenchman knew about the secret drawer, because, according to our theory, he opened it and got killed. Why didn't he also know about the poison?"

That was an objection, truly, and the more I thought of it, the more serious it seemed.

"It may be," said Godfrey, at last, "that d'Aurelle was going it alone—that he had broken with the gang—"

"The gang?"

"Of course, there is a gang. This thing has taken careful planning and concerted effort. And the leader of the gang is a genius! I wonder if you understand how great a genius? Think: he knows the secret of the drawer of Madame de Montespan's cabinet; but above all he knows the secret of the poison—the poison of the Medici! Do you know what that means, Lester?"

"What does it mean?" I asked, for Godfrey was getting ahead of me.

"It means he is a great criminal—a really great criminal—one of the elect from whom crime has no secrets. Observe. He alone knows the secret of the poison; one of his men breaks away from him, and pays for his mutiny with his life. He is the brain; the others are merely the instruments!"

"Then you don't believe it was by accident that cabinet was sent to Vantine?"

"By accident? Not for an instant! It was part of a plot—and a splendid plot!"

"Can you explain that to me, too?" I queried, a little ironically, for I confess it seemed to me that Godfrey was permitting his imagination to run away with him.

He smiled good naturedly at my tone.

"Of course, this is all mere romancin," he admitted. "I am the first to acknowledge that. I was merely following out our theory to what seemed its logical conclusion. But perhaps we are on the wrong track altogether. Perhaps d'Aurelle, or whatever his name is, just blundered in, like a moth into a candle flame. As for the plot—well, I can guess at it. But suppose you and I had pulled off some big robbery—"

He stopped suddenly, and his face went white and then red.

"What is it, Godfrey?" I cried, for his look frightened me.

He lay back in his chair, his hands pressed over his eyes. I could see how they were trembling—how his whole body was trembling.

"Wait!" he said hoarsely. "Wait!" Then he sat upright, his face tense with anxiety. "Lester!" he cried, his voice shrill with fear. "The cabinet—it isn't guarded!"

"Yes, it is," I said. "At least I thought of that!"

And I told him of the precautions I had taken to keep it safe. He heard me out with a sigh of relief.

"That's better," he said. "Parks would not stand much show, I'm afraid, if worst came to worst, but I think the cabinet is safe—for tonight. And before another night, Lester, we will have a look for ourselves."

"A look?"

"Yes, for the secret drawer!"

I stared at him fascinated, shrinking.

"And we shall find it'" he added.

"D'Aurelle and Vantine found it," I muttered thickly.

"Well?"

"And they're both dead'"

"It won't kill us. We will go about it armored, Lester. That poisoned fang may strike——"

"Don't!" I cried, and cowered back into my chair. "I—I can't do it, Godfrey. God knows, I'm no coward—but not that!"

"You shall watch me do it!" he said.

"That would be even worse!"

"But I'll be ready, Lester. There will be no danger. Come, man! Why, it's the chance of a lifetime—to rifle the secret drawer of Madame de Montespan! Yes!" he added, his eyes glowing, "and to match ourselves against the greatest criminal of modern times!"

His shrill laugh told how excited he was.

"And do you know what we shall find in that drawer, Lester? But no—it is only a guess—the wildest sort of a guess—but if it is right—if it is right!"

He sprang from his chair, biting his lips, his whole frame quivering. But he was calmer in a moment.

"And, you will help me, Lester? You will come?"

There was a wizardry in his manner not to be resisted. Besides—to rifle the secret drawer of Madame de Montespan! To match oneself against the greatest criminal of modern times! What an adventure!

"Yes," I answered, with a quick intaking of the breath, "I will come!"

He clapped me on the shoulder, his face beaming.

"I knew you would! Tomorrow night, then—I'll call for you here at 7 o'clock. We'll have dinner together—and then, hey for the great secret! Agreed?

"Agreed!" I said.

He caught up coat and hat and started for the door

"There are things to do,' he said, "that armour to prepare—the plan of campaign to consider, you know Good night, then, till—this evening'"

The door closed behind him, and his footsteps died away down the hall. I looked at my watch—it was nearly 2 o'clock.

Dizzily I went to bed But my sleep was broken by a fearful dream—a dream of a serpent, with blazing eyes and dripping fangs, poised to strike!

CHAPTER X.

PREPARATIONS.

My first thought, when I awoke the next morning, was for Parks, for Godfrey's manner had impressed me with the feeling that Parks was in much more serious danger than either he or I suspected. It was with a lively sense of relief, therefore, that I heard Parks' voice answer my call on the 'phone.

"This is Mr. Lester," I said. "Is everything all right?"

"Everything serene, sir,' he answered. "It would take a mighty smooth burglar to get in here now, sir."

"How is that?" I asked.

"Reporters are camped all around the house, sir. They seem to think somebody else will be killed here today."

He laughed as he spoke the words, but I was far from thinking the idea an amusing one.

"I hope not," I said, quickly "And don't let any of the reporters in, nor talk to them. Tell them they must go to the police for their information. If they get too annoying, let me know, and I'll have an officer sent around."

"Very good, sir."

"And, Parks."

"Yes, sir?"

As to the Ode, "Rule Britannia."

Who wrote the ode, "Rule Britannia?" No doubt nearly evryone will answer, James Thomson, and I dare say that is the correct answer, says the writer of "Sub Rosa" in the Daily News and Leader (London). But there have been disputes about this, for the ode forms part of a mask dealing with the fortunes of Alfred the Great, and written by James Thomson and David Mallet in collaboration, and there have been people who have contended that Thomson does not deserve the sole credit. We are indebted to a certain extent to Frederick, Prince of Wales, son of George II, and father of George III, for the renowned ode. George II had no real British sympathies, and in those days it was customary for a Prince of Wales to hold and express views opposite to those of his father, and so Frederick was markedly pro-British in his tastes. He lived at Cliefden, on the Thames, and he resolved to give a splendid entertainment there in honor of the accession of the House of Honover and also to celebrate the birthday of his little daughter, Princess Augusta. So he called to his aid David Mallet, James Thomson, and also John Rich, who was a famous and successful actor manager, and they were set to work to produce something worthy of the occasion.

It was on Friday, August 1, 1740, that the mask "Alfred" was produced at Cliefden. The famous ode was sung in worthy style when heard for the first time, as the solo was taken by Thomas Lowe, of whom the celebrated Dr. Burney has said, "Lowe has the finest tenor voice I ever heard in my life," And when at the end of each of the six stanzas the chorus broke in with the refrain those who were present knew that they had heard something that would last. It has lasted and it will last. Southey had a great regard for the ode, and declared it to be the political hymn of Britain as long as she maintains her political power.

Put That Pain to Use

The network of nerves in your body, like the network of wires in a burglar alarm system, gives quick warning when anything is going wrong inside. Looking at it in this way a pain is a useful alarm. Now, kidney weakness is a dangerous thing—a condition not to be neglected—and it is wise to know and pay attention to the early alarm signals of sick kidneys.

Backache is a common warning of congestion or inflammation in the kidneys. It may be dull, nagging pain, or a sharp twinge when stooping or lifting. There are likely to be disorders of urination, dizziness, headaches, and drowsy, despondent, tired feelings.

It is very hard to strengthen weak kidneys at first, but neglect invites rheumatic or neuralgic attacks, gravel, dropsy, and fatal Bright's disease.

As a special medicine for weak kidneys Doan's Kidney Pills have been used for years all over the civilized world, and surely are considered reliable. The patient can always help the medicine immensely, however, by dieting lightly, using little or no liquor, tea or coffee, keeping regular hours and drinking lots of pure water.

"I can hardly straighten up."

As to Doan's Kidney Pills, read the following enthusiastic endorsement by one who has tested them.

PAIN AND SWELLING

Serious Attack of Kidney Complaint Caused Untold Misery

O. K. Booth, painter, Randolph, Neb., says "The first symptom that my kidneys was disordered was when my back began to ache severely Sharp pains darted throughout my body and my hands were numb This was followed by swelling of my limbs and puffy sacs under my eyes. My health was all run down and I had to neglect my work for nearly a month. Sometimes I had to hobble about with the aid of a cane I was all doubled up and could get little rest at night I had chills and fever and had to be propped up in bed in order to get any relief from the constant pain in my back At times the secretions were scant and painful in passage and contained sediment. I tried all kinds of remedies and wore plasters, but with little or no benefit. When I had almost given up in despair I heard of Doan's Kidney Pills. They brought me quick relief from the backache and lameness and by the time I had finished four boxes, my health was restored. Since then I have been free from kidney trouble."

TWO WAYS TO LOOK AT IT

If Customer Was In Luck In Getting Hat to Fit Him, How About the Shop Keeper?

After playing a matinee performance recently in Omaha, relates a popular actor, I discovered my hat was missing from my dressing room. This was really a serious loss, for, being possessed of an exceptionally large head, it is not unsually necessary for me to visit every hat shop in the town before I can find a hat to fit. Finally, after a lot of effort and determination, I found a hat shop where they had just one hat that would fit me, I inquired the price of it, and the shop keeper answered with an encouraging smile that it was five dollars. It struck me that the hat wasn't worth that, being somewhat out of date, I offered him two and a half

"Two and a half!" he exclaimed, shrugging his shoulders. "Why, you ought to be mighty glad to get that even for five dollars. Where will you be able to find a hat large enough to fit your head?"

"That may be true," I answered, "but where will you be able to find a head large enough to fit your hat?"

I got the hat for two and a half

FABLE THAT CARRIES MORAL

Comparison of Lusty Falsehood With Certain Closs of Truths Is Worth Consideration.

A fox that was caught in a farmer's hen coop concluded that prevarication might save him In response to the farmer's query as to what he meant by stealing chickens, the fox said: "I never stole chickens in my life. I'm a vegetarian."

"What were you doing in my hen coop?"

"I merely stopped here to talk about the war from a perfectly neutral standpoint."

"But how about that dead and half-eaten chicken? Perhaps you know nothing about that?"

"But I do, though," said the fox. "A mink did that. He ran away at your approach I would have left, too, but the smell of fresh blood made me sick and faint."

When the farmer regained consciousness the fox was gone and so was another fat hen.

A REBELLION

Food Demanded.

The human body will stand a lot of abuse, but sometime it will surely rebel and demand proper food in place of the pasty, starchy, greasy stuffs on which it has been made sick.

Then is the time to try Grape-Nuts, the most scientific and perfect food in the world.

A lady of Washington says: "Three years ago I was very ill with catarrh of the stomach and was given up to die by one doctor. I laid in bed four months and my stomach was so weak that I could not keep down medicine or hardly any kind of food and was so weak and emaciated after four months of this starvation that my daughter could easily lift me from bed and put me in my chair.

"But weak as my stomach was, it accepted, relished and digested Grape-Nuts without any difficulty the first time that wonderful food was tried.

"I am now strong and in better health than for a great many years and am gradually growing still stronger. I rely on Grape-Nuts for much of the nourishment that I get. The results have certainly been wonderful in my case and prove that no stomach is so weak it will not digest Grape-Nuts.

"My baby got fat from feeding on Grape-Nuts I was afraid I would have to stop giving the food to him, but I guess it is a healthy fat, for his health is just perfect." Name given by Postum Co Battle Creek, Mich.

I have lived for 45 years and I have never used alcohol or tobacco in any form I have never indulged in profane language, and I have never allowed myself to tell an untruth. Weak Heart

Many people suffer from weak hearts. They may experience shortness of breath on exertion, pain over the heart, or dizzy feelings, oppressed breathing after meals or their eyes become blurred, the heart is not sufficiently strong to pump blood to the extremities, and they have cold hands and feet, or poor appetite because of weakened blood supply to the stomach. A heart tonic and alterative should be taken which has no bad after-effect. Such is which contains no dangerous narcotics or alcohol.

It helps the human system in the constant manufacture of rich, red blood. It helps the stomach to assimilate or take up the proper elements from the food, thereby helping digestion and curing dyspepsia, heart-burn and many uncomfortable symptoms, stops excessive tissue waste in convalescence from fevers; for the run-down, anemic, thin-blooded people, the "Discovery" is refreshing and vitalising.

Solving the Low Cost of Buying

Everybody is talking about the high cost of living and racking their brains for a solution.

That's easy. All you have to do is to solve the "Low Cost of Buying." Study carefully the Quality and the Price before you part with your money, for the one is as essential as the other. A few pennies saved on each article used by the average family would amount to a considerable sum in the run of a year. It reduces the cost of living.

We have solved the "Low Cost of Buying" from the manufacturer, and you will solve it when you come to us; for we are slicing off the pennies for you which the manufacturer had to slice off for us.

Meet us face to face, and you will go home with a smile.

Call and look over our New Fall and Winter Goods. A large line to select from.

Philip Behringer returned from Hartley last week where he went to see John Neibel, who was very seriously injured in an automobile accident October 23rd. Mr. Neibel will be remembered by many of the older settlers as a former resident of this vicinity and they will be glad to know that he is now on the road to recovery

The Treble Clef Club, the first number of the 1914-15 lecture course will be held at the opera house next Tuesday evening. If you have not already purchased a season ticket do so now, as this season's course will be the best ever, and by getting a season ticket and having your seat reserved you are assured of a good seat for every number on the course

Hartley Blewitt went to Ft Dodge Monday where he is a witness in a damage suit against the Great Western Railway He was an eye witness to an accident at Thornton last summer when a traveling man was killed near the depot platform by being run over by the train The widow has sued the railroad company, and he is one of the principal witnesses

Mrs Thompson and family arrived from Lake Mills last week to take charge of the hotel and are now nicely established in the business. The Elders will occupy the rooms over the harness shop as soon as the Ross family are able to move into the Philip Ell property, which is now occupied by Mr and Mrs A Gibbs, who will soon be able to move into their own new modern home.

A W. Ross was called to Wellsburg, Saturday by a message announcing the serious illness of his father, but before he arrived his father had passed away. Our readers will remember that the deceased underwent an operation for appendicitis about six weeks ago. The operation left him in such a weak condition that pneumonia developed which was the direct cause of his death He was 58 years of age. The many Klemme friends of Mr and Mrs. A. W. Ross extend to them the hand of sympathy.

THE WONDERS OF SCIENCE

Our prize delinquent subscriber wandered into town the other day and, all unsuspecting, we lured him up to a local doctor's office and tipped the doc to give him the Twilight Sleep treatment. And say, the doc is some treater! He had the d s. in the twilight zone as quickly as you could break your wrist with the crank of a Ford In two minutes we separated the patient from the money he had been owing us since the time when Heintz had only one pickle. When he came to he was holding a receipt in full in his hand Then we told him. He was tickled to death. He said that heretofore he simply couldn't bring himself to pay up, because he dreaded the pain. We turned over all the money to the doc and told him to invest it in more chloroform. We are ing into this business RIGHT!

THE NEW WET AND DRY LINE-UP

As a result of the November elections there are now fourteen states in the dry column. They are Arizona, Colorado, Georgia, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, Tennessee, Virginia, Washington and West Virginia.

There remain 15 states in which half of the population live in so-called no-license territory. They are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Hampshire, South Carolina, South Dakota Texas and Vermont.

There remain eleven states in which 25 per cent of the population lives in no-license territory. They are California, Deleware, Illinois, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Ohio, Utah, Wisconsin and Wyoming. At different times in the past 23 states have adopted the policy of prohibition. All but nine for one reason or another, abandoned it for local option control by license.

California and Ohio, out of the states in which state-wide prohibition amendments were voted on this fall elected to remain in the wet column. In Ohio the new amendment to the constitution practically places the state in the wet column forever, as it provides that no new liquor legislation shall be introduced into the legislature. The present laws, however, are very strict and are carried out to the letter. The new amendment does not prohibit the holding of wet and dry elections in communities, under the laws that are at present in force.

The Rapture of the Year.

A THANKSGIVING STORY.

(Copyright 1913, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

Jack was a little yellow dog His little master, Robbie Barnes, found him when he was a puppy in a lot where some bad boys were tormenting him.

These bad boys had poor little Jack in a box too deep for him to jump out of and were throwing sticks and stones to make him bark.

He was very much frightened when Robbie rescued him and he nestled close inside Robbie's coat and heard him say to the boys "You fellers ought to be ashamed of yourselves plaguing a little puppy I wish he was big enough to bite you"

Now Robbie's mother was very poor, and his father was dead, so that when Jack was brought into the family Robbie's mother saw only one more to feed

"You will have to give him away," she said "We do not have enough for our

CLOSE CALL AT MESERVEY

Experience a Fire Scare Last Week

Monday just after the dinner hour our citizens were startled by the cry of fire which was discovered in O Strasburg's pool hall, caused from an overheated stove setting too close to a partition.

The fire company responded very promptly and in a short time had the fire out. Chemical extinguishers were used, but the boys were there with the hose cart in a short time and were ready if their services were needed

The wind was coming from the northwest and it would have been a disastrous fire for Meservey if it had not been noticed just when it was.

The partition was badly burned but the building was saved.

Great care should be taken by all in regard to fires, they are good servants, but poor masters.—Register

Wr. Wickersheim, who has been doing carpenter work at Klemme, returned home the first of the week - Meservey Register.

Hartley Blewett of Klemme, spent Sunday visiting at the Harold Blewett home and also with home folks at Thornton.—Meservey Register.

DES MOINES ASKS AN EXTENSION OF LIMIT TO BUY WATER WORKS

Showing Made In Federal Court That Foreign War Has Hurt Bond Market.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 21.—The city has filed a request in federal court asking an extension of time for the payment of $2,302,522 for the purchase of the Des Moines waterworks. The court is asked to fix the date for the payment [illegible] after May 1, 1915.

The petition recites that the proposition to purchase the waterworks was submitted to the voters on November 3 and that the affirmative vote was sufficiently large to meet the requirements of the Iowa statutes.

Because of the present financial condition of the country and the bond market due to the existing European war and other causes it would be practically impossible to sell the bonds at this time or receive a reasonable and fair price for them, the application states.

In any event the attorneys for the city claim that it would be impossible to make the sale in time to secure money to pay into the court before December 3 as provided in an order entered by Judge Smith McPherson several months ago.

Among other things the city asserts the sale of the bonds [illegible] would work a great [illegible] would result in the [illegible] of money [illegible] addition [illegible] bonds.

the fighting in [illegible] weather has number and exhausted the soldiers so that great physical effort is almost out of the question. The weather in Belgium is compared with a bleak, windy December day on the New England coast. The storm continues and the waters of the North sea flow through the locks at Nieuport, which the allies opened to flood the lowlands and hold back the German advance.

Germans Plan Advance.

Notwithstanding the extent of the flooded area the invaders hope to renew their advance. Large numbers of engineers are being sent to the front, and German ingenuity is to be put to the test to provide a scientific method of crossing the inundated country.

Artillery duels and boat forays are the only features of the military situation there. The advent of damp and bitter cold weather with the disease and privations incident to its coming promises to make both the eastern and western fronts scenes of great suffering. Parallels for what may be witnessed this coming winter are being sought in Napoleon's retreat from Moscow.

GERMANS PLAN MEANS TO CROSS DELUGED SECTION

Bruges, Belgium, Thursday, Nov. 19. (via Sluis and London) Nov. 20.—Large bodies of German engineers have been seen passing toward the front according to information received here and it is believed the Germans are planning to cross the inundated country by scientific engineering methods.

In the meanwhile the western storm continues and the waters of the North sea are sweeping inland through the six big locks at Nieuport.

It is learned here that the Germans on November 18 attempted a raid on these locks, which are built in a semicircle. Their attack, which was conducted in a number of armed automobiles was repulsed.

The fortifications which have been constructed all through West Flanders for use in case of an eventual German retreat evidently now are completed for the troops employed in their construction have all gone to the front.

The snow in Flanders continues. There is much illness among the men in the trenches and the past few days have seen little fighting.

ATTACKS LESS FURIOUS ON WESTERN BATTLE LINE

Paris, Nov. 20.—The French official communication issued this afternoon says that yesterday there were hardly any infantry attacks on the part of the enemy and that their artillery activity also was largely reduced.

The text of the communication follows:

"The day of November 19 was marked by the almost absence of infantry attacks on the part of the enemy at the same time their artillery fire was much less violent than on the afternoon of November 18.

"To the north the weather has been very bad and snow has fallen. All the region of the Yser canal to the east of Dixmude is invaded by the waters.

"In front of Ramscapelle we have withdrawn from the water two 16.5 centimeter mortars abandoned by the Germans. There has been a very fairly intense artillery fire to the south of Ypres.

"On the center there have been no important actions to report. In the Argonne three vigorous attacks on the part of the enemy's infantry have been repulsed.

"On our right wing the Germans have reoccupied the destroyed section of Chauvoncourt. Further to the east we have made some progress.

PINK OYSTER NEW FREAK OF NATURE

Rosy Hued Bivalve Throws Scare Into Epicureans of Washington.

Washington, Nov. 21.—Pink oysters are the latest freak of nature under investigation by experts of the department of agriculture. The rosy hued bivalve comes from Long Island Sound, looks like a regular oyster when gathered, but turns up pink on the plate of the ultimate consumer.

Frightened epicureans besieged the bureau of chemistry with inquiries and a volunteer poison squad found the pink oyster not only harmless, but delicious. The chemists have a theory that the oysters are turned pink either by a wild yeast baccilius or some other micro-organism.

The corps of scientists which has decided such vexing questions as when is an egg an egg, is expected to find a solution for the latest question.

EXTEND RESERVE BANKS OVER CANAL

Create Credit System Between United States Producers and Latin Americans By Measure.

Memphis, Tenn., Nov. 21.—Organization of a large banking corporation and establishment in Latin America, of branches of the regional reserve banks as a means of opening the financial channels between the United States and the countries of Latin America were committee suggestions awaiting presentation when the international trade conference of the Mississippi valley and central west resumed its sessions here today.

Other recommendations included an appeal to congress to improve the navigable rivers of the United States and the inauguration of a movement to aid the inland carriers of the southern republics in the development of their business.

Barrett's Program.

"The Mississippi valley and its tributary sections between the Alleghenies and the Rockies have a remarkable and peculiarly advantageous relationship to the Latin American commercial opportunity, which is not generally appreciated," said John Barrett, director general of the Pan-American union, addressing the union. "This conference should give a punch to this relationship which will result in practical action and real achievement. This meeting should mark the beginning of a new and progressive period, not only in appreciation of the Latin American field, but activity in getting into great broad touch with its opportunities.

"Let us therefore at the very outset, realize the special sphere of Pan-American commercial opportunity which appeals directly to this vast section represented here today. The figures and facts I give you are those based upon the most recently compiled data of the Pan-American union as an international organization.

"To sum up, the Mississippi valley's special sphere of opportunity and activity in Latin America comprises portions of 16 countries, a population of nearly 50,000,000, and a present foreign trade of $1,400,000,000, which must, with no exaggeration of possibilities, grow to $2,800,000,000 within the next 10 years. These figures do not include the great foreign commerce, valued at $1,600,000,000, of Brazil, Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay, which form the special sphere of opportunity for the Atlantic coast and the eastern section of the United States.

Now what is to be done in the premises?

"First. Special credit and attention should be given to those persons, firms and organizations which have for many years been working successfully in this field. What they have done and are doing should be carefully studied and followed.

"Second. The whole situation must be approached from the Latin American as well as the United States standpoint, and from the side of imports of raw products for our manufacturing plants as well as of exports of our finished manufactured goods and that surplus of our agricultural products that are suited to their markets. Ships must have return as well as outgoing cargoes.

"Third. Latin America at the moment needs money as much as the merchandise of the Missippi valley and the country at large. If the financial institutions of the Mississippi valley could lend Latin America $500,000,000 during the next five years they would by that agency alone and in that period increase the Mississippi valley trade with Latin America $1,500,000,000. Some method must be devised by the federal reserve board and private banking and trust companies to meet the situation, for Europe can supply only a small amount of money to Latin America for the next decade.

"Fourth. A g[illegible] and immediate need of the hou[illegible] well organized and developed banking and credit facilities for the commercial and financial transactions of Latin America and the Mississippi valley especially in the spheres of influence of the Caribbean sea and the western coast of Latin America. The banking, commercial, manufacturing, exporting and importing interests of the principal industrial centers and ports of the Missippi valley should therefore at once set themselves to working out this vital problem.

"Fifth. As soon as possible, regular and permanent mail, passenger and freight steamship service under the United States flag must be established between the gulf ports of the Mississippi valley and those of its sphere of opportunity in Latin America—one going through the canal and down the west coast of South America as far as Valparaiso, and another through the canal and up the west coast of Central America and Mexico to California. Latin America today realizes the need of this service and calls as eagerly for it as does the Mississippi valley."

ge One Great Theme for Thanks

By WALDO PONDRAY WARREN.

RATITUDE is a word that comprehends the happiness of the human race. It turns the heart toward the untain of all good and so makes ssible a greater receptivity and reater joy. Without it even ories of heaven could not confer appiness, and all the sweet amenities of life would fail. With it the humblest home may be blest with l visits, and one step upward the depths of grief may be ght with a new-found joy.

But shall we be grateful for the e incidents of life and forget to supremely grateful for life itself? We murmur so much at the ditions of life, and as a reluctant cession we admit that this is better than that, and so we express our ble thanks—praising the beauty single leaf while murmuring he tree that bore it.

Are you truly grateful for life? you glad that you were born? you accept your life from the l of God as His richest gift—containant of all other possible sings?

Life is a wonderful gift—the most wonderful and the most blessed gift that the Infinite God could plan for the objects of His love. We have hardly begun to learn how great it is, how great it can be. Beginning at birth, and through childhood, youth and age, it stretches out into the realms of Eternity—ever growing vaster and yet more vast in its approximation of limitless possibilities. If you had not been born you would never have known life—the sum of all blessings. Are you glad that you were born?

The unqualified acceptance of life, with all its mystery and pain, all its labor and weariness, and yet with all its sweetness and joy, and all its latent potentiality—that is and forever must be the basis of true Gratitude, the one great theme for thanks. Unless you are grateful for life itself you cannot be truly glad for anything that life contains. But being grateful for life itself adds a tinge of celestial glory to every simple blessing and makes Today akin to the vast Forever.

and green lights confronted her like the eyes of some dragon-like, unpleasant memory

Drusilla had entirely forgotten Sam Thorne—and it had been her quarrel with Sam Thorne which had been the cause of her leaving Laurelton

She hurried past the brightly lighted doorway, but paused near the window, where she caught a glimpse of a young man in a white coat dispensing ice cream soda to a group of laughing girls. At first she thought it was Sam Thorne himself until she recollected that Sam must be stout and rather bald by this time

Her cheeks were burning as she hastened on with this old memory tugging at her heart.

Drusilla's Aunt Lucetta Mills lived in a little white house beyond the school house and Drusilla's old home had been a few hundred yards further on.

She turned in at the little white gate which seemed smaller than ever to her eyes and felt a sudden depression as she noted that the house was dark.

Her repeated knocks at the side door brought a neighbor from an adjoining house.

"Lucetty Mills has gone over to Rockybrook to her daughter's," said the woman peering curiously at the dark form on the porch. "Who be it?"

"Thank you," said Drusilla stiffly, and she waited until the woman had gone back into her own house before she went away.

Her heart beat rebelliously as she realized that there was only one thing to do now That was to go to the hotel and stay until Aunt Lucetta came home.

She would spend Thanksgiving alone after all.

Now she was at the gate of her old home. She leaned against it and stared at the transformation that had taken place in the old house. The outlines were the same but some skillful hand had rebuilt, preserved, and improved until the house looked as it must have looked that day when Drusilla's father brought her mother there a bride.

Drusilla wondered who had bought the old place—Aunt Lucetta had never told her in those gossipy monthly letters. She bowed her head on the gatepost and listened to the wind blowing through the trees, with hopeless longing in her heart. How easily, carelessly, one parted with happiness. Drusilla never heard a step on the path nor a voice that addressed her in concerned inquiry

It was not until firm hands lifted her head and turned her face to the searching light of the full moon that Drusilla cried out sharply and drew back.

"Who is it?" asked a voice that was vaguely familiar

Drusilla's head drooped wearily. She was very tired and she did not care if folks did hear that she had been found staring wistfully at her old home.

"I am Drusilla Orde—I used to live here," she said.

"Drusilla? No" The man strode forward

"Drusilla, don't you know me?" he asked tensely

"It's—it's Sam Thorne," said Drusilla faintly. "What are you doing here?"

"I live here—I bought the old place, Drusilla—I had a silly notion that you might come home some day and if you did I wanted you to find the old place and me waiting for you. Of course I knew you might get married—" he hesitated.

Drusilla laughed softly—such a happy laugh.

"There isn't a chance of my getting married, Sam? unless you ask me," she said bravely

"Do you mean it, Drusilla?" he demanded eagerly "I've been waiting all these years—and it's been hard—and if you do mean it, dear, we can go over to the minister's and be married tonight. You can spend Thanksgiving in your own home."

"Let us go, Sam—to the minister's," said Drusilla.

The Founder of Cold Storage.

From the Daily Oklahoman.

The death of Charles Tellier presents a lamentable example of the failure of an important inventor to secure for himself even a tithe of the benefits and profits which he bestowed upon the world. He died at the age of 86, in actual destitution, after years of neglect and dependence upon charity, says the New York Tribune.

Yet he was the founder of one of the most important factors in the trade and industry of the world, namely, artificial refrigeration as applied to transportation, storage and manufactures. It was nearly 40 years ago that the first cargo of frozen meat was shipped across the ocean in a vessel equipped with cold storage compartments according to his design. Today the values of such shipments amount to hundreds of millions of dollars every year

It was also largely from Mr. Tellier's initiative that there was developed other applications of refrigeration, such as cold storage warehouses, ice making, the artificial cooling of hotels and theaters, the cooling and storing of beer and milk, cooling processes in steel manufacture and in the sinking of mine shafts, artificial ice skating rinks and many others. As late as last year a new desiccating process invented by him at the age of 84 was put into practice by a large corporation.

His case provides a striking contrast to those of some inventors who so enrich themselves through close monopolies of their works as to provoke demands for the abolition of the patent laws.

BE THANKFUL FOR

These to be thankful for: a friend,
A work to do, a way to wend
And these in which to take delight:
The wind that turns the poplars white,
Wonder and gleam of common things—
Sunlight upon a sea gull's wings
Odors of earth and dew-drenched lawns
The pageantry of darks and dawns;
Blue vistas of a city street
At twilight music passing feet;
The thrill of Spring, half joy, half pain,
The deep voice of the Autumn rain—
Shall we not be content with these
Imperishable mysteries,
And, jocund-hearted, take our share
Of joy and pain, and find life fair?
Wayfarers on a road where we
Set forth each day right valiantly,
Expectant, dauntless, blithe, content
To make the Great Experiment.
—Constance D'Arcy Mackay.

THANKSGIVING THOUGHTS.

The Rapture of the Year.

When the skies glint bright with bluest light
Through clouds that race o'er field and town,
And leaves go dancing left and right,
And orchard apples tumble down,
While school girls sweet, in lane or street,
Lean 'gainst the wind and feel and hear
Its glad heart like a lover's beat—
So reigns the rapture of the year

Then ho! and hey! and whoop-hooray!
Though winter clouds be looming,
Remember a November day
Is merrier than mildest May
With all her blossoms blooming.

While birds in scattered flight are blown
Aloft and lost in dusky mist,
And truant boys scud home alone
'Neath skies of gold and amethyst;
While twilight falls, and Echo calls
Across the haunted atmosphere,
With low, sweet laughs at intervals—
So reigns the rapture of the year

Then ho! and hey! and whoop hooray!
Though winter clouds be looming,
Remember a November day
Is merrier than mildest May
With all her blossoms blooming
—Riley.

Harvest.

And now with autumn's moonlit eves
Its harvest-time has come,
We pluck away the frosted leaves,
And bear the treasure home.
Then let the good old crop adorn
The hills our fathers trod,
Still let us, for His golden corn,
Send up our thanks to God.
—John Greenleaf Whittier.

TWO STORIES OF ROBERT E. LEE

From the New York Evening Post.

Robert E. Lee's aversion to hero worship was crossed more than once, but upon one occasion his humor came to his rescue.

It was in the summer of 1867, which Lee was spending at White Sulphur Springs, Va. Two Englishmen and their families, attracted by the presence of the ex-confederate general, went to the springs, made his acquaintance and managed to be with him on his walks.

One day he was asked by Mrs. Ransome, whose husband, one of Lee's staff, tells the story in the South Atlantic Quarterly, if his new friends were not a trouble to him.

"Yes," was his reply; "they trouble me a little, but I think I get even with them. When they join me in my walks I always take them down to the springs and make them drink the water. They are too polite to refuse, and I fill them up with that nauseous water, and thus have my revenge.

An incident more in consonance with his reputation for kindliness has to do with a northerner. A union man from West Virginia came to the springs, bringing his daughter, a handsome, splendidly gowned young woman. But the other women would have nothing to do with the child of one who had fought against the south, and their example was enough to isolate the girl completely. One evening, when everybody was in the ballroom, Lee passed through one of the parlors and saw the ostracized girl reading. He introduced himself and invited her to go to the ball with him. They entered the room in time to join the grand promenade which preceded the dancing.

When this part of the affair was over and Lee had led the girl to a seat, there was a general demand for introductions, and—so runs the veracious chronicle—the daughter of the despised northerner actually became the belle of the season.

Inconsistency.

From the National Monthly.

"Wimmen certainly ain't got no consistency"

"What's the matter, John?"

"Me wife chased me out wid a rollin' pin this morning and then cried because I left home without kissing her goodby."

A THANKSGIVING STORY.

(Copyright, 1913, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Jack was a little yellow dog His little master, Robbie Barnes, found him when he was a puppy in a lot where some bad boys were tormenting him.

These bad boys had poor little Jack in a box too deep for him to jump out of and were throwing sticks and stones to make him bark

He was very much frightened when Robbie rescued him and he nestled close inside Robbie's coat and heard him say to the boys. "You fellers ought to be ashamed of yourselves plaguing a little puppy. I wish he was big enough to bite you."

Now Robbie's mother was very poor, and his father was dead, so that when Jack was brought into the family Robbie's mother saw only one more to feed.

"You will have to give him away," she said "We do not have enough for ourselves, and then you will have to pay the license, too, you cannot keep him."

But Robbie overcame all obstacles; he worked and paid the license, and in time every one was so fond of Jack that he seemed like one of the family.

One day, not long before Thanksgiving, Robbie's mother said "We will have to do without turkey this year, there have been so many ways for the money to go that we shall be lucky to have a roof over our heads"

Even the money Robbie earned had to go for shoes for himself and his little sister, so there was to be no Thanksgiving dinner.

Robbie did not care for himself, but when he saw the tears in his sister's eyes and in the still night heard his mother crying as she prayed that her little family should be cared for, he felt sure it was going without the Thanksgiving dinner that made her cry.

Robbie thought and thought, but there was no way he could think of what would get the dinner Yes, there was one, it made him feel sick to think about it.

In the room at school with Robbie was a boy named Frank Reed. Frank's father was a wealthy man and Frank had everything that he wanted. All but one thing, and that was Jack.

Jack could do all sorts of tricks and his devotion to Robbie and his willingness to obey him made all the boys envious. Of course, Frank could have had a dog worth much more than Jack, but he wanted Jack because he could do tricks.

"I'll give you $5 for him," Frank said one day after he had watched Jack perform his tricks.

Five dollars seemed a fortune to Robbie, but he did not hesitate. "No," he said, "I won't sell him no matter how much you offer."

"I don't blame you," replied Frank, "but if ever you do want to sell him let me have him."

As Robbie lay there in the dark thinking of a way to get the Thanksgiving dinner, he remember Frank's offer. He put it out of his mind, but it would come back, and by morning he had made up his mind to part with Jack.

All traces of tears which he had shed were wiped away, and he gave Jack a good breakfast and had him do all his tricks. Jack seemed to know something bothered his little master and after each trick would jump up and lick his face and put his paws on Robbie's shoulder, as though to tell him how much he loved him.

Robbie choked back the tears and put on his cap. "Come on, Jack," he called.

Frank was only too glad to give the $5, but Jack whined and cried when he found that he was not to go with Robbie.

"Keep him in for a day or two," he told Frank; "he will run away if you don't." Poor Robbie, he ran as fast as he could to get out of reach of Jack's cries and his eyes were wet when he reached the market.

"Where did you get this turkey and vegetables?" asked his mother when she saw the basket Robbie brought home.

"I sold Jack to Frank Reed," said Robbie, turning away; "he wanted him and he can give Jack a better home than we can, so I let him have him."

"You sold Jack?" she asked. "You go and get him this minute and take this dinner back"

"I can't do that," said Robbie. "I sold Jack and that is all there is to it."

Thanksgiving day, when the steaming turkey and fixings were put on the table, Robbie's sister and mother were the ones who seemed to enjoy it. Robbie did not; every piece of turkey seemed to choke him; he could only think of Jack.

"Someone is at the door," said Robbie's mother, "I heard it rattle."

Robbie opened it and in bounded Jack. He barked and jumped up to Robbie as though to say: "I got here in time for Thanksgiving dinner, didn't I?"

The dinner was forgotten, and Robbie's sister and mother gathered around Jack, as pleased as he was to see them.

When they sat down at the table again Jack was in his accustomed place beside Robbie's chair, and from time to time he ate of the dinner which he unconsciously had provided.

When the dinner was over Robbie took his cap and called to Jack, but Jack seemed to know what was to happen, and he crawled under the stove and refused to move.

Poor Robbie could not keep the tears back this time, but he took Jack in his arms and started for Frank's.

Robbie's tears fell fast on Jack's little head as he walked along, for Jack kept his face close to his little master's, as though to plead with him not to leave him.

"Here's Jack," said Robbie as Frank opened the door in answer to his ring.

"I thought he would go to you," said Frank. "He ran out this morning when the maid wasn't looking. But it is no use, Rob; he won't do a thing for me, and he won't eat, either. Father says he will die if I keep him, so I guess you had better take him back."

"But I can't," said Robbie. "I have spent the money, I bought our Thanksgiving dinner with it."

Robbie's face was very red as he finished his confession and he looked away from Frank. But Frank put his hand on Robbie's shoulder. "You're a brick, Rob," he said. "I want to say something, but I don't know how you will take it, that $5 belonged to me

THANKSGIVING.

Lord, Thou hast given me a cell,
Wherein to dwell,
A little house, whose humble roof
Is weather proof;
Under the sparres of which I lie
Both soft and drie;
Where Thou, my chamber for to ward,
Hast set a guard
Of harmless thoughts, to watch and keep Me, while I sleep
Low is my porch, as is my fate,
Both void of state;
And yet the threshold of my doore
Is worne by th' poore,
Who thither come, and freely get
Good words or meat.
Like as my parlour, so my hall
And kitchin's small
A little butterie, and therein
A little byn
Which keeps my little loafe of bread
Unchipt unfiled,
Some brittle sticks of thorne or briar
Make me a fire,
Close by whose living coale I sit,
And glow like it.
Lord, I confess, too, when I dine,
The pulse is Thine,
And all those other bits that bee
There placed by Thee,
The worts, the purslain, and the messe
Of water cresse
Which of Thy kindnesses Thou has sent;
And my content
Makes those, and my beloved beet
To be more sweet
'Tis Thou that crownest my glittering hearth
With guiltlesse mirthe.
And givest me wassaile bowls to drink,
Spic'd to the brink.
Lord, 'tis Thy plenty-dropping hand
That soiles my land,
And giv'st me, for my bushell sowne,
Twice ten for one;
Thou mak'st my teeming hen to lay
Her egg each day,
Besides my healthful ewes to bear
Me twins each yeare,
The while the conduits of my kine
Run creame for wine:
All these, and better Thou dost send
Me, to this end,
That I should render, for my part,
A thankful heart,
Which, fir'd with incense, I resigne
As wholly Thine;
But the acceptance, that must be,
O Lord, by Thee.
—Herrick.

AGNES' THANKSGIVING DINNER

(Copyright, 1913, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

One day before Thanksgiving a group of little girls were talking of the good things they expected to have for dinner on that day.

"Oh! I just love Thanksgiving," said Nellie Carroll; "we always go to the home of one grandfather one year and the next year to the other. They live in the country and we have dinner in a long diningroom. A grandfather sits at each end of the table, and a big turkey is put in front of each and then they try to see who can serve his turkey first. We all laugh and have a jolly time."

"I like Thanksgiving, too," said Jennie Smith. "We visit all day. Everybody comes to our house in the morning for a late breakfast and then we all go to my aunt's for lunch, but the dinner at grandfather's at night is the best of all. In the center of the table there is a big pumpkin with the center scooped out, and that is filled with apples, oranges, bananas and grapes."

"Does that stand right on the clean tablecloth?" asked one little girl.

"Of course, silly," answered Jennie; "the pumpkin is clean. And then," she continued, "there are small baskets with yellow ribbon bows on the handles and they have lace paper in them and are filled with broken candy. And there are little round brown baskets filled with nuts and a nut pick on each. These baskets are scattered over the table and they do look so pretty on the white cloth."

"But where do you put the turkey?" asked one girl.

"Oh, we have two big ones. They are brought to the table so everyone can see them and then put on the serving table, but you can see them all the time."

Another little girl said she went to her grandmother's in the country and they had a big turkey on the table and a big dish of cranberry sauce and such pumpkin pies you never saw, and then they had a huge plum pudding and set it on fire.

Agnes Walton listened to all that was said. Her mother was a widow and took in sewing and Agnes did not expect a real Thanksgiving dinner.

"What are you going to have Thanksgiving, Agnes?" asked Nellie Carrol.

"I do not know," Agnes answered.

"Of course you will have turkey; everybody does," said Jennie Smith.

The bell rang just then and the conversation ended After school Nellie Carrol asked Jennie Smith to walk home with her

"I have been thinking" she said "that Agnes will not have a turkey for Thanksgiving, for her mother is poor. Do you think your father would give some money? I will ask mine and then we can take all the money we have of our own and buy a dinner for Agnes and her mother?"

"I will ask," said Jennie. "Our fathers do not have to buy turkey for Thanksgiving, they ought to help us."

The morning before Thanksgiving Jennie and Nellie, accompanied by a colored boy with a basket, went to market. They bought the turkey first and then the fixings. Indeed, they added so much that the boy protested.

"'Deed, Miss Nellie," he said, "I just can't git no mo' in dis yere basket."

"Take out the turkey and carry it," commanded Miss Nellie. "We are going to buy as long as the money lasts."

That night, when it was quite dark, two little figures might have been seen with caps drawn over their curls and long coats with collars turned up, followed by a colored boy carrying a basket and a bundle. "Put the fixings on the steps," said Nellie, when they reached Agnes Walton's house; "and now run," she told him, "for I just think there are spooks in this street—it is so dark." The boy did not stop to be told a second time: he ran. As soon as he was out of sight Nellie rang Agnes' bell and both girls hid behind the steps of the next house.

Agnes opened the door.

"Mother," she called, "here is a basket of vegetables and fruit, and a turkey, too."

Her mother came to the door and the girls heard her say. "Someone has made a mistake."

"But here are our names," said Agnes, reading the card: "'For Agnes and her mother, from two friends who will never tell.'"

The door was closed and Jennie and Nellie came from behind the steps.

"It was just like hanging a May basket," said Nellie.

"Yes," answered Jennie, "only more fun, because we know that Agnes and her mother will have a nice Thanksgiving dinner."

"And we will never tell anyone," said Nellie, and they never did.

Statesmanship and Cookery.

From the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

In this country we need cooks more than we need statesmen, says the president of an organization for the cultivation of better household economics. Without pressing the analysis too far, most people will agree with the truth of the observation

The country needs statesmen certainly; it has many of them and many more who pretend they are statesmen and perhaps think they are. One who argues the need of more and better cooks need not decry the usefulness of public officials of broad abilities and vision.

A good cook may make a statesman, but no statesman can return the compliment. More men are ruined by bad cookery than is commonly supposed. Some have asserted that inefficient cooking is responsible for much of the hard drinking that curses the world. At any rate, a well prepared meal is an invitation to a tired man to stay at home in the evening, and the mental picture of a good dinner to come is like a magnet drawing man or woman pretty straight home after the day's work is done.

From the beginning cookery has been esteemed above statesmanship, yet the cook is only now coming to possess her proper estate. In the perhaps not very distant future when suffrage comes to be generally accepted one may imagine that the woman who stands on a good cookery platform and can make good on her claim of being able to bake toothsome pumpkin pies and roast meat to tempt a laggard appetite will stand an excellent chance of sweeping her district. In that day statesmanship and cookery may go hand in hand, a winning combination.

Some Smoke.

From Popular Magazine.

Jess Carmichael was walking downtown in New York with his friend, Bob Ginter.

Bob was puffing industriously on a fat dark cigar and had succeeded in consuming about half of it, causing the covering to curl up with the heat.

"What in thunder are you smoking?" asked Carmichael.

"A fine cigar," replied Ginter.

"Oh!" said Carmichael sadly, "I thought it was an umbrella."

ORIGINAL NOTICE

In the District Court of the State of Iowa, in and for Hancock County, December Term 1914.

Oscar M. Holst, plaintiff.

vs.

Martin Peterson, Elsie Larson, Elsie Peterson and Mrs. Lewis Larson, and all the unknown wives, husbands, heirs and devisees of, or claimants under the above named defendants, or any of them; and all the unknown claimants of the Northeast Fractional Quarter (NE fr¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-seven (97), Range Twenty-three (23), Hancock county, Iowa, defendants.

TO THE ABOVE NAMED DEFENDANTS, and to the unknown claimants of the Northeast Fractional Quarter (NE fr¼) of Section Five (5). Township Ninety-seven (97), Range Twenty-three (23), Hancock county, Iowa.

You and each of you are hereby notified that the petition of the plaintiff in the above entitled cause is now on file in the office of the Clerk of the District Court in and for Hancock county, Iowa, claiming that plaintiff is the owner in fee simple of the Northeast Fractional Quarter (NE fr¼) of Section Five (5), Township Ninety-seven (97), Range Twenty-three (23), Hancock county, Iowa

That the plaintiff and his grantors have been in open, notorious, adverse and undisputed possession of the above described premises for more than twenty years under color of title and claim of right. That the defendants, and unknown claimants to the said land, have no right or title in and to the said premises

That the claims, interest or title of the defendants are based upon the following facts and derived in the following manner:

(a) Martin Peterson acquired title to the above described premises by deed dated April 10th, 1870, but there is no conveyance of record in Hancock county from the said Martin Peterson, his wife or heirs and because of which facts the said Martin Peterson, or his unknown heirs may have some interest in and to the land described

(b) Elsie Peterson was the wife of graph (a) above, and after the death of Martin Peterson married Lewis Larson and thereafter was known as Elsie Larson. The said Elsie Larson, or Elsie Peterson, acquired an interest in the said land by virtue of being the widow and sole heir of Martin Peterson, deceased, but has never conveyed that interest, and by virtue of that fact the said Elsie Larson, or Elsie Peterson, or her unknown heirs, would have an apparent interest in the above described premises. And plaintiff further alleges that if the said Elsie Larson is not the same person as Mrs. Lewis Larson, the said Mrs. Lewis Larson, or her unknown heirs, would have an interest in and to the above described premises by virtue of the fact that there is no conveyance of record in Hancock county, Iowa, executed by the wife of Lewis Larson.

(c) That among the said defendants there may have been, or may be at this time, some minor heirs or others under legal disability who may claim an interest in and to the above described premises by or through some of the defendants, known or unknown, the exact character of which claim and the names of said minor claimants this plaintiff is unable to state.

That plaintiff has sought diligently to learn the names and residences of all of the said defendants, and unknown claimants, without success.

That the claims of said defendants create a cloud on plaintiff's title, and plaintiff asks that his title and estate in said premises be established against the adverse claims of all of said defendants. That the cloud created by the apparent claims be removed. That plaintiff be decreed to be the absolute owner in fee simple of the said land. That the defendants, and all persons claiming by, through, or under them, or any of them, be barred and forever estopped from having, or claiming any right, title, or interest in and to the said premises. That plaintiff's title be quieted, and that he be granted such other and further relief as may be equitable and necessary to establish his title in fee simple, and for the costs of this action, and that unless you appear and defend before the second day of said term of court, being the December term of said court, which convenes and will be held at the court house, in Garner, Iowa, beginning the seventh day of December, 1914, default will be entered against you and judgment and decree rendered thereon as provided by law

IMPOLITE CLERKS DRIVE AWAY TRADE DECLARES WRITER

BY "OBSERVER"

The other day I went into a store to buy a small article that I needed, and the clerk showed me several kinds. It happened that I had never used any of the kinds shown, so I explained to the clerk just what I wanted to use it for and asked his advice as to which would be most suitable for my purpose. His answer was "It's up to you," and that was all the satisfaction I could get. As a consequence of this way of treating customers, I went to another store where I could obtain the information I needed.

This is an experience I have had many times, and I do not hesitate to say that a great deal of valuable business is driven away from town by just such tactics on the part of thoughtless salesmen and saleswomen. For my part, I will not buy from such a clerk if I can help it, because I resent his indifference to my interests and the interests of his employer, and because I do not care to encourage such an absolute brainless attitude on the part of anybody.

I wonder if it ever occurred to one of these clerks what kind of future he is preparing.

This is an age when service counts above everything else. The fellow who begins life by refusing to get in line is on a fast train for the scrap heap. When the boss gets wise to him he has to get out in a hurry. He may manage to hang on for a few years and keep up a good front by spending all his small salary for glad rags, but if he ever has the nerve to marry his wife and children will have to support themselves and probably support him also. Of course that would not worry him in the least, for he has no sense of responsibility whatever and seems to have a genuine contempt for anybody that expects him to act like a reasonable being. You should have seen the superior glance that fellow gave me the other day. I notice most of these get-along-any-way youngsters have a very bored air when anybody asks them to do a little something to earn their wages.

I don't want anyone to think I am writing this just out of ill temper. Like the Pope's mule in the story, "I have saved this kick for seven years." One or two instances of the kind would not have started me going, but there is getting to be entirely too much of it.

A young lady whom I have often heard praised takes just the opposite course. She familiarizes herself with all her lines of goods and remembers the needs of patrons. When asked for expert advice she gives her attention to the problem in hand, asks sensible questions, gets the customer's point of view and strives to make some use of her brains. She stands well with her employer and the public. Moreover, she has had common sense enough, so far, not to take a second look at any of these it's-up-to-you jelly fishes.

Badly "Peeled"

The Klemme Times in writing up a wedding over there says the wedding march "peeled fourth." That is entirely too much peel for one March. If it had been a July or October, instead of a March, it might do to have it peel second or third, but wedding marches should never peel fourth in this latitude. In the south they might peel fourth or even fifth, where it seldom freezes the peel. Too much peel for Iowa. Entirely too much.—Britt Tribune.

Grafter Turned Free

The man held, Frank Mellendorf we believe; at the instance of Mr. Suhumskie, was discharged from Justice Merten's court Saturday for lack of evidence. We do not care to discuss the merits of the case or testimony, but do have a word to say on the general business methods of this same bath tub and heating Co. First the Detroit office fails to respond when corresponded with, although they scatter broad cast copies of their contract with Suhumskie. Secondly we object to their methods in employing agents. While the shell game is in another class we consider it scarcely more hamful. The shell game is prohibited by law to protect men from losing money in small amounts. Of course the bath tub is a different proposition and looks fair, provided the firm is in existence and can furnish the goods, but this getting a man unaccustomed to the agency business to put up $1,500 good money as a bonus on that number of tubs should be prohibited by law, as not one in ten of them would ever sell the tubs.—Democrat.

HOWARD PIANOS

are

Surprisingly Reasonable!

It does not follow that you have to buy the highest-priced piano to get a really high-grade instrument.

If care is taken in the selection, you can secure an instrument that will more than fulfill every home requirement at a remarkably reasonable cost.

After hearing the Howard Piano and appreciating its absolute durability, you would naturally expect it to be among the costly ones, but it is not.

Considering value with price it is positively the most economical instrument for the home.

It gives you all the qualities of the high-grade instruments at so reasonable a price because it is a product of one of the manufacturing companies of the greatest piano organization in the world—The Baldwin Company.

No other instrument of equal quality can be sold at the price because no other makers possess the facilities and resources.

THE "Howard Manualo", the Player Piano that is all but human, is distinguished by Quality, Durability, Reliability and Attractive Price. It is a quality proposition throughout. Be sure to examine it.

THE WHEAT LANDS OF WESTERN CANADA AN ATTRACTION

THE EUROPEAN WAR MAKES THE GROWING OF WHEAT EXCEPTIONALLY REMUNERATIVE.

One result of the European War has been to reduce the volume of business done by many of the manufacturing institutions of the United States, commercial enterprises have been affected, business of many kinds have been hampered, and a financial stringency has been forced on almost every community It is not only because it has brought these things about, and created a lot of hardship, but there is the outstanding fact of the terrible loss of life, the great destruction of property, and the disruption of everything near and dear to those whose countries are involved in the war that makes the whole affair highly regrettable. The heart of the entire world goes out in sympathy to those within the area of the trouble Arrangements have been made to relieve the distress by money and other means But there is one great thing —wheat and flour—that the European countries will need. The wheat-producing countries are no longer producing, and there is the gravest reason to fear that they will not be for some years In this case, it would be fully as beneficial and charitable to make provision to meet the loss of Europe's grain crop by encouraging a greatly increased growth on this continent.

The wheat-growing sections of the United States have about reached their limit of production and this source cannot be depended upon to meet a great deal of the demand that there will be for some years The only country that is in a position to meet it is — Canada — that portion known as Western Canada Here there are millions of acres of land, capable of producing from 20 to 40 bushels per acre All this land is excellent for wheat, and very much is still in the hands of the Dominion Government, and 160 acres of it can be had by the payment of a ten dollar entry fee

Another vast area is that held by railway and reliable land companies, held at from $10 to $25 per acre Improved farms are slightly higher in price Information regarding these lands may be had of any Canadian Government Agent

The fact that Canada offers such a splendid opportunity should be accepted with a wide-spread appreciation, and not met with attempts on the part of some to spread misleading statements. The Dominion Government has not taken steps to deny many of the false statements circulated by those who evidently are more interested in injuring Canada than benefiting those who would be benefited by taking up farms in Canada, but in order to correct a highly erroneous impression that conscription is carried on in Canada, that compulsory military service is employed, and that there is restraint as to the movement of those not Canadians, the necessity is felt of giving as much publicity as possible to a denial of these statements

An item to which special exception is taken is one which says

"They are sending them away as rapidly as possible, but the young men are not permitted to leave Canada. All the citizens and those who have taken up homesteads are subject to military duty"

In direct refutation of this, we beg to quote from a recent editorial in the Rochester, N Y, Herald

"There is no legal process by which Great Britain can command a single Canadian soldier to enter the field in her aid or even in her most needful defense Great Britain cannot legally take a dollar of Canada's money for this or any other war without Canada's consent All must be given voluntarily, if it be given at all. Yet men and dollars are given to the limit of Canada's power to give, just as if Great Britain had both physical and legal power to exact them Indeed, it is possible that they are given more freely in this way, for what a man gives because he wants to give is likely to be greater than what he gives under force

'All in all it is a noble picture of devotion to her motherland which Canada offers to the gaze of her admiring and unenvious neighbors"

Canada's invitation for immigration extends to all who are willing to go on to the farms

Canada is Calling You to her Rich Wheat Lands

She extends to Americans a hearty invitation to settle on her FREE Homestead lands of 160 acres each or secure some of the low priced lands in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

This year wheat is higher but Canadian land just as cheap, so the opportunity is more attractive than ever. Canada wants you to help to feed the world by tilling some of her soil—land similar to that which during many years has averaged 20 to 45 bushels of wheat to the acre. Think what you can make with wheat around $1 a bushel and land so easy to get. Wonderful yields also of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed farming is fully as profitable an industry as grain growing.

The Government this year is asking farmers to put increased acreage into grain. Military service is not compulsory in Canada but there is a great demand for farm labor to replace the many young men who have volunteered for service. The climate is healthful and agreeable, railway facilities excellent, good schools and churches convenient. ALLIES BOMBARD THESE FORTIFICATIONS AT CONSTANTINOPLE

English and French battleships are said to be bombarding the fortifications near Constantinople. These vessels are unable to come very close to the city on account of the mines that have been planted by the Turks. Eventually the fortifications seen in the photograph, however, may be called upon to withstand a furious bombardment. It is hardly likely that they would last in such a contingency.

THE FOX AN D THE CAT.

(Copyrighted, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Once upon a time a cat was walking through a forest when she met a fox. "My good friend," said the fox, you have a very handsome coat, but your tail is not anywhere near as handsome as mine. Come with me and I will show you how to make it grow."

So the cat went along with the fox to his den, for he very much admired the tail of the fox and thought it would make all the cats jealous when they saw his bushy tail.

"The first thing you must do," said the fox, when they arrived at his home, "is to build the fire and cook the supper Exercise is the best thing to make your tail grow bushy."

So the cat cooked the supper and when it was ready he sat down at the table to eat with the fox.

"And another very necessary thing to be done," said the fox, "is to diet. You should eat very little and nothing but green stuff. You had better go out and eat some grass and then drink some water You will find a creek back of the rock by the door"

The cat did not like this part of the bargain very well, but he did want the bushy tail so he went, but he was so hungry the next morning that he could hardly wait for breakfast time

"You can cook these chickens for breakfast," said the fox, 'and then you can go out and catch a bird or two, but you must be back in time for dinner, as you must not lose an opportunity to exercise."

The cat did not need to be told a second time that he could eat, and off he ran. After a few days of cooking for the fox and waiting on him the cat began to ask about his tail. When will it begin to grow?" he asked

"Oh, you will have to be patient?" said the fox "You cannot expect to have a tail like mine grow in such a short time Tonight you better come with me and help bring home a fat goose and a hen, that will give you a little more exercise."

So that night the cat went along with the fox, and when they came to the barnyard the fox said, "You go ahead, the hens will not notice you; then I can come in and pull them off their roost without any trouble."

The cat did as he was told, but just as he stepped in front of the hen house, click went something, and the cat found himself a prisoner in the trap that had been set for the fox.

"Ha, ha' I thought so," said the fox, trotting off as fast as he could.

"Come back and help me out of this trap you got me into," called the cat.

"I guess not," called back the fox. "That was just the reason I sent you ahead I was suspicious of that farmer. He had been watching for me, but now he will not be on the lookout for me. Good day, Mr Cat. I hope your tail will grow' And off he ran over the hill, leaving the cat fast in the trap.

'You see now what you get for being in bad company," said the old hen. "Let this be a lesson and do not associate with those who are looked upon with suspicion, for you will be judged by the company you keep."

SITTING THE OTHER FELLOW OUT

(Copyright, 1914, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

"Yet, it is love—If thoughts of tenderness,
Tried in temptation, strengthen'd by distress,
Unmoved by absence, firm in every clime,
And yet—oh' more than all—untired by time'

If there's one thing more than another discomforting to a would-be lover, it is encountering another suitor in the parlor of his best girl every time he calls. Each grimly resolves that he will not be the first to leave This situation is by no means comfortable for the young woman in the case.

Brilliant is she who can successfully entertain two young men at the same time, dividing her attention so adroitly that each feels he certainly has first preference and would win her if the other would stop interfering in his love affair The girl is at fault who lets this state of affairs proceed to any great length, for she is unquestionably encouraging both. She knows which she likes best, and should, in a delicate manner, discourage the coming of the one she does not favor It is a kindness on her part which is due him.

There is no man so egotistical as to think he could win a girl whose interest is with another man. It hurts a young man's pride to discover, after having seemingly been encouraged for a length of time, that he has actually been palying second fiddle. She who fondly anticipates that finding he has a rival will make the one she likes propose quickly makes a big mistake. A man is apt to figure it out in this wise·

If encouragement to the other fellow was not shown he would have sense enough to stay away Where a girl can not decide between two, her heart is apparently untouched by either And, very sensibly, he drops out of the race. The girl finds she has one on her hands whom she likes the least.

Sitting the other fellow out may happen once or twice, but the girl of good judgment will see to it that it does not continue.

To say that she can not help it is untrue. She can! If her ingenuity fails in discarding the one unwished for, she can invite one of her attractive girl friends to help her entertain the one she don't want. The wise girl who wishes to break away from the latter can easily refuse his invitations repeatedly to theater or dances, be unable to find in the music rack the songs he likes and asks her to play, insist that she does not take kindly to athletic strolls on a Sunday afternoon, all of which her girl friend enthusiastically declares she delights in.

The unwanted beau and her friend, being thrown much in contact, soon begin to form a liking for one another. The other girl invites him to her home. And, more likely than not, a double wedding is the happy result. Where a girl has two lovers, wise is she who can dispose of one of them without making a life-long enemy of him. Don't encourage one would-be lover to sit another out.

Why Glynn Was Defeated.

From the New York World.

Last year Murphyism broke the back of the democratic party in New York city This year Murphyism has broken the back of the democratic party of New York state.

The people of New York will no longer tolerate Tammany Hall government at Albany. They have said it in the great vote polled for Mr. Whitman. They have said it still more emphatically in the vote polled for William Sulzer. Discredited and disgraced, a bankrupt in reputation as well as in character, Sulzer has again proved himself the political Nemesis of the boss who impeached him and removed him from the governorship, not because he has pocketed campaign contributions but because he had refused longer to take orders from Charles F Murphy

Governor Glynn is the victim of conditions which he did not create, but which, unfortunately, he had taken no strong measures to remedy He is not a member of Tammany Hall He has never been identified with Tammany politics, but on the other hand, he has never identified himself conspicuously with the militant democracy that is irrevocably opposed to Murphyism. The governor's political defeat is the inevitable result of trying to be friendly enough to Tammany to gain its support and independent enough of Tammany to win the support of the anti-Murphy democracy

The thing the governor tried to do can not be done The ticket that he ran on was loaded down with Murphy candidates, from Bensel and Sohmer to Haffen and Ahearn It reeked of Tammany contracts and Tammany corruption The governor was not responsible for this, but he had failed to exercise the kind of leadership that would have made it impossible

His own administration has been honest. He deserves high credit for a program of progressive legislation that has made history in New York. He has been a better governor on the administrative side than Mr Whitman is ever likely to be. Where he has failed is in the moral leadership that would have convinced the voters of this state that his election would not mean the re-election of Murphy Having failed there, he failed completely so far as the hasty judgment of the majority goes.

"How Much For Berlin.

From the Chicago Tribune.

Two German soldiers guarding a bridge on the outskirts of a French village were standing at their ease. From their ruddy complexion and heavy build it was not difficult to see that they were from an agricultural region. They looked very strong and good natured but very soldierlike. Suddenly an officer came into view in an autmobile and slowed up at the bridge. The two men of the landsturm pulled themselves together and struck an imposing attitude before the officer, their shoulders erect and their more than suspicion of paunch somehow disposed of for the moment. Military etiquet seemed suddenly to have enveloped their huge, awkward frames and they made a fine show.

The transformation had been effected with capital alacrity, and I could not resist commenting on it.

"Yes," said the officer, "those lads from the farms take their ease when they are unobserved, but give them spectators and they will make an appearance There is a stock army story of a drill sergeant who was putting recruits from the country through their paces. He was anxious to impress upon them the importance of a good swing and stride in making a fine appearance and this is the way he put it:

"'Every man of you must march through a town as if you had five marks in your pocket and were saying: 'How much costs Berlin?' (Wie viel Koset Berlin?"

Cheapness of Modern Music.

From the Chicago Post.

A point of view from which to survey life is the mystery that makes a newspaper "colyum' a success. "B. L. T." has it. It made George Ade. It made Peter Dunne.

The mere cutting of capers in words, the simple "joke" of the old comic papers is not enough to carry a daily column of newspaper print.

The latest book of poems, "By and Large," from the column of Mr. Franklin P. Adams, in the New York Tribune, illustrates this. Mr. Adams hits the foibles through high brow thoughts put into low brow English. The best instance, perhaps, is his take-off on the "cabaret bards," where he holds up to humorous derision the cheapness of the rag time words of the popular songs of the present. "Annie Laurie" he does into the form of a cabaret song thus:

"Listen to my story, kid,
Abou' Annie Laurie, kid,
Down on the Maxwelton river,
She's no flivver;
Her neck's like a swan; are you on? Are you on?
Her face is fair; she's a bear! she's a bear!
She's a wolf, she's an otter,
She's a swell turkey trotter,
She's some dancer, that's the answer,
Oh, oh! when I squeeze her I please her;
O Caesar!
Oh, that Annie Laurie Ra-ha-ha-ag!"

It is a desecration, but it is mighty illuminating.

Colors for All.

Edith M. Weidenfeld, writing an article entitled "Atumn Fabrics of Today," in the fashion department of the Woman's Home Companion, has the following to say about the colors that are to be popular this fall

"In color brown has taken the place that green had in popularity last season, and green has dropped pretty well into the background except in plaid effects, where it is most smart when combined with blue. Of all the brown shades, tete-de-negre, which is almost black, is the most fashionable, though such tones as tobacco and mahogany brown are modish.

"Blue, which is always practical and good style, follow brown."

Foreign Titles.

From the Louisville Courier-Journal.

Now that we are in such constant and intimate touch with Europe the "boys" in the news rooms ought to inform themselves a lick or two in the matter of foreign titles.

For example, the impression seems to be general that a "prince," so-called, or a "princess," has some connection with royalty. Now, a prince without a principality is the poorest kind of a dog. There are many such who retain a long extinct title by courtesy Many again—as indeed counts and barons—adopt the title by conceit and are allowed to run at large by sufferance, the head of the family only having a right to it.

In Russia, "princes" are as common as dirt Every land owner is a "prince." A "prince" indeed in Russia is much as a "squire" in Tennessee, a "count" in Italy assimilating in dignity and importance to a Kentucky "colonel."

In Austria and Russia the royal line runs not to "princes" but to "grand dukes" and "archdukes."

The German autocracy is, as Simon Suggs says, a little "notiony" about its titles—usually "baron" meaning something—but in Italy and France there are more bogus than genuine titles. The fool American—especially the foolish American woman—grows positively daffy over titles. Yet, even where there is any legal or real claim, they are as empty and deceptive as tips on a race course. The genuine "nobility" of Europe rarely "consort' with the outsiders of the world not their own and hold the average Yankee in very great disdain.

A New One to Him.

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A youth from Calhoun county, Illinois, which has nothing but steamboat transportation, came over to Elsberry, Mo., the other day to catch a Burlington train to St. Louis.

He had never seen a train, and when the Hannibal local came rolling in he stood there gaping, watched it hiss and steaw and finally pull out.

"I thought you was goin' to St. Louis on that train?" shouted the station agent, thrusting his head through the window

"I was," answered the youth, "but they didn't put down no gangplank."

LADY CREWE HELPS THE WAR SUFFERERS

Sprains, Bruises, Stiff Muscles

Sloan's Liniment will save hours of suffering. For bruises or sprain it gives instant relief. It arrests inflammation and thus prevents more serious troubles developing. No need to rub it in—it acts at once, instantly relieving the pain, however severe it may be.

Here's Proof

Charles Johnson, P. O. Box 105, Lawton's Station, N. Y., writes: "I sprained my ankle and dislocated my left hip by falling out of a third story window some months ago. I went on crutches for four months, then I started to use some of your Liniment, according to your directions, and I must say that it is helping me wonderfully. I threw my crutches away. Only used two bottles of your Liniment and now I am walking quite well with one cane. I never will be without Sloan's Liniment."

BALANCE KEPT BY NATURE

Increase of the Human Race Seems to Be Regulated by Wars and Other Devastations.

Every year, according to scientists who attempt to keep the general records, at least 80,000,000 human beings are born on this earth and 60,000,000 or 70,000,000 die. This indicates a daily birth rate of about 220,000 and a death rate of 180,000. The daily increase in population therefore is about 40,000. The total population of the globe is estimated at 1,800,000,000.

The ravages of war do little to impede the increase. Far more effective have been the upheavals of nature. The Franco-Prussian war killed about 130,000 in seven months. The death roll of the Russo-Japanese war reached about 200,000. A single earthquake (1737, in India) has been estimated to have caused 300,000 deaths. The fatalities of the Messina earthquake in 1908 cannot have been far short of 100,000. A tidal wave in 1896 drowned 27,000 persons in Japan, causing greater loss of life than the whole war with China in 1894. The earthquake in Japan in 1703 is said to have killed 200,000 people. The Lisbon earthquake in 1755 destroyed 50,000 human lives, while 40,000 were lost in the same year in earthquake in Russia.

The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet

BY

BURTON E. STEVENSON

Copyright, 1913, by Burton E. Stevenson.

CHAPTER XI—(Continued).

Rogers was still sitting dejectedly on the cot and looking at him more closely, I could see that he was white and shaken. His trouble, whatever its nature, plainly lay heavy on his mind.

"Have you anything to tell us this evening, Rogers?" I asked, kindly, but he only shook his head.

"I've told you everything I know, sir," he answered in a low voice.

"I'm not going to hurry you, Rogers," I went on, "but I want you to think it over. You can rely upon me to help you, if I can."

He looked up quickly, but caught himself and turned his eyes away.

"Thank you, sir," was all he said.

"And now," I added, briskly, "I'll have to ask you to get up. Move the cot away from the door, Parks."

Parks obeyed with astonished face.

"You're not going in there, sir?" he protested, as I turned the knob.

"Yes, we are," I said and opened the door. "Is—is" * * *

"No, sir," broke in Parks, understanding. "The undertakers brought the coffin and put him in it and moved him over to the drawing room this afternoon, sir"

"I'm glad of that. I want all the lights lit, Parks, just as they were last night."

Parks reached inside the door and switched on the electrics Then he went away, came back in a moment with a taper and proceeded to light the gas lights. A moment later the lights in the inner room were also blazing.

"There you are, sir," said Parks, and retreated to the door. "Will you need me?"

"Not now, but wait in the hall outside. We may need you. I had a notion to tell him to have an ax handy, but I saw Godfrey smiling.

"Very good, sir," said Parks, evidently relieved, and went out and closed the door.

I led the way into the inner room.

"Well, there it is," I said and nodded toward the Boule cabinet, standing in the full glare of the light, every inlay and incrusation glittering like the eyes of a basilisk. "It isn't too late to give it up, Godfrey."

"Oh, yes, it is," he said, coolly, removing his coat. "It was too late the moment you told me that story. Why, Lester, if I gave it up I should never sleep again."

"And if you don't, you may never wake again," I pointed out.

He laughed lightly.

"What a dismal prophet you are. Draw up a chair and watch me."

He pulled back his shirt sleeves and placed his electric torch on the floor beside the cabinet. Then he paused with folded arms to contemplate this masterpiece of M. Boule.

"It is a beauty," he said at last, and then drew out the little drawers one after another, looked them over and placed them carefully on a chair. "Now," he added, "let us see if there is any space that isn't accounted for"

He took from his pocket a folding rule of ivory, opened it, and began a series of measurements so searching and intricate that half an hour passed without a word being spoken. Then he pulled up another chair and sat down beside me.

"I seem to be pretty much up against it," he said, "no doubt just as the designer of the cabinet would wish me to be. The whole bottom of the desk is inclosed and those three little drawers take up only a small part of the space. Then the back of the cabinet seems to be double—at least there's a space of three inches I can't account for. So there's room for a dozen secret drawers, if the Montespan required so many. And now to find the combination."

He adjusted the steel gauntlet carefully to his right hand and sat down on the floor before the cabinet.

"I'll begin at the bottom," he said. "If there is any spot I miss, tell me of it."

He ran his fingers up and down the graceful legs, carefully feeling every inequality of the elaborate bronze ornamentation. Particularly did his fingers linger on every boss and point, striving to push it in or down; but they were all immovable. Then he examined the bottom of the table minutely, using his torch to illumine every crevice, but again without result.

Another half hour passed so, and when at last he came out from under the table his face was dripping with sweat.

"It's trying work," he said, sitting down again and mopping his face. "But isn't it a beauty, Lester? The more I look at it, the more wonderful it seems."

"I told Philip Vantine I wasn't up to it and I'm not," I said.

"Nor I, but I can appreciate it to the extent of my capacity It's the Louis XIV ideal of beauty—splendor carried to the ninth degree. Look at the arabesques along the front—can you imagine anything more graceful? And the engraving—nothing cut and dried about that. It was done by a burin in the hands of a master—perhaps by Boule himself. I don't wonder Vantine was rather mad about it. But we haven't found that drawer yet," and he drew his chair close to the cabinet.

"I'd point out one thing to you, Godfrey," I said, "if you go poking about with the fingers of both hands, as you have been doing, you are just as apt to get struck on the left hand as on the right."

"That's true," he agreed. "Stop me if I forget."

There were three little drawers in the front of the table, and these Godfrey had removed. He inserted his hand into the space from which he had taken them, and examined it carefully. Then, inch by inch, he ran his fingers over the bosses and arabesques with which the sides and top of the table were incrusted. It seemed to me that, if the secret drawer were anywhere, it must be somewhere in this part of the cabinet, and I watched him with breathless interest. Once I thought he had found the drawer, for a piece of inlay at the side of the table seemed to give a little under the pressure of his fingers; but no hidden spring was touched; no drawer sprang open; no poisoned fangs descended.

"Well," said Godfrey, sitting back in his chair at last, and wiping his face again, "there's so much done. If there is any secret drawer in the lower part of the cabinet, it is mighty cleverly concealed. Now we'll try the upper part."

The upper part of the cabinet consisted of a series of drawers, rising one above the other, and terminated by a triangular pediment, its tympanum ornamented with some beautiful little bronzes. The drawers themselves were concealed by two doors, opening in the center, and covered with a most intricate design of arabesqued incrustations.

"If there is a secret drawer here," said Godfrey, "it is somewhere in the back, where there seems to be a hollow space. But to discover the combination . . ."

He ran his fingers over the inlay, and then, struck by a sudden thought, tested each of the little figures along the tympanum, but they were all set solidly in place.

"There's one thing sure," he said, "the combination, whatever it is, is of such a nature that it could not be discovered accidentally—by a person leaning on the cabinet, for instance. It isn't a question of merely touching a spring; it is probably a question of releasing a series of levers, which must be worked in a certain order, or the drawer won't open. I'm afraid we are up against it."

"I can't pretend I'm sorry," I said with a sigh of relief. "As far as I am concerned, I'm perfectly willing that the drawer should go undiscovered."

"Well, I am not," retorted Godfrey, curtly, and he sat regarding the cabinet with puckered brows. Then he rose and began tapping at the back.

I don't know what it was—for I was conscious of no noise—but some mysterious attraction drew my eyes to the window at the farther side of the room. Near the top of the wooden shutter, which Parks and I had put in place, was a small semi-circular opening, to allow the passage of a little light, perhaps, and peering through this opening were two eyes—two burning eyes . . .

They were fixed upon Godfrey with such feverish intentness that they did not see my glance, and I lowered my head instantly.

"Godfrey," I said, in a shaking voice, "don't look up; don't move your head, but there is some one peering through the hole in the shutter opposite us."

Godfrey did not answer for quite a minute, but kept calmly on with his examination of the cabinet.

"Did he see you look at him?" he asked, at last.

"No, he was looking at you, with his eyes almost starting out of his head. I never saw such eyes!"

"Did you see anything of his face?"

"No, the hole is too small. I fancy I saw the fingers of one hand, which he had thrust through to steady himself."

"How high is the hole?"

"Near the top of the window"

Godfrey came back to his chair a moment later, sat down in it, and passed his handkerchief slowly over his face. Then he leaned forward, apparently to examine the legs of the cabinet.

"I saw him," he said. "Or, rather, I saw his eyes. Rather fierce, aren't they?"

"They're a tiger's eyes," I said, with conviction.

"Well, there is no use going ahead with this while he is out there. Even if we found the drawer, we'd both be dead an instant later."

"You mean he'd kill us?"

"He would shoot us instantly. Imagine what a sensation that would make. Lester Parks hears two pistol shots, rushes in and finds us lying here dead. Grady would have a convulsion—and we should both be famous for a few days."

"I'll seek fame in some other way," I said drily. "What are you going to do about it?"

"We've got to try to capture him, and if we do—well, we shall have the fame all right! But it's a good deal like trying to pick up a scorpion—we're pretty sure to get hurt. If that fellow out there is who I think he is, he's about the most dangerous man on earth."

He went on tapping the surface of the cabinet. As for me, I would have given anything for another look at those gleaming eyes. They seemed to be burning into me; hot flashes were shooting up and down my back.

"Why can't I go out as though I were going after something," I suggested. "Then Park and I could charge around the corner and get him."

"You wouldn't get him, he'd get you. You wouldn't have a chance on earth. If there is a window upstairs over that one, you might drop something out on him, or borrow Parks' pistol and shoot him—"

"That would be pretty cowardly, wouldn't it?" I suggested, mildly.

"My dear Lester," Godfrey protested, "when you attack a poisonous snake, you don't do it with bare hands, do you?"

I couldn't help it—I glanced again at the window. * * *

"He's gone!" I cried.

Godfrey was at the window in two steps.

"Look at that!" he said, "and then tell me he isn't a genius!"

I followed the direction of his pointing finger and saw that, just opposite the opening in the shutter, a little hole had been cut in the window pane.

"That fellow foresees everything," said Godfrey, with enthusiasm. "He probably cut that hole as soon as it was dark. He must have guessed we were going to examine the cabinet tonight—and he wanted not only to see, but to hear. He heard everything we said, Lester!"

"Let's go after him!" I cried, and, without waiting for an answer, I sprang across the ante-room and snatched open the door which led into the hall.

Parks and Rogers were sitting on the couch just outside and I never saw two men more thoroughly frightened.

"For God's sake, Mr. Lester!" gasped Rogers, and stopped, his hand at his throat.

"Is it Mr. Godfrey?" cried Parks.

"There's a man outside. Get your pistol, Parks?"

"Yes, sir," and he took it form his pocket.

I snatched it from him, opened the front door, leaped the railing, and stole along the house to the corner.

Then, taking my courage in both hands, I charged around it.

There was no one in sight; but from somewhere near at hand came a burst of mocking laughter.

CHAPTER XII.

GODFREY IS FRIGHTENED.

I was still staring about me, that mocking laughter in my ears, when Godfrey joined me.

"He got away, of course," he said coolly.

"Yes, and I heard him laugh!" I cried.

Godfrey looked at me quickly.

"Come, Lester," he said, soothingly, "dont let your nerves run away with you."

"It wasn't my nerves," I protested, a little hotly. "I heard it quite plainly. He can't be far away."

"Too far for us to catch him." Godfrey retorted, and, torch in hand, proceeded to examine the window-sill and the ground beneath it. "There is where he stood," he added, and the marks on the sill were evident enough "Of course, he had his line of retreat blocked out," and he flashed his torch back and forth across the grass, but the turf was so close that no trace of footsteps was visible. We went slowly back to the house, and Godfrey sat down again to a contemplation of the cabinet.

"It's too much for me," he said, at last. "The only way I can find that drawer, I'm afraid, is with an axe. But I don't want to smash the thing to pieces—"

"I should say not! It would be like smashing the Venus de Milo."

"Hardly so bad as that. But we won't smash it yet awhile. I'm going to look up the subject of secret drawers—perhaps I'll stumble upon something that will help me."

"And then, of course," I said, disconsolately, "it is quite possible that there isn't any such drawer at all." But Godfrey shook his head decidedly.

"I don't agree with you there, Lester. I'll wager that fellow who was looking in at us could find it in a minute"

"He seemed mighty frightened lest you should."

"He had reason to be," Godfrey rejoined grimly. "I'll have another try at it tomorrow. One thing we've got to take care of, and that is that our friend of the burning eyes doesn't get a chance at it first."

"Those shutter are pretty strong," I pointed out. "And Parks is no fool."

"Yes," agreed Godfrey, "the shutters are pretty strong—they might keep him out for 10 miutes—scarcely longer than that. As for Parks, he wouldn't last 10 seconds. You don't seem to understand the extraordinary character of this fellow."

"During your period of exaltation last night," I reminded him, "you referred to him as the greatest criminal of modern times."

"Well," smiled Godfrey, "perhaps that was a little exaggerated. Suppose we say one of the greatest—great enough, surely, to walk all around us, if we aren't on guard. I think I would better drop a word to Simmonds and get him to send down a couple of men to watch the house. With them outside, and Parks on the inside it ought to be fairly safe."

"I should think so!" I said. "One would imagine you were getting ready to repel an army. Who is this fellow, anyway, Godfrey? You seem to be half afraid of him!"

"I'm wholly afraid of him, if he's who I think he is—but it's a mere guess as yet, Lester. Wait a day or two. I'll call up Simmonds."

He went to the 'phone, while I sat down again and looked at the cabinet in a kind of stupefacation. What was the intrigue, of which it seemed to be the center? Who was this man, that Godfrey should consider him so formidable? Why should he have chosen Philip Vantine for a victim?

Godfrey came back while I was still groping blindly amid this maze of mystery

"It's all right," he said. "Simmonds is sending two of his best men to watch the house' He stood for a moment gazing down at the cabinet. "I'm coming back tomorrow to have another try at it" he added. "I have left the gauntlet there on the chair, so if you feel like having a try yourself, Lester * * *"

"Heaven forbid'" I protested "But perhaps I would better tell Parks to let you in ... one I won't find you a corpse here Godfrey'"

"So do I' But I don't believe you will Yes, tell Parks to let me in whenever I come around. And now about Rogers"

"What about him?"

"I rather thought I might want to grill him tonight. But perhaps I would better wait till I get a little more to go on" He paused for a moment's thought. Yes, I'll wait," he said finally "I don't want to run any risk of failing"

We went out into the hall together, and I told Parks to admit Godfrey, whenever he wished to enter. Rogers was still sitting on the cot looking so crushed and sorrowful that I could not help pitying him. I began to think that, if he were left to himself a day or two longer he would tell all we wished to know without any grilling.

I confided this idea to Godfrey as we went down the front steps.

"Perhaps you're right," he agreed. "I don't believe the fellow is really crooked Something has happened to him—something in connection with that woman—and he has never got over it. Well, we shall have to find out what it was. Hello, here are Simmond's men," he added, as two policemen stopped before the house.

"Is this Mr. Godfrey?" one of them asked.

"Yes," said Godfrey

"Mr. Simmonds told us to report to you, sir, if you were here."

"What we want you to do," said Godfrey, "is to watch the house—watch it from all sides—patrol clear around it and see that no one approaches it."

"Very well, sir," and the men touched their helmets, and one of them went around to the back of the house, while the other remained in front.

Affairs at Home.

From the Chicago Tribune.

Local political conditions this year have not encouraged observing men to believe that good results might be obtained easily It will be regarded as an event of fortunate chance if local government be not given a setback, so far as efficiency and probity are involved

If there has been apathy on the part of the citizens, it is easily explained. The war in Europe not only has been engrossing, but it has in a way belittled our own governmental problems. The peace and security enjoyed by the American citizen may seem to him to give warrant to the methods of his government, no matter what form that government may take.

Thus, realizing his security from such disaster as Europe presents, and engrossed in giving attention to the catastorphe abroad, he may permit, under the cover of his inattention, a relatively inconsiderable but consequential disaster to overtake him here.

His local government is seriously involved. The care which may or may not be given dependents of the community is at stake. The elections which hereafter for four years will be held are at stake. The administration of municipalities such as the sanitary district if at stake. The administration of tax assessing laws is at stake.

The citizen's representation in congress and in the state legislature is in the issue. All these things may affect him so imperceptibly that if he be in fortunate circumstances he may not observe them knowingly, but they affect him, and continued deterioration and continued indifference to it mean something that might be called, without any sensationalism, ruin.

We manage to survive our political mistakes. That gives us confidence that we shall always be able to survive them. The mistake could be made more disastrous. A city, state, or nation can not indefinitely survive its political mistakes. They begin to count against the morals and the stability, against the permanency of that city, state or nation.

Two daughters of General Tomiovsky, a commander in the Russian army, have gained permission to wear the uniform of a regular soldier, and will go to the front with the regular troops.

Poisonous Disinfectant Made Safe.

With the increased use of bichloride of mercury as a disinfectant there have resulted numerous cases of suicidal and accidental poisoning, the latter being due to mistaking this powerful corrosive poison for medicine in tablet form. For preventing this, and particularly for preventing accidental poisoning, various ways of preparing the poison so that it will readily be distinguished from any other substance has been proposed, but the solution of the whole problem now seems to have been found in the plan of mixing a powerful emetic with the bichloride of mercury. This is a tartar emetic so compounded that it will exert its full emetic action before the corrosive sublimate can begin its action, causing violent nausea until the stomach is entirely emptied. It is stated that the disinfecting power of the bichloride of mercury is in no way impaired by mixing the emetic with it.

Isn't it funny that the things we like to do most are the things we are told we shouldn't go?

WHY CATCH COLD

One-half of the Deaths and Two-thirds of the Sickness is the Direct Result of Catching Cold.

Nothing could be of greater vital interest to the family than to know how to avoid catching cold.

COLDS THAT KILL

If it be true, as one famous doctor says, that catching cold can be avoided, think what it means. Two-thirds of the sickness that now oppresses the people would be avoided. Serious interference with business. The anguish of anxious parents. The blasting of many brilliant dreams. All these things would be largely done away with if people knew how to avoid catching cold. Catching cold is a very common experience in numerous households. People have come to believe that there is no way to avoid it.

CAN BE AVOIDED.

People are taught in the "Ills of Life" how to avoid the ceaseless drain that catching cold makes upon the vital organs. Get it and read it and judge for yourselves of its value and practicability. It is issued by the Peruna Co., of Columbus, Ohio.

First Military Censor.

Hannibal was in a bad temper, relates the Cleveland Plain-Dealer.

"Who is that little fellow over there with the stylus and tablet?" he asked his first aid.

"That's a war correspondent from Carthage, general."

"What's he doing?"

"He's counting the elephants and the Balearic slingers."

"What's he doing that for?"

"He's doing it because he's a war correspondent."

The great Carthagenian emitted a deep growl.

"Hamil," he said, "I'm going to hold you strictly responsible for this man's copy If he writes at all let him belittle everything. Let him say I have ten elephants where I have 50 Let him write that I have three legions where I have ten. Let him call me a wooden-headed blunderer Then let him lose his copy where our Roman friends will find it. It's up to you, Hamil. If the fellow gets balky tie him to our biggest fighting elephant's trunk, when the next batch of Roman senators comes up against us, and let him get all the war he wants at short range, Hamil."

And the first military censorship was established

Solving the Low Cost of Buying

Everybody is talking about the high cost of living and racking their brains for a solution.

That's easy. All you have to do is to solve the "Low Cost of Buying." Study carefully the Quality and the Price before you part with your money, for the one is as essential as the other. A few pennies saved on each article used by the average family would amount to a considerable sum in the run of a year. It reduces the cost of living.

We have solved the "Low Cost of Buying" from the manufacturer, and you will solve it when you come to us; for we are slicing off the pennies for you which the manufacturer had to slice off for us.

Meet us face to face, and you will go home with a smile.

ODD BITS OF NEWS

Gathered From Here and There and Everywhere

Worcester, Mass.—The Rev. Frederick Nicholson, pastor of the First Spiritual Church, recently appealed to Chief of Police Hill for "protection against love-sick maidens and scheming mothers." He said his life has been made miserable by love-letters and telephone calls.

Milwakee, Wis.—That Wisconsin will not become a prohibition state, in this or the next generation, whether women suffrage prevails or not, was the prediction made by Mrs Sophie Gudden, of Oskosh, at the press session of the Wisconsin Woman Suffrage association, held last week at Milwaukee.

Clarinda, Ia.—Mrs. Martin Lucas offered to crank an automobile for Mrs. Abbie Gilmore and in doing so broke her arm. Mrs. Gilmore helped Mrs. Lcas into the car and started to crank the machine She, too, broke her arm.

Merrill, Wis.—A house was shipped to the fair here recently by parcel post. The house was of the take-down variety and was sent piece by piece.

Atlanta, Ga.—Several people here have been afraid to eat oysters recently because when the oysters were put into hot water they turned a brilliant pink. Health officers say the oysters are perfectly good to eat but they cannot explain their "blushing" of the bivalves.

Somerset, Ky.—Miss Lena Hamm, Kentucky's first policewoman, started duty recently. Her uniform is of police-blue trimmed with white braid.

OUR SHORT COURSE

Through the efforts of the local committee, we are able to announce at this time a short course in agriculture and domestic science at Klemme, Iowa, January 25 to 30, 1915. This is a practical course for the busy farmer and his family, right to the point, and brings to our very door the teachings of the State College, at Ames. The work during the week will consist of stock judging, grain and soils study, and domestic science instruction. The best stock that can be secured locally will be judged in the course. The best varieties of grains and grasses will be studied and the most practical rotations discussed. The week's work will be brim-full of new ideas and new presentment of old standard methods.

"No farm is larger than the home on that farm," consequently home-making comes in for its share of attention. Home making does not imply fancy cooking—rather it deals with the every day problems that confront the busy women on every farm. The evening lectures will be of special interest and will deal with special concrete problems not taken up during the class work. These lectures are free to all holders of season tickets. A small charge will be made for the course in order to cover the expenses of the week.

OF COURSE—WHY NOT?

"Will good times ever return?" inquired a pessimist in speculating on his Christmas expenditures.

Of course they will! Why not?

Here's the why of the will:

1. There is just as much money in the country now as there ever was.
2. The farmers have just harvested one of the biggest crops in history and are selling at good prices.
3. Federal reserve banks have been opened and millions of dollars of new money will be placed at the disposal of the banks of the country.
4. The banks in turn will have plenty of money to loan to big manufacturing and other industries for operating capital.
5. These concerns in turn will start the wheels of commerce to revolving and millions of unemployed men and women will return to work.
6. Foreign governments are placing heavy orders for all kinds of supplies needed in prosecuting their war.
7. Other orders for American-made goods are pouring in from all parts of the world.
8. The financial situation has clarified, banks are opening up their vaults, and great manufacturing industries are preparing to open again on an extensive scale, many of them even now calling in employees who were laid off many weeks ago.

Yes, you can dig down and spend that Christmas money without any fear of where the next dollar is coming from.

It is on the way—and hitting the high places.

Not so long ago Henry E. Ives devised and patented a method by which artificial daylight was secured from a Welshbach mantle, and more recently the following announcement comes from Europe "A screen which can be used with an ordinary inverted incandescent mantle to produce artificial daylight has been invented. This would seem to be the first time that the method has been applied in a practical form of gas. The apparatus consists of a box receptacle whitened inside which receives light from the inverted mantle within the domelike reflector mounted above it Underneath this reflector there are two double plates of glass, the color of which is selected with a view to securing an exact imitation of a natural north light."

Sir Edward Grey, England's man of the hour, minister for foreign affairs, caused John Morley to say 20 years ago "That young man will go far—he will be prime minister some day" He is 52 years of age, and, curiously enough, despite the position he holds his only book is not a work of international diplomacy but an authoritative treatise on fly fishing Sir Edward was educated at Oxford, and at 20 succeeded his grandfather in the baronetcy As a very young man he was as fond of tennis as of angling and won the amateur championship of England At 23 he was elected to the house of commons

THORNE SAYS CLARKE HINDERS COMMISSION IN FREIGHT CONTESTS

Fighting Iowa Commissioner In Militant Mood About Governor's Attitude.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 12.—Clifford Thorne, of the state railroad commission, told the Corn Belt Meat Producers' association that Governor Clarke is holding up the work of fighting rate increases by refusing to permit money to be expended for needed help. He referred to the state's policy which he laid to the governor's hands, as short sighted, penny wise and pound foolish

The legislature and all members of the executive council, with the exception of the governor, intended that the commission should have this help, he said

"Any man who says this is not true is telling a damnable lie," Thorne shouted. He said the governor's excuse was that he believed the law referred to specific cases and not to general investigation

Thorne advised the delegates to raise money and hire men to fight their own battles instead of leaving it to the state

PRESIDENT DISCUSSES MILITARY STRENGTH

Wilson's Message to Congress Says Large Standing Army Is Not Needed.

Washington Special. President Wilson's message to congress was as follows:

Gentlemen of the Congress:

The session upon which you are now entering will be the closing session of the Sixty-third congress, a congress, I venture to say, which will long be remembered for the great body of thoughtful and constructive work which it has done, in loyal response to the thought and needs of the country I should like in this address to review the notable record and try to make adequate assessment of it, but no doubt we stand too near the work that has been done and are ourselves too much part of it to play the part of historians toward it.

Moreover, our thoughts are now more of the future than of the past. While we have worked at our tasks of peace the circumstances of the whole age have been altered by war What we have done for our own land and our own people, we did with the best that was in us, whether of character or of intelligence, with sober enthusiasm and a confidence in the principles upon which we were acting which sustained us at every step of the difficult undertaking, but it is done. It has passed from our hands. It is now an established part of the legislation of the country Its usefulness, its effects will disclose themselves in experience What chiefly strikes us now, as we look about us during these closing days of a year which will be forever memorable in the history of the world, is that we face new tasks, have been facing them these six months, must face them in the months to come—face them without partisan feeling, like men who have forgotten everything but a common duty and the fact that we are representatives of a great people whose thought is not of us but of what America owes to herself and to all mankind in such circumstances as these upon which we look amazed and anxious

Must Help Europe

War has interrupted the means of trade not only, but also the processes of production In Europe it is destroying men and resources wholesale and upon a scale unprecedented and appalling There is reason to fear that the time is near if it be not already at hand, when several of the countries of Europe will find it difficult to do for their people what they have hitherto been always easily able to do—many essential and fundamental things. At any rate, they will need our help and our manifold services as they have never needed them before and we should be ready, more fit and ready than we have ever been

It is of equal consequence that the nations whom Europe has usually supplied with innumerable articles of manufacture and commerce of which they are in constant need and without which their economic development halts and stands still can now get only a small part of what they formerly imported and eagerly look to us to supply their all but empty markets This is particularly true of our own neighbors, the states, great and small, of Central and South America Their lines of trade have hitherto run chiefly athwart the seas, not to our ports but to the ports of Great Britain and of the older continent of Europe I do not stop to inquire why or to make any comment on probable causes What interests us just now is not the explanation but the fact and our duty and opportunity in the presence of it Here are markets which we must supply, and we must find the means of action The United States, this great people for whom we speak and act should be ready as never before to serve itself and to serve mankind; ready with its resources, its energies, its forces of production and its means of distribution.

Urges Merchant Marine

It is a very practical matter a matter of ways and means. We have the resources but are we fully ready to use them? And, if we can make ready what we have, have we the means at hand to distribute it? We are not fully ready neither have we the means of distribution We are willing but we are not fully able We have the wish to serve and to serve greatly generously but we are not prepared as we should be We are not ready to mobilize our resources at once We are not prepared to use them immediately and at their best without delay and without waste

To speak plainly, we have grossly erred in the way in which we have stunted and hindered the development of our merchant marine And now when we need ships we have not got them We have year after year debated, without end or conclusion the best policy to pursue with regard to the use of the ores and forests and water powers of our national domain in the rich states of the west, when we should have acted, and they are still locked up. The key is still turned upon them, the door shut fast at which thousands of vigorous men, full of initiative knock clamorously for admittance. The water power of our navigable streams outside the national domain also, even the eastern states, where we have worked and planned for generations, is still not used as it might be, because we will and we won't because the laws we have made do not intelligently balance encouragement against restraint We withhold by regulation

I have come to ask you to remedy and correct these mistakes and omissions, even at this short session of a congress which would certainly seem to have done all the work that could reasonably be expected of it The time and the circumstances are extraordinary and so must our efforts be also Conservation Measures.

Fortunately two great measures finely conceived the one to unlock with proper safeguards the resources of the national domain, the other to encourage the use of the navigable waters outside that domain for the generation of power have already passed the House of Representatives and are ready for immediate consideration and action by the Senate With the deepest earnestness I urge their prompt passage In them both we turn our backs upon hesitation and makeshift and formulate a genuine policy of use and conservation in the best sense of those words We owe the one measure not only to the people of that great country for whose free and systematic development as it seems to me our legislation has done so little but also to the people of the nation as a whole and we as clearly owe the other in fulfillment of our repeated promises that the water power of the country should in fact as well as in name be put at the disposal of great industries which can make economical and profitable use of it the rights of the public being adequately guarded the while and monopoly in the use prevented To have begun such measures and not completed them would indeed mar the record of this great congress very seriously I hope and confidently believe that they will be completed

And there is another great piece of legislation which awaits and should receive the sanction of the Senate I mean the bill which gives a larger measure of self government to the people of the Philippines. How better, in this time of anxious questioning and perplexed policy, could we show our confidence in the principles of liberty, as the source as well as the expression of life how better could we demonstrate our own self-possession and steadfastness in the courses of justice and disinterestedness than by thus going calmly forward to fulfill our promises to a dependent people, who will now look more anxiously than ever to see whether we have indeed the liberality, the unselfishness the courage, the faith we have boasted and professed I can not believe that the Senate will let this great measure of constructive justice await the action of another congress Its passage would nobly crown the record of these two years of memorable labor

But I think that you will agree with me that this does not complete the toll of our duty How are we to carry our goods to the empty markets of which I have spoken if we have not the ships? How are we to build up a great trade if we have not the certain and constant means of transportation upon which all profitable and useful commerce depends? And how are we to get the ships if we wait for the trade to develop without them? To correct the many mistakes by which we have discouraged and all but destroyed the merchant marine of the country, to retrace the steps by which we have, it seems almost deliberately, withdrawn our flag from the seas, except where, here and there, a ship of war is bidden to carry it or some wandering yacht displays it, would take a long time and involve many detailed items of legislation, and the trade which we ought immediately to handle would disappear or find other channels while we debated the items.

The case is not unlike that which confronted us when our own continent was to be opened up to settlement and industry, and we needed long lines of railway, extended means of transportation prepared beforehand, if development was not to lag intolerably and wait interminably. We lavishly subsidized the building of transcontinental railroads. We look back upon that with regret now, because the subsidies led to many scandals of which we are ashamed, but we know that the railroads had to be built, and if we had it to do over again we should of course build them, but in another way Therefore I propose another way of providing the means of transportation, which must precede, not tardily follow, the development of our trade with our neighbor states of America. It may seem a reversal of the natural order of things, but it is true, that the routes of trade must be actually opened—by many ships and regular sailings and moderate charges—before streams of merchandise will flow freely and profitably through them.

Hence the pending shipping bill, discussed at the last session but as yet passed by neither House. In my judgment such legislation is imperatively needed and can not wisely be postponed. The government must open these gates of trade, and open them wide open them before it is altogether profitable to open them, or altogether reasonable to ask private capital to open them at a venture. It is not a question of the government monopolizing the field It should take action to make it certain that transportation at reasonable rates will be promptly provided even where the carriage is not at first profitable, and then, when the carriage has become sufficiently profitable to attract and engage private capital, and engage it in abundance the government ought to withdraw I very earnestly hope that the congress will be of this opinion and that both Houses will adopt this exceedingly important bill

Wants Rural Credits.

The great subject of rural credits still remains to be dealt with, and it is a matter of deep regret that the difficulties of the subject have seemed to render it impossible to complete a bill for passage at this session But it can not be perfected yet, and therefore there are no other constructive measures the necessity for which I will at this time call your attention to; but I would be negligent of a very manifest duty were I not to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the proposed convention for safety at sea awaits its confirmation and that the limit fixed in the convention itself for its acceptance is the last day of the present month The conference in which this convention originated was called by the United States; the representatives of the United States played a very influential part indeed in framing the provisions of the proposed convention and those provisions are in themselves for the most part admirable It would hardly be consistent with the part we have played in the whole matter to let it drop and go by the board as if forgotten and neglected It was ratified May last by the German government and in August by the parliament of Great Britain It marks a most hopeful and decided advance in international civilization We should show our earnest good faith in a great matter by adding our own acceptance of it

There is another matter of which I must make special mention if I am to discharge my conscience, lest it should escape your attention It may seem a very small thing It affects only a single item of appropriation But many human lives and many great enterprises hang upon it. It is the matter of making adequate provision for the survey and charting of our coasts It is immediately pressing and exigent in connection with the immense coast line of Alaska, a coast line greater than that of the United States themselves, though it is also very important indeed with regard to the older coasts of the continent We can not use our great Alaskan domain, ships will not ply thither if those coasts and their many hidden dangers are not thoroughly surveyed and charted The work is incomplete at almost every point Ships and lives have been lost in threading what were supposed to be well known main channels We have not provided adequate vessels or adequate machinery for the survey and charting We have used old vessels that were not big enough or strong enough and which were so nearly unseaworthy that our inspectors would not have allowed private owners to send them to sea This is a matter which, as I have said, seems small but is in reality very great Its importance has only to be looked into to be appreciated.

Economy In Government.

Before I close may I say a few words upon two topics much discussed out of doors, upon which it is highly important that our judgments should be clear, definite, and steadfast?

One of these is economy in government expenditures The duty of economy is not debatable It is manifest and imperative. In the appropriations we pass we are spending the money of the great people whose servants we are—not our own We are trustees and responsible stewards in the spending The only thing debatable and upon which we should be careful to make our thought and purpose clear is the kind of economy demanded of us I assert with the greatest confidence that the people of the United States are not jealous of the amount their government costs if they are sure that they get what they need and desire for the outlay, that the money is being spent for objects of which they approve, and that it is being applied with good business sense and management.

Governments grow piecemeal both in their tasks and in the means by which those tasks are to be performed, and very few governments are organized I venture to say as wise and experienced business men would organize them if they had a clean sheet of paper to write upon. Certainly the government of the United States is not. I think that it is generally agreed that there should be a systematic reorganization and reassembling of its parts so as to secure greater efficiency and effect considerable savings in expense. But the amount of money saved in that way would, I believe, though no doubt considerable in itself, running it may be into the millions be relatively small—small, I mean in proportion to the total necessary outlays of the government. It would be thoroughly worth effecting as every saving would, great or small. Our duty is not altered by the scale of saving. But my point is that the people of the United States do not wish to curtail the activities of this government they wish rather to enlarge them: and with every enlargement with the mere growth indeed of the country itself there must come of course, the inevitable increase of expense The sort of economy we ought to practice may be effected, and ought to be effected by a careful study and assessment of the tasks to be performed and the money spent ought to be made to yield the best possible returns in efficiency and achievement And, like good stewards we should so account for every dollar of our appropriations as to make it perfectly evident what it was spent for and in what way it was spent.

It is not expenditure but extravagance that we should fear being criticized for: not paying for the legitimate enterprises and undertakings of a great government whose people command what it should do, but adding what will benefit only a few or pouring money out for what need not have been undertaken at all or might have been postponed or better and more economically conceived and carried out. The nation is not niggardly it is very generous. It will chide us only if we forget for whom we pay money out and whose money it is we pay These are large and general standards, but they are not very difficult of application to particular cases.

The National Defense.

The other topic I shall take leave to mention goes deeper into the principles of our national life and policy. It is the subject of national defense

It can not be discussed without first answering some very searching questions. It is said in some quarters that we are not prepared for war What is meant by being prepared? Is it meant that we are not ready upon brief notice to put a nation in the field, a nation of men trained to arms? Of course we are not ready to do that, and we shall never be in time of peace so long as we retain our present political principles and institutions. And what is it that it is suggested we should be prepared to do? To defend ourselves against attack? We have always found means to do that, and shall find them whenever it is necessary without calling our people away from their necessary tasks to render compulsory military service in times of peace.

Allow me to speak with great plainness and directness upon this great matter and to avow my convictions with deep earnestness. I have tried to know what America is, what her people think, what they are, what they most cherish and hold dear. I hope that some of their finer passions are in my own heart—some of the great conceptions and desires which gave birth to this government and which have made the voice of this people a voice of peace and hope and liberty among the peoples of the world, and that, speaking my own thoughts I shall, at least, in part, speak theirs also, however faintly and inadequately, upon this vital matter.

Afraid of Nobody

We are at peace with all the world. No one who speaks counsel based on fact or drawn from a just and candid interpretation of realities can say that there is reason to fear that from any quarter our independence or the integrity of our territory is threatened Dread of the power of any other nation we are incapable of. We are not jealous of rivalry in the fields of commerce or of any other peaceful achievement. We mean to live our own lives as we will; but we mean also to let live. We are, indeed, a true friend to all the nations of the world, because we threaten none, covet the possessions of none, desire the overthrow of none. Our friendship can be accepted and is accepted without reservation, because it is offered in a spirit and for a purpose which no one need ever question or suspect. Therein lies our greatness. We are the champions of peace and of concord. And we should be very jealous of this distinction which we have sought to earn. Just now we should be particularly jealous of it, because it is our dearest present hope that this character and reputation may presently, in God's providence, bring us an opportunity such as has seldom been vouchsafed any nation, the opportunity to counsel and obtain peace in the world and reconciliation and a healing settlement of many a matter that has cooled and interrupted the friendship of nations. This is the time above all others when we should wish and resolve to keep our strength by self possession our influence by preserving our ancient principles of action.

From the first we have had a clear and settled policy with regard to military establishments. We never have had, and while we retain our present principles and ideals, we never shall have, a large standing army. If asked "are you ready to defend yourselves?" we reply, "Most assuredly, to the utmost," and yet we shall not turn America into a military camp. We will not ask our young men to spend the best years of their lives making soldiers of themselves. There is another sort of energy in us It will know how to declare itself and make itself effective should occasion arise. And especially when half the world is on fire we shall be careful to make our moral insurance against the spread of the conflagration very definite and certain and adequate indeed.

Favors Strong Army

Let us remind ourselves, therefore, of the only thing we can do or will do We must depend in every time of national peril, in the future as in the past, not upon a standing army, nor yet upon a reserve army, but upon a citizenry trained and accustomed to arms. It will be right enough, right American policy, based upon our accustomed principles and practices, to provide a system by which every citizen who will volunteer for the training may be made familiar with the use of modern arms, the rudiments of drill and maneuver, and the maintenance and sanitation of camps. We should encourage such training and make it a means of discipline which our young men will learn to value. It is right that we should provide it not only, but that we should make it as attractive as possible, and so induce our young men to undergo it at such times as they can command a little freedom and can seek the physical development they need, for mere health's sake, if for nothing more. Every means by which such things can be stimulated is legitimate, and such a method smacks of true American ideas. It is right, too, that the National Guard of the states should be developed and strengthened by every means which is not inconsistent with our obligations to our own people or with the established policy of our government. And this, also, not because the time or occasion specially calls for such measures, but because it should be our constant policy to make these provisions for our national peace and safety

More than this carries with it a reversal of the whole history and character of our polity More than this, proposed at this time, permit me to say, would mean merely that we had lost our self-possession, that we had been thrown off our balance by a war with which we have nothing to do, whose causes can not touch us, whose very existence affords us opportunities of friendship and disinterested service which should make us ashamed of any thought of hostility or fearful preparation for trouble. This is assuredly the opportunity for which a people and a government like ours were raised up, the opportunity not only to speak but actually to embody and exemplify the counsels of peace and amity and the lasting concord which is based on justice and fair and generous dealing

For Strong Navy.

A powerful navy we have always regarded as our proper and natural means of defense, and it has always been of defense that we have thought, never of aggression or of conquest. But who shall tell us now what sort of navy to build? We shall take leave to be strong upon the seas, in the future as in the past and there will be no thought of offense or provocation in that. Our ships are our natural bulwarks. When will the experts tell us just what kind we should construct—and when will they be right for 10 years together, if the relative efficiency of craft of different kinds and uses continues to change as we have seen it change under our very eyes in these last few months?

But I turn away from the subject. It is not new There is no new need to discuss it. We shall not alter our attitude toward it because some amongst us are nervous and excited. We shall easily and sensibly agree upon a policy of defense. The question has not changed its aspects because the times are not normal. Our policy will not be for an occasion. It will be conceived as a permanent and settled thing, which we will pursue at all seasons, without haste and after a fashion perfectly consistent with the peace of the world, the abiding friendship of states and the unhampered freedom of all with whom we deal. Let there be no misconception. The country has been misinformed. We have not been negligent of national defense. We are not unmindful of the great responsibility resting upon us. We shall learn and profit by the lesson of every experience and every new circumstance; and what is needed will be adequately done.

I close, as I began, by reminding you of the great tasks and duties of peace which challenge our best powers and invite us to build what will last, the tasks to which we can address ourselves now and at all times with free-hearted zest and with all the finest gifts of constructive wisdom we possess. To develop our life and our resources; to supply our own people, and the people of the world as their need arises, from the abundant plenty of our fields and our marts of trade, to enrich the commerce of our own states and of the world with the products of our mines, our farms and our factories, with the creations of our thought and the fruits of our character—this is what will hold our attention and our enthusiasm steadily, now and in the years to come, as we strive to show in our life as a nation what liberty and the inspirations of an emancipated spirit may do for men and for societies, for individuals, for states, and for mankind.

NO CONFIRMATION OF AN ATTACK ON DOVER

British Admiralty Refuses to Comment on Story of German Submarine Raid.

London Dec. 12 The admiralty today remained silent concerning the alleged attempt of half a dozen German submarines to raid the naval harbor at Dover yesterday The public today is speculating whether overzealous correspondents were not partly responsible for the excitement.

According to the story from Dover, six German submarines appeared in the outer harbor of Dover at 6·30 o'clock Thursday morning The first warning of their presence was given by guns from the warships inside the harbor Then the forts cut loose and fired about 200 shots. It was reported that two or three of the submarines were sunk. This is not confirmed.

Dover is opposite the French town of Calais and is one of the chief ports of communication between England and the continent. The admiralty harbor, comprising an area of 610 acres, is the finest harbor of refuge in the channel. Its construction was begun in 1898 and completed in 1909 at a cost of $17,500,000.

ONE EDITOR ATTACHED TO GENERAL'S STAFF

General Joffre's Headquarters, Dec. 11.—Andre Tardieu, the foreign editor of the Temps, is attached as lieutenant to General Joffre's staff. His duties require him to visit every part of the front, and he has therefore extraordinary opportunities for seeing the actual operations of the war M. Tardieu, it is understood, is assembling material for a history of the war.

DENVER SENDS TRAIN OF FLOUR TO BELGIUM

Denver, Col., Dec. 11.—Twenty cars carrying more than 1,000,000 pounds of Colorado milled flour, the gift of the people of the state to the war sufferers in Belgium, will start from Denver late today for New York. Free transportation furnished by the railroad over which the flour will be shipped.

A second similar train is being collected and will be sent east in a few days.

GERMANY WILLING TO ACCEPT TRUCE

Pope Benedict's Proposal Meets Favor on Condition Enemies Will Agree to Cease Fighting.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 12.—Senator Kenyon's proposal to have congress pass a resolution urging the belligerent powers to declare a 20 days' truce during the Christmas holiday season appears to be meeting favor in official circles. No official action has yet been taken, however.

That the proposal would meet with favor in Germany is indicated in the German government's expression of willingness to comply with a similar request from Pope Benedict. An official bulletin from Berlin says:

"Immediately Germany received the suggestion of Pope Benedict for a truce among the warring nations during the Christmas holidays an affirmative reply was sent to the vatican. The reply, however, was conditional on the acquiescence of all the other belligerents in the pope's suggestion."

Just what the other warring powers would do is a matter for conjecture as none of them has indicated their attitude in the matter of a truce.

ADVERTISING "GAME" BOOMING, IS REPORT

In 170 Cities Retail Business Was Better on November 1, 1914, Than In 1913.

Chicago, Dec. 12.—That the advertising business is on the increase is indicated in the heavy placing of contracts for the early months of 1915, according to the members of the executive committee of the Associated Advertising Club of the World, which met here today. The educational committee of the association has made an investigation of business conditions in 170 cities in the United States to ascertain conditions on November 1, compared with those a year ago. Although results have not been compiled Lewellyn Pratt, of New York, chairman of the committee said that it was evident the retail demand for the last few months has been equal or a little better than that of a year ago."

"The reports of the prosperous conditions were the most remarkable features of our preliminary meeting," said William Woodhead, of San Francisco, president of the association. Fifteen of the 17 members of the executive committee were present and agreed that the heavy placing of advertising for the early months of 1915 indicated a very favorable outlook. The committee arranged plans today for the annual convention of the association which will be held here beginning June 20. Advertising men from all parts of the world will attend.

DRAMA FLOURISHES AT SING SING PENITENTIARY

New York, Dec. 11.—Prisoners in Sing Sing prison learned today that the new warden, Thomas Mott Osborne, who has granted them many privileges since he became head of the institution recently, was arranging through the Golden Rule Brotherhood for the presentation at the prison on Christmas day of a new play the initial performance of which had been planned for early next year

BRYAN MISUNDERSTOOD ON "DRY" UTTERANCES

In Signed Editorial He Denies Advocating National Fight For Prohibition.

Lincoln, Neb., Dec. 12.—In a signed editorial in the Commoner, W. J. Bryan declares that his recent utterances upon the attempted dominance of the democratic party by the liquor interests and on woman suffrage have been misunderstood and misinterpreted. In order to make clear his stand, he says that while he would vote for both if submitted, he does not believe their advocates can muster sufficient strength, nor does he believe the time opportune for such submission.

"A national contest for either amendment," he says, "would simply divert attention from other issues upon which the people are ready to act, without advancing the cause of woman suffrage or prohibition." He adds that, as a democrat, he is interested in the moral side of the question and in seeing to it that democracy takes the side which appeals to young men coming out of colleges and schools.

HOUSTON OPPOSES LAND CREDITS LAW

Assistance By Government to Farmers Not Justified, Report Asserts—Live Stock Production Declines.

Washington, Dec 12.—That there is no emergency which justifies government assistance to farmers directly through the use of government cash or credit, was the position taken by Secretary Houston of the department of agriculture, in discussing rural credits in his annual report submitted today to President Wilson. Secretary Houston's statement was regarded as indicating the policy of the administration.

Secretary Houston pointed out that the new bank law "takes just and particular knowledge of the farmers' requirements." He suggested that any credit needs of the agricultural community beyond those cared for under the federal reserve law, should be cared for by a system of "co-operative credit associations," financed with private funds, by means of which the combined credit of farming communities could be utilized, and by a system of land mortgage banks, likewise, privately capitalized.

Not For Credits.

"There seems to be no emergency which requires or justifies government assistance to the farmers directly through the use of the government's cash or the government's credit," said the report. "The American farmer is sturdy, self reliant and independent. He is not in the condition of serfdom or semi-serfdom in which were the European peoples for whom government aid was extended in some form or other during the last century."

In advocating a land mortgage banking system and a system of co-oerative credits associations the report asserted that the use of the funds loaned for productive purposes on the farms covered by the mortgages should be insisted upon.

Mr Houston's report reviews the investigation of the marketing and distribution system and while the study is not yet sufficiently finished to admit of final conclusions the work thus far shows the need of a reorganization of the distribution process. He says:

Long Shipments.

"During the present grass season, for example, Chicago has received Mexican, Canadian and Folorida cattle at about the same time. Steers raised in California by an Orgeon operator have been shipped through Denver to Omaha and their beef sent to points on the Atlantic coast. Hogs raised in Illinois and sold at Indianapolis have been slaughtered at Boston and a part of their cured bacon shipped to Los Angeles. Michigan dressed veal calves pressed to South Water street commission houses at Chicago have been returned to the identical shipping points from which they came to fill orders from local retail markets."

While the production of grain generally showed a great increase in the crop of 1914, the report pointed out, the production of corn showed no advance and the meat production showed a distinct decline. In this connection the secretary points out a "lamentable neglect of live stock production in the south."

BODY OF REBEL CHIEF RECOVERED FROM RIVER

Pretoria, (via London), Dec. 11.—The body of Gen. Christian Beyers, the rebel leader who was drowned recently while attempting to escape across the Vaal river from government troops, has been found at Vlieg Krall, not far from the spot where General Beyers was seen to sink. The official announcement says that there is no doubt with regard to the identification.

MILITARISTS ARE AFTER PUBLICITY WEEKS DECLARES

Senator Opposes Airing Military Plans and Strength—Thinks Navy Equal to Possible Emergencies.

FOR SETTLED ARMY POLICY

Reserve Army Will Strengthen Defense Force and More Equipment Should Be Provided, He Says.

Washington, Dec 12.—Declaring that there has been too much publicity of military affairs of the nation, Senator Weeks, of Massachusetts in a speech in the Senate today opposed agitation for special investigation of military preparedness, praised the strength and personnel of the navy and urged the organization of an army reserve.

"Any one may learn about our military or naval establishment by reading the reports of the secretaries of the departments and the reports of those who are conducting the different bureaus and branches of the service," said the senator. "It is an open book to all our citizens and there need be no doubt about our relative position or our capabilities if one is disposed to study reports instead of seeking notoriety in the press.

"In fact, there is and has been altogether too much publicity in such matters, in my judgment. We have had a demonstration during the present European war of the value of secrecy in conducing military operations and there is no reason why we should spread broadcast what we are doing or what preparations we have made.

Would Protect War Plans.

"I have no doubt every European country is informed in the most minute detail of our condition both on land and sea and if any change in our methods is to be made it should not be in the direction of greater publicity, but should be to protect our operations even in time of peace from scrutiny both at home and abroad."

While expressing the hope that the European war would be the last great war and that nations would "see the folly of maintaining such great military establishments as great European countries have done and that a general agreement may be had which will provide for at least a partial disarmament" Senator Weeks maintained it was the part of wisdom to consider what course to follow in case such a result should not come.

"At this time," he continued, "it does not seem to me that it is wise or prudent to take any action which will change our policy or add to our naval equipment except by an omnibus appropriation which can be expended under direction of a general board of the navy and the president Our naval establishment is in a class with that of Germany and France and probably second only to that of Great Britain."

Senator Weeks maintained that the army was insufficient and proposed its reorganization not for the purpose of increasing the permanent active army, but for the organization of a rserve corps which would make available large forces of trained soldiers at all times.

Likes Reserve Idea.

"If the military experts are right," he said, "that the country needs a force of 500,000 trained men supplemented by from 100,000 to 200,000 volunteers to give it a reasonable chance of protection against a foe and that the 500,000 men will be needed at once on the outbreak of war, organized as fighting machines—it would appear that the defense provided at present by congress is inadequate and practically worthless and that the moneys spent on this defense are largely wasted."

Through a reserve system Senator Weeks maintained that a much larger trained army could be maintained at less expense than a permanent standing army now.

"I believe," the senator said, "that laws should be passed at once which will reorganize the regular army. This reorganization should give to the mobile army the proper proportion of infantry, field artillery, cavalry, engineers, signal, sanitary troops, the needed ammunition and supply trains, and provide for properly equipped depots.

"The law must provide that the men serve the shortest time with the colors necessary to train them as soldiers, and then pass them as soon as trained to a reserve and that while serving in this reserve the men must be paid. Make the enlistment age 18 to 21, with consent of parents, and 25 as limit for first enlistment."

In addition to the national reserve force Senator Weeks would have a similar reorganization under the militia and urged laws to provide skilled military trainers for volunteers.

EVIDENCE SENSATIONAL IN DES MOINES PROBE

Depositions Allege Police Chief Was Drunk For Several Days In Milwaukee.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 11.—Sensational evidence was presented today when the civil service board began a hearing of charges against three well known detectives who were fired by Chief of Police Crawford on the charge that they had conspired to "dope" him when he was in Milwaukee in quest of a prisoner last September.

Depositions were read today alleging that Chief Crawford was drunk for several days in Milwaukee. Others alleged that Detective Denholm and Eddie McKercher, son of Detective McKercher "framed up" a deal to get Crawford intoxicated. This was to be done in order to give them a club to hold over the chief's head.

The only witness examined was the custodian of a park who told that one of the discharged sleuths, W. D Sims, had been seen in the park with a married woman, hugging and kissing her and drinking beer with her. The hearing will last over tomorrow

Prepared Meat Perfection

OF course every butcher has a perfect right to brag about his sausage, bologna, chopped meat and other things of that sort.

He knows very well what's in them, and the buyer doesn't.

We could tell you things about certain kinds of sausage, for instance, that'd fairly bark with interest.

Only safe way is to trade with a reliable butcher—one whom you know will give you a fair deal. Can we serve you?

A LETTER FROM SON TO MOTHER SUGGESTED BY "OBTERVER"

By "Observer"

I heard a man say this week that he had not written his mother a letter or more than a year—had not even neard from her in that length of time. The speaker was a man past forty years old, so his mother, you will see, has reached that age where life at best, seems empty to her.

How can a man be so unmindful? If they knew what their silence means to their mothers, I do not believe there would be such men. It would be safe to assume that in all such cases, "mother" wrote the last letter that has passed between them. And then, receiving no answer to that one, she wrote again, and then again.

The son who has grown to manhood and now has children of his own has let time erase all memories, or at least all affections for the home of his childhood. But not so with the mother who is still in that home Time has but increased her love for the children now scattered here and there Her many years have taught her than making worldly goods our goal in life is a mistake. The voices of her children would now mean more her that making worldly goods our then who have been negligent, and who may not be able to visit their childhood homes, can at least write. There is absolutely no excuse for not doing so.

Christmas is near If the reader be one who has not written home for a year, let him send mother a letter, now. It will mear more to her than any other gift she will receive.

The instance that prompted me to write this is not new, of course. I have known men, as you probably have, who claimed they had not written home for many years All such might well make a firm New Year's resolution, right now, and stick to it after making it—resolve to let not another month of her life pass without your dear old mother receiving a cheerful, loving letter from you.

TURNING A NEW LEAF

Men's personal sense of right and wrong is always keener than their collective sense The financier who wouldn't cheat a newsboy might loot a railroad Pious church deacons who wouldn't think of peering through their neighbors' keyholes into home secrecies, have built up fortunes by hiring business spies

In the Clayton bill we have enacted into law the principal that unfair competition is dishonorable and liable to land behind the bars the man who resorts to it. Enacting such a law, of course, doesn't mean that unfair competition will cease—there has long been a law against murders and men still kill It means, though, that with respect to a large class of crimes once thought smart and, therefore, permissible, the collective conscience has made progress

The writing of this law upon the statute book in response to a steadily growing public sentiment which at last prevailed over all opposition may therefore, be said to turn a new leaf in the history of American business.

HOW WE GET THE NEWS

Day before yesterday a perfectly nice lady called us up and with tears in her voice reproved us for not mentioning the fact that she had had a friend visiting her last week. We told her that she had not let us know anything about it and that therefore, we did not know that she had a visitor Then she said, "Well, you should have known I thought you were running a newspaper." Wouldn't that rattle your slats? Some people think that an editor ought to be a cross between Argus and Anna Eva Fay. They seem to think that our five senses are augmented by a sixth that lets us know everything that happens, even if we see, hear, feel ,taste or smell it not . Dear lady, editors are only human or at least, almost human. If you have a friend visiting you, or have returned from a visit out of town, if Johnnie falls and breaks his arm ,if your husband chops his toe instead of a stick of wood, if anything happens that makes you glad, or sad, happy or mad, call us up. Tell us about it. That's the way to get it in the paper.

INFALLIBLE PROPHET FORETOLD GREAT WAR

Man Who Guessed Dates For Kaiser's Grandpa Mentioned 1913.

From the New York Sun.

A prominent German of this city showed to an officer of one of our important banks an interesting horoscope that was made in 1829 by an astrologer for Emperor William, grandfather of the present kaiser of Germany, and said that the predictions contained in it were more or less known throughout Germany.

The earlier William asked him if he would be king of Prussia. For an answer the astrologer took the figures 1829, (the year of the consultation) and arranged them in the following manner.

1 8 2 9

1 8 4 9

Adding them up, he said: "You will be king of Prussia in 1849," which came true.

They were already talking of a larger Germany (the consolidation of the German states), and William I wanted to know if he would ever be emperor of the large empire.

The astrologer set down the figures 1849 in the following arrangement

1 8 4 9

1 8 7 1

Then he replied: "You will be emperor of the larger Germany in 1871, which was the date of the conquest of the French and the establishment of the German empire.

He asked how long he would live to enjoy his sovereignty over the larger empire, and the astrologer placed the figures 1871 as follows

1 8 7 1

1 8 8 8

This was the year in which the emperor died.

The emperor put one more question: "What will happen after I am gone?" Again the astrologer took the figures 1888, arranging them as follows

1 8 8 8

1 9 1 3

"After 1913," he said, "a great change will come to the German empire."

A Remarkable Campaign.

From the Chicago Tribune.

The election, marked by many unusual features brought to a close one of the most remarkable political campaigns in American history. Never before have the people beheld candidates for the United States Senate, long the bulwark of corporation rule, going up and down the country intent upon winning the confidence of the voters instead of the manipulating legislatures. Never before—in the memory of this generation, at least—has a foreign war produced so profound an influence upon a political contest.

In addition, the rivalry of the parties has been complicated by unusual local issues, such as hinge upon the liquor traffic, religious prejudice enfranchisement of women and the proposal of legislative reforms ranging all the way from the establishment of state insurance to the abolition of the death penalty.

Many of these unusual aspects developed early in the campaign leading up to the first general plebiscite since the inauguration of the Wilson administration. Colonel Roosevelt was abroad vigorously denouncing the political bosses the demon rum the democratic tariff and the Bryan peace treaties while he strove to hold the progressive party together. The friends and foes of rum and the women suffragists were active in many states, and the religious issue was being fanned into flame in half a dozen sections of the country. The campaign began to offer all the varied attractions of a circus with three rings and two platforms, not to mention the aerial wonders and the side show.

The republicans were making headway in teaching the people to blame democratic tariff reduction for the "hard times" which seemed to be getting harder, and to condemn the administration for extravagance, sectional legislation, destruction of civil service and other shortcomings.

Colonel Roosevelt and the republicans were making progress and the democratic leaders were becoming worried when suddenly the European bombshell burst. Instantly Colonel Roosevelt was swept off the first page of the newspapers, and folks, gripped by the war excitement, almost forgot an election was at hand. Then ensued anxiety concerning the well being of America in the midst of war. When people regained their composure they found the democrats extolling the peace efforts of President Wilson blaming the war for "hard times," and calling upon the voters to continue democratic control of congress in order that the president might find harmonious support in dealing with the delicate problems produced by the foreign conflict.

Unquestionably the democrats benefited from the situation produced by the war, and the republican and progressive opposition saw their "issues" fizzling out.

Not till the war tax bill was brought forward by the administration did the hopes of the opposition begin to revive. A decided setback was given the democratic cause by the demand of the administration for a levy of $100,000,000 emergency taxes while the party leaders in congress were attempting to drive through the $92,000,000 pork barrel river and harbor appropriation bill. This attempted steal finally was frustrated by the republicans.

From the time the bill passed the republicans began gaining ground in the campaign and the democrats, from President Wilson down, were placed on the defensive for the first time since the outbreak of the war turned the tide in their favor.

The most notable effort to bolster up the democratic cause, thus injured on the eve of the election, was put forth in the president's appeal to the people of the Underwood letter, which mingled praise of democratic achievement with explanation of the necessity of imposing additional taxes.

First Mail Car In Iowa.

From the Chicago Tribune.

A bronze reproduction of the queerest, clumsiest, funniest little old railroad car in the world was hung in the train concourse of the new Chicago & Northwestern railroad terminal yesterday. The original was built in 1864, and was the first railway postal car in the country.

George B. Armstrong's name appears below the reproduction of the car, because it was his idea that brought the railway mail service into existence. The Chicago & Northwestern railroad had the reproduction made because it was the first source of encouragement to the persistent inventor. The railroad furnished the financial backing, and on August 28, 1864, the first mail was carried between Chicago and Clinton, Ia. It was the knell of the stage coach. By 1867 two more mail cars had been built and put into service between Chicago and Fort Howard, Wis., and between Boone and Council Bluffs, Ia.

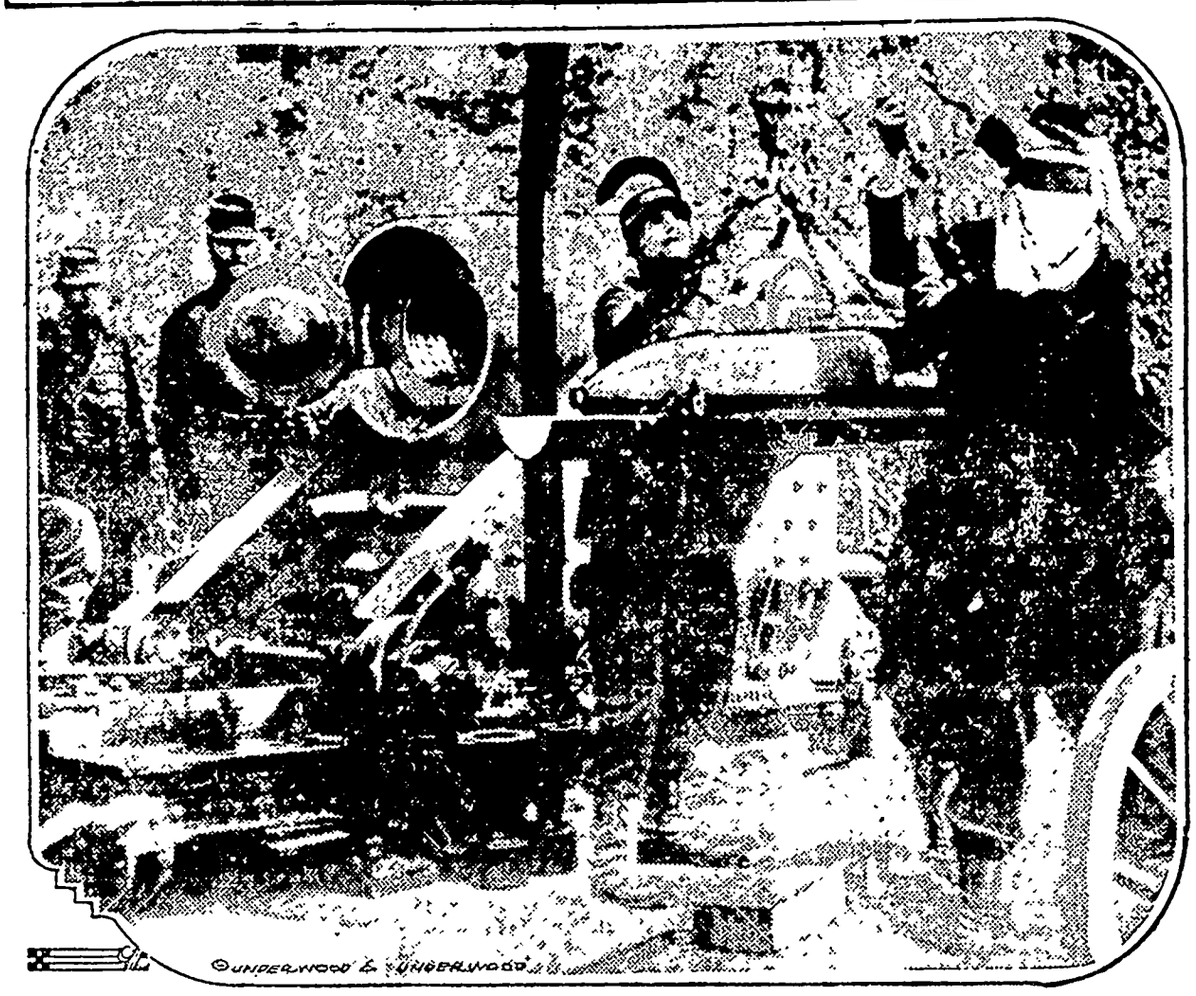
FRENCH USE CRANE TO GET HEAVY SHELLS INTO FIELD GUN



So heavy are the shells fired by some of the French field guns that they are loaded into the gun by means of a crane, as is seen in this photo. Note the big bore of the gun. It resembles a safe deposit vault more than anything else. After the shell is rammed home the swinging door is closed. The gun is set in what is known as a well. The gun carriage itself works on wheels so that when set off the recoil carries it backward on a smooth platform.

RESUME OF IMPORTANT NEWS EVENTS OF WEEK

The campaign in Poland has held the center of attention this week. The Germans after having been virtually hemmed in by the Russian armies were enabled to cut their way out of the encircling cordon because of the delayed arrival of a detachment of Russian troops to again assume the offensive. The Germans report the capture of 80,000 prisoners. They also lost a large number of prisoners and men killed and wounded. The Russians are withstanding the German assaults and are investing Cracow. They have pushed the Austrians back against the Carpathians.

There has been no important developments in the western theater of war nor in the fields where the Turks are engaged. The Austrians have taken Belgrade and Servia is almost reduced. The French and English are reported to be sending a relief expedition to aid the Serbs and Montenegrins.

Optimism continued to be discussed and felt in the United States throughout the past week. Reports, both of a general and of a detailed nature, presaging great prosperity for the United States as a result of the European war have found their ways into the news columns of every newspaper of the country. A prediction by Edward E. Pratt, chief of the department of foreign and domestic commerce, that the war would have the effect of increasing the foreign trade of the United States by $500,000,000 yearly was made after exhaustive research by the department. The opening of the New York stock exchange found bonds easy, but far from panicky. Trading has been light, and there has been no apparent indication to unload by holders. The November export figures will show a balance in trade in favor of the United States of $70,000,000, according to Secretary Redfield.

That the business interests of the country are not only recovering from the effect of the shock, which naturally followed the start of the amazing embroglio in Europe, but are by way of profiting vastly by reason of the war is a statement, vouched for by the most astute financiers in public life.

The south is nearing normal condition. Reports from the cotton states indicate not more than 20 per cent of the $150,000,000 cotton pool, raised by bankers of the country, will be utilized by the cotton interests.

Many members of congress, including southern members, who fought for government cotton relief will urge strongly rural credits legislation at the coming session of congress.

The government arbitration board, sitting in Chicago, heard a number of witnesses in the week on the dispute between 95 western railroads and 55,000 enginemen on wages and working conditions.

Progressive party leaders from 32 states gathered at the executive committee meeting in Chicago and emphatically denied all rumors that the party may amalgamate with either of the older parties.

General Villa and Provisional President Gutierrez, of Mexico, are now in Mexico City, and, according to press dispatches, the capital is in a calm state. General Carranza is still in the south. Fighting at Naco, Sonora, continues unabated, and reports of injuries to Americans by bullets fired across the boundary line are received almost daily at Washington.

The governing board of the Pan-American union, embracing 21 American republics, will consider proposals to create a neutral zone in the western hemisphere, to be held free from belligerent operations of warring powers of Europe. The board meets Tuesday. Argentine, Uruguay, Chile and Ecuador, all of which countries have complained of violations of their neutrality by foreign warships, will urge that steps be taken to restrict Europe's war to the eastern hemisphere. Protests against American shipments to neutral European powers being held up by British warships caused a conference between Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, English ambassador, and Secretary Bryan. The ambassador promised that American shipments would not be delayed any longer than necessary while being searched at sea.

The president's message, which will be read to congress at the forthcoming session, will deal with the conservation bills, the bill for a government owned merchant marine, the Philippine bill and the regular appropriation measures. President Wilson said he would oppose the proposed investigation into the nation's military preparedness if urged for an opinion.

Great Britain and Italy have protested to the state department against the Arizona law, which requires at least 80 per cent of the employes of certain institutions to be American born citizens. The law is a violation of a treaty between the United States and the two countries, it is said.

Frank Ryan, alleged head of a "clairvoyant ring" in Chicago, makes a confession to the state's attorney and says that his share of the proceeds of the swindling operations conducted with the consent of certain members of the police department, amounted to $6,000 a month.

It is reported that General Christian DeWet, leader of revolutionary troops in the Union of South Africa, may be shot by the British. He was captured after a chase across the veldt by a motor brigade.

Rear Admiral Alfred Thayer Mahan retired noted naval expert and writer, whose works are said to have inspired increased naval armaments of the world powers, died at his home in Washington.

Gov. G. W. P. Hunt of Arizona, disappointed at the failure of the voters of the state to adopt his pet measure, abolishing capital punishment, announced that he will invite certain men, who fought the measure, to be legal witnesses at the hanging of 11 convicted murderers.

SOME PEOPLE GET ON NERVES OF A WATCH

From Pierson's Weekly.

One of the troubles of watchmakers is the man who gets on his watch's nerves. There are lots of customers on whom a good watch is wasted. A good second hand watch that has kept perfect time for other people will, with certain other people, go irregularly when it is not standing still. It is common knowledge in the trade that watches are greatly influenced by their owners.

Nobody knows the reasons, but two explanations have been offered. One is that watches are sensitive to personal magnetism, the natural electricity that human beings contain in varying quantities.

The other is that a watch may be disturbed by the vibrations set up by a footstep which is heavier than the ordinary. The man who puts his heels down heavily usually needs to set the regulator towards "slow" to keep it from gaining.

One of the mysterious sides of the subject is that watches seldom keep good time on people of nervous, excitable temperaments.

European Railroad Gauges.

From the Engineering Record.

There are several railway gauges—or widths between the two rails of the track—in Europe, but in the United States and Canada it is possible for a truck to travel from Prince Rupert to New Orleans, and from Quebec to San Francisco without hindrance. This was accomplished at great expense some 20 or 30 years ago. In Europe the bulk of the mileage is the standard 4-foot, 8½-inch gauge. There are, however, some other gauges, especially the meter gauge in France, Belgium, Italy, Spain and Portugal. The most important exceptions are in Spain and Portugal, where they have nearly 10,000 miles of the 5-foot, 6-inch gauge, and in Russian and Finland, where there are 30,000 miles of the 5-foot gauge. This ½-inch difference from the standard was adopted by the Russian government to avoid the dangers of invasion. The only connection between France and Spain is at Irun, on the Biscayan coast, but the Pyrenees are now being pierced at more than one place, and a question of conforming the gauge of Spain and Portugal to that of the bulk of Europe has arisen.

Moving a clock a distance of a mile from one house to another in Waycross, Ga., caused it to resume work after it had lain idle for seven years. Jewelers had failed to start it going, but the jolting succeeded.

NEEDLE DEFIES SCIENCE.

Fugitive Bits of Steel in the Body Enigma for Doctors.

From the Kansas City Star.

Don't step on a needle!

A needle point in the human body is almost as hard to find as a "needle in a haystack." Every surgeon knows that so well that he would almost rather be called upon to make a major surgical operation than to go cutting and prodding around among the intricate muscles and bones of the hand and foot in search of the fine point of a cambric needle.

In the large hospitals scarcely a day passes without an operation to remove a needle point and the chances are about even as to whether the tiny point of steel will be found or not.

The first thing done is to make an X-ray picture of the hand or foot. This shows the needle point imbedded in the flesh. But even with this as a guide where to cut the most skilled surgeon may not succeed in finding the needle.

Last week one of the best surgeons in Kansas City spent an hour and a half searching for a needle point in the palm of a woman's hand, and, although the X-ray photograph showed where it was, he did not find it. The following morning he resumed the search, with the patient under an anaesthetic for a half hour and then gave up the attempt.

Where a needle point is not found it hardly ever makes serious trouble. It pitches its way along in the flesh with every movement of the muscles, causing considerable soreness, until it reaches a place beside a bone or in a muscle where it can rest with freedom from muscle movement, and then its presence is seldom felt and it will lie there through a lifetime. Or it may work its way to the skin, where it will cause a pimple, and may be drawn out with the fingers.

The best thing to do if you get a broken off needle point into you is to go straightway to a good surgeon and have him operate for its removal, even if he does tell you that it's an even break whether or not he finds it.

Is Germany Facing Starvation?

From the Chicago Herald.

The apparent attitude of the German government toward its Belgian captives, for that is what they seem to be, since we hear that they are forbidden to leave the country, is extremely difficult to understand. Under such circumstances as the Germans appear to be in it has been the custom of the besieged military force to turn out the noncombattants and to endeavor to throw the burden of feeding them upon the enemy. There has been no intimation that the allies would drive the Belgians back if the Germans drove them out or permitted them to depart.

The reported refusal to permit the Belgians to buy food in the adjacent German districts also sounds strange. It appears to reveal conditions approaching actual distress in Germany whose existence has been most strenuously denied by the German press. When communities refuse even to sell food to other communities only a few miles away the situation looks as if the former saw near at hand for themselves the hunger which the latter are facing.

A Boy Is a Boy.

By C. F. Morris.

One day a precious book was missing from the table and a 3-year-old child was strangely quiet. Pa started an investigation. No sign of kiddie in his usual haunts but in the bath room there was a splash and when pa opened the door the book was sinking, while the hope of the home looking up smilingly said in a soft tone "Boat, Dada, Boat." You could not and should not blame baby. You could only try thereafter to keep prized books out of baby's reach. Instead of a book you could supply a boat, which suggests a parallel. Courage, fortitude, willingness to dare and suffer are qualities which humanity cannot spare. In order that they may be developed it is not necessary that childish statesmanship should be permitted to play with man killing toys. We can take away these zeppelins and their guns and let the useful tools of industry and innocent sport replace them. Clearly that is the way to insure the world's future peace. So help to form the world's opinion for it and we will have no more wars.

An Honest Community.

From Dubuque (Ia.) Telegraph-Herald.

"Everybody's honest in Springdale," is the assertion of a correspondent from that place, writing in the Davenport Democrat. Editorially that paper declares it is a third reason why the town is entitled to recognition. The first is that this Cedar county, Iowa, hamlet is the former headquarters of John Brown, of Harper's Ferry fame, and the second is that the town is the center of a community of Friends or Quakers. The real claim to distinction, however, rests on the fact a merchandising firm has just disposed of its enterprise and it was found that after 35 years in business and the extension of liberal credit there was but $200 on the books. Most of this probably will be paid. What a tremendous saving on sleep would this town have afforded had the late Diogenes resided there.

SWISS REPUBLIC IN FLOURISHING STATE

Mountain Kingdom Is Refuge for Oppressed Foreigners—Germans Invest Much.

From the London Times.

Just as Switzerland used formerly to be a refuge for foreign exiles and for the oppressed and persecuted of all lands, so is she now tending to become a refuge for foreign capital, especially for foreign capital which is oppressed and persecuted by a war tax heavier than it wishes to pay. This tendency has of late been accentuated, not only by the introduction of the German war tax but also by the threat of the introduction of an income tax into France and by the increased income tax imposed in England.

At the time of the introduction of the war tax into Germany Swiss bankers sent out circulars to large German banks and to important manufacturing firms calling their attention to the advantages of investing money in Switzerland. They also advertised in the leading German newspapers pointing out the security of capital in Swiss banks and its freedom from government molestation or other interference. Whether as a result of their efforts or not, a great deal of German capital has undoubtedly found its way during the last year to Switzerland, so much so that the matter recently came up for discussion before a committee of the Prussian Herrenhaus.

Evading German War Tax.

It was elicited in evidence, for instance, that one important German firm in the Rhine provinces had established an estate bank in Switzerland with a capital of £750,000, thus depriving the government and municipalities of a considerable amount of taxation. Altogether 10 different financial undertakings were said to have been recently founded in Switzerland with German capital, and all of them in the endeavor to evade the war tax. Naturally the Prussian tax commissioners are attempting to devise some means either of preventing the exit of German capital to Switzerland—which would scarcely be possible—or of taxing it after it has been transferred thither.

A Recent Financial Development.

The importance of Switzerland's position in international European finance is of recent growth. Its origin may be traced back to the year 1907, when enlightened opinion succeeded in getting the better of the cantonal jealousies which had so long acted as a drag on the country's financial standing. In that year a law was passed depriving the cantons of the right to issue notes and conferring this right upon one bank, the national bank, created in 1907. Previously 30 Swiss banks had been entitled to issue notes and foreign investors had no knowledge of and no confidence in notes issued by all these petty little local banking institutions, whose credit moreover, was not always altogether sound. Since Swiss credit has been established partly on the national bank, with the sole right of issuing notes, and partly on the cantonal banks (with the guarantee of the canton whose name they bear behind them), it no longer depends upon the good will of the Bank of France or of any other bank; and the policy of the Swiss National bank is so directed as to steer a middle course between France and Germany, thus winning the confidence of both countries.

Earlier Transfers of Capital.

The idea that Switzerland ought to endeavor to invest capital abroad in order not to allow her home money market to be glutted is far from new. As long ago as 1755 the bank of Leu & Co., still a well known Swiss bank, was established for the purpose of finding investments abroad for Swiss capital at a higher rate of interest than that obtained in Switzerland. About 70 years later, when Switzerland's neutrality had been guaranteed, capital began of its own accord to flow toward the republic, seeking a safe investment there. At first it was chiefly French capital which turned to Switzerland, for French financiers took into consideration the fact that only a small proportion of Swiss government and cantonal loans could properly be classed as unproductively expended (on the army, for instance). Thus it came about that a large amount of French capital was sunk in Swiss railways—in federal railway 3½ per cent stock and in 4 per cent Jura-Simplon stock, for example.

Swiss Water Power.

As time went on German capital began to compete for investment in Switzerland and to get a foothold there. Thus the Allegemeine Elektrizitatsgesellschaft and other great German firms acquired a position in the country, and the fact that number of Swiss manufacturers were so anxious for rapid development of electric power in Switzerland, and that the country had no coal supply of her own worth mentioning, greatly facilitated matters for German electrical supply companies. Switzerland, moreover, was even then keenly conscious of the difficulty of procuring a sufficient supply of coal whenever a coal miners' strike should occur in Belgium, Germany, or other coal producing lands. Now she is even more alive to the danger of allowing any foreign power, be it Germany or France, to exploit her water power, and the Swiss Federal railways are consequently acquiring everywhere the right to utilize the water power for the eventual electrification of their system, and of course of ceding to Swiss manufacturers the right to use a portion of this power.

Our Inadequate Agriculture.

Robert W. Bruere in Harper's Magazine.

Economists tell us that the cause of high prices is to be found in the abnormal increase of the world's gold supply, in the "brigandage of the middlemen," in the growth of luxury, the aggression of labor, and all manner of disturbance in the industrial world. But there is yet another explanation which has not received the consideration its reasonableness demands. In great agricultural states like Illinois and Iowa less land is under cultivation today than 14 years ago; many important counties in states like Ohio are producing less food than they did before the civil war. During the last census period population in the United States increased 21 per cent, but agricultural production increased 10 per cent only. To meet an increase of 21 per cent in the number of mouths to be fed, the production of wheat increased only 3.8 per cent, of orchard fruits 1.8 per cent, while the production of corn actually fell off by 4.2 per cent.

The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet

BY

BURTON E. STEVENSON

Copyright, 1913, by Burton E. Stevenson.

CHAPTER XV.—(Continued) 12

She stopped and glanced at her mistress.

"Continue!" said the latter. "Tell what you have to tell."

"I knew that madame also . . ." cabinet gone, taken away, sold by that she called at this house, night before

She stopped again. I walked over to the window and stood staring at the wooden shutter, strangely moved.

"Well, why not?" she demanded fiercely, and I felt that she was addressing my turned back. "Why not? Shall a woman not be loved? Shall a woman endure what madame endured . . ."

"That will do, Julie," broke in the veiled lady, her voice cold as ice. "Tell your story."

"I knew of the secret draw; I had seen madame open it; I knew what it contained. But I was faithful to madame, I loved her; I was glad that she had found some one . Madame will remember her despair, her horror, when she entered her room to find the cabinet gone, taken away, sold by that . . . I, too, was in despair—I desired with my whole soul to help madame. That night I had a rendezvous with him," and she nodded toward the photograph which lay upon the floor. "I told him"

Her mistress stood as though turned to stone. I could guess her anguish and humiliation

"He questioned me—he learned everything—the drawer, how it was opened—all. But I did not suspect what was in his mind—not for an instant did I suspect. But on the boat I saw him, and then I knew Well, he has got what he deserved'"

She shivered and pressed her hands against her eyes

"I think that is all, madame," she added, hoarsely

"It is all of that story," said Godfrey, in a crisp voice, "but there is another."

"Another?" echoed the veiled lady, looking at him.

"Ask her, madame, for what purposes she called at this house, night before last, and saw Philip Vantine in this room."

"I did not!'" shrieked the girl, her face ablaze "It is a lie!"

"She does not need to tell!'" went on Godfrey inexorably. "Any fool could guess. She came for the letters! She had resolved herself to blackmail you, madame!"

"It is a lie!'" shrieked the girl again, "I come hoping to save her—to . . ."

A storm of angry sobbing choked her

I could see how the veiled lady was trembling. I placed a chair for her, and she sank into it with a murmur of thanks.

"Besides, we have a witness to her visit," added Godfrey "Shall I call the police, madame?"

"No, no'" and the girl sat upright again, her face ghastly. "I will tell. I will tell all. Give me but a moment."

She sat there, struggling for self-control, her streaked and grotesque countenance contorted with emotion. Then I saw her eyes widen, and, glancing around, I saw that Rogers had dragged himself to a sitting posture, and was staring at her his face livid.

The sight of him seemed to madden her.

"It was you!" she shrieked, and shook her clenched fist at him. "It was you who told! Coward! Coward!"

But Godfrey, his face very grim, laid a heavy hand upon her arm.

"Be still!" he cried "He told us nothing! He tried to shield you—though why he should wish to do so . ."

Rogers broke in with a hollow and ghastly laugh

"It was natural enough, sir," he said hoarsely "She's my wife!"

CHAPTER XVI.

PHILIP VANTINE'S CALLER.

It was a sorbid story that Rogers gasped out to us; and, as it concerns this tale only incidentally, I shall pass over it as briefly as may be.

Eight or 10 years before, the fair Julie—at least, she was fairer then than now!—had come to New York to enter the employe of a family whose mistress had decided that life without a French maid was unendurable. Rogers had met her, had been fascinated by her black eyes and red lips, had, in the end, proposed honourable marriage—quite unnecessarily, no doubt!—had been accepted, and for some months had led an eventful existence as the husband of the siren Then, one morning, he awakened to find her gone.

He had, of course, entrusted his savings to her—that had been one condition of the marriage—and the savings were gone, also Julie it seems, had been overcome with longing for the Paris asphalt; no doubt, too, she had found herself ennuied by the lack of romance in married life with Rogers, and she had flown back to France. Rogers had thought of following, but, appalled at the difficulty of finding her in Paris, not knowing what he should do if he did find her, he had finally given up, and had settled gloomily down to live upon his memories. Some sort of affection for her had kept alive within him, and when he opened the door of Vantine's house and found her standing on the steps, he was as wax in her hands.

Julie had listened to all this indifferently, even disdainfully without denying anything, nor sought to excuse herself. Perhaps that she needed excuse did not to her. And when the story was finished she was quite herself again; even a little proud, I think, of holding the center of the stage in the role of siren. It was almost a rejuvenescence, and there was gratitude in the gaze she turned on Rogers.

"This is all true, I suppose?" asked the veiled lady.

"All quite true, madame," answered Julie, with a shrug. "I was younger then and the love of excitement was too strong for me. I am older now, and have more sense—besides, I am no longer sought after as I was."

"And so," said madame, with irony, "you are now, no doubt, willing to return to your husband."

"I have been considering it, madame," replied Julie, with astounding simplicity, "ever since I saw him here the other evening, and learned that he still cared for me. One must have a harbour in one's old age."

I glanced at Rogers and was astonished to see that he was regarding the woman with affectionate admiration. Evidently the harbour was waiting, should Julie choose to anchor there.

"I have hesitated," she added, "only because of madame. Where would madame get another maid such as I? No one but I can arrange her hair—no one but I can prepare her bath . . ."

"We will discuss it," said the veiled lady, "when we are alone. And now, perhaps, you will be so good as to tell us of your previous visit here."

"Very well, madame," and Julie settled into a more comfortable posture. "It was one day on the boat as I was looking down at the passengers of the third class that I perceived Georges—M. Drouet—strolling about. I was bouleversee—what you call upset with amazement, and then he looked up and our eyes met, and he came beneath me and commanded that I meet him that evening. It was then that I learned his plan. It was to secure those letters for him and to dispose of them."

"To whom?" asked Godfrey.

"To the person that would pay the greatest price for them, most certainly," answered Julie, surprised that it should have been thought necessary to ask such a question. "They were to be offered first to madame at 10,000 francs each; should she refuse, they were then to be offered to M le Duc—he would surely desire to possess them!"

The veiled lady shivered a little, and her hand instinctively sought her bosom to assure herself that the precious packet was safe.

"That night," continued Julie, "in my cabin, I tossed and tossed, trying to discover a way to prevent this; for I had seen long since that M. Drouet no longer cared for me—I knew that it was upon some other woman that money would be spent. I decided that, at the first moment, I would hasten to this house; I would explain the matter to M. Vantine, I would persuade him to restore to me the letters, with which I would fly to madame. I knew, also, that I could rely upon her gratitude," added the girl. "After all, one must provide for oneself."

She paused and glanced around the room, smiling at the interest in our faces.

"You have at least one virtue—that of frankness," said the veiled lady. "Continue."

"It was not until evening that I found an opportunity to leave madame," Julie went on. "I hastened there; I rang the ball; but I confess I should have failed, I should not have secured an entrance, if it had not been that it was my husband who opened the door to me Even after I was inside the door, he refused to permit me to see his master; but as we were debating together, M. Vantine himself came into the hall, and I ran to him and begged that he hear me. It was then that he invited me to enter this room."

She paused again, and a little shiver of expectancy ran through me At last we were to learn how Philip Vantine had met his death!

"I sat down," continued Julie. "I told him the story from the very beginning. He listened with much interest, but when I proposed that he should restore to me the letters, he hesitated. He walked up and down the room, trying to decide; then he took me through that door into the room beyond. The cabinet was standing in the center of the floor, and all the lights were blazing

"'Is that the cabinet?' he asked me, and when I said that most assuredly it was, he seemed surprised

"'It is an easy thing to prove,' I said, and I went to the cabinet and pressed on the three springs, as I had seen madame do. The little handle at the side fell out, but suddenly he stopped me.

"'Yes, it is the cabined,' he said. 'I see that. And no doubt the drawer contains the letters, as you say. But those letters do not belong to you. They belong to your mistress. I cannot permit that you take them away, for, after all, I do not know you. You may intend to make some bad use of them.'

"I protested that such a suspicion was most unjust, that my character was of the best, that I was devoted to my mistress and desired to protect her. He listened, but he was not convinced. In the end, he brought me back into this room. I could have cried with rage!

"'Return to your mistress,' he said, 'and inform her that I shall be most happy to return the letters to her. But it must be in her own hands that I place them. The letters are here, whenever it pleases her to claim them'

"I saw that it was of no use to argue further, he was of adamant. So I left the house, he himself opening the door for me. And that is all that I know, madame"

There was a moment's silence; then I heard Godfrey draw a deep breath. I could see that, like myself, he was convinced that the girl was telling the truth.

"Of course," he suggested gently, "as soon as you reached home you related to your mistress what had occurred?'

Julie grew a little crimson.

"No, monsieur," she said, "I told her nothing."

"I should have thought you would have wished to prove your devotion," went on Godfrey, in his sweetest tone.

"I feared that, without the letters, she would misunderstand my motives," said Julie, sullenly.

"And then, of course, without the letters, there would be no reward," Godfrey supplemented.

Julie did not reply, but she looked very uncomfortable.

The veiled lady rose.

"Have you any further questions to ask her?" she said.

"No, madame," said Godfrey. "The story is complete."

Julie resumed her veil, shooting at Godfrey a glance anything but friendly. The veiled lady turned to me and held out her hand.

"I thank you, Mr. Lester, for your kindness," she said. "Come, Julie," and she moved toward the door, which Rogers hastened to open.

Mr. Hornblower nodded and passed out after them, and Godfrey and I were left alone together.

We both sat down, and for a moment neither of us spoke.

"Well!" said Godfrey, at last. "Well! what a story it would make! And I can't use it! It's a bitter reflection, Lester!"

"It would certainly shake the pillars of society," I agreed. "I'm rather shaken myself."

"So am I! I was all at sea for a while—I was dumb with astonishment when I heard you and the veiled lady talking about the secret drawer—I could see you laughing at me! I don't know the whole story yet. How did she happen to come to you?"

I told him of Hornblower's visit, of the story he told me, and of the arrangement we had made. Godfrey nodded thoughtfully when I had finished.

"The story is straight, of course,' he said. 'Hornblower would not be engaged in anything tricky. Besides, I recognized the lady, I suppose you did, too."

"Yes, I have seen pictures of her. And I admired her for putting back her veil"

"So did I. She has changed since the day of her wedding, Lester—she was a smooth-faced girl, then' Three years of life with her duke have left their mark on her!"

He fell silent, staring thoughtfully at the carpet. Then he shook himself.

"And the maid's story was most interesting,' he added. "Nevertheless, there are still a number of things which are not quite clear to me."

"'...ere is one thing I don't understand, myself," I said. "I hadn't any idea this was the right cabinet. I didn't see how it could be."

"That's it, exactly. How did it happen, when the veiled lady went to Armand & Son in Paris, that she was directed to Philip Vantine? According to his own story, he did not purchase this cabinet, he had never seen it before; it was presumably shipped him by mistake; Armand & Son cable you that it was a mistake; and yet they cite Vantine as the purchaser. There is something twisted somewhere, Lester, just where I'll try to find out."

"Which reminds me that Armand's representative hasn't been around yet. No doubt he can straighten the matter out."

"It won't do any harm to hear his story, anyway," Godfrey agreed. "Now let's have a look at that drawer."

It was standing open as we had left it, and Godfrey pushed it back into place, called my attention to the cunning way in which its outline was concealed by the inlay about it. Then he worked the spring, the handle fell into place, and he drew the drawer out again, as far as it would come, and examined it carefully.

"The fellow who devised that was a genius," he said, admiringly, pushing it back into place. "I wonder what its contents have been from the days of Madame de Montespan down to the present? Love letters, mostly, I suppose, since they are the things which need concealment most Don't you wish this drawer could tell its secrets, Lester?"

"There is one I wish it would tell, if it knows it," I said. "I wish it would tell who killed Philip Vantine. I suppose you will agree with me that our pretty theory has got a knock-out blow, this time."

"It looks that way, doesn't it?"

"There is no poisoned mechanism about that drawer—that's sure," I added.

"No, and never has been," Godfrey agreed.

"And that leaves us all at sea, doesn't it? It leaves the whole affair more mysterious than ever I can't understand it," and I sat down in my bewilderment and rubbed my head. I really felt for an instant as though I had gone mentally blind. "There is one thing sure," I added. "The killing, whatever its cause, was done out there in the ante-room, not in here."

"What makes you think that?"

"We believ that Drouet came here to get Vantine's permission to open this drawer and get the letters, no doubt representing himself as the agent of their owner"

"I think it's a pretty good guess," said Godfrey, pensively.

"Our theory was that, after being shown into the ante-room, he discovered the cabinet, tried to open the drawer, and was killed in the attempt. But it is evident enough now that there is nothing about that drawer to hurt any one.'

"Yes, that's evident, I think," Godfrey agreed

"If he had opened the drawer, then, he would have taken the letters, since there was nothing to prevent him. Since they were not taken, it follows, doesn't it, that he was killed before he had a chance at the drawer? Perhaps he never saw the cabinet. He must have been killed out there in the ante-room, a few minutes after Parks left."

"And how about Vantine " Godfrey asked.

"I don't know," I said, helplessly. 'He didn't want the letters—if he opened the drawer at all, it was merely out of curiosity to see how it worked. Only, of course, the same agency that killed Drouet, killed him. Yes—and now that I think of it, it's certain he didn't open the drawer, either."

"How do you know it's certain?"

"If he had opened the drawer," I pointed out, "and been killed in the act of opening it, it would have been found open I had thought that perhaps it closed of itself, but you see that it does not. You have to push it shut, and then snap the handle into place."

"That's true," Godfrey assented, "and it sounds pretty conclusive. If it is true of Vantine, it is also true of Drouet. The inference is, then, that neither of them opened the drawer. Well, what follows?"

"I don't know," I said, helplessly. "Nothing seems to follow."

"There is an alternative," Godfrey suggested.

"What is it?" I demanded.

"The hand that killed Drouet and Vantine may also have closed the drawer," said Godfrey, and looked at me.

"And left the letters in it?" I questioned. "Surely not!"

Two Great Progressives Quit.

W. A. White in the Emporia Gazette.

We are asked by a near-progressive who believes in fighting it out inside the party, why we sit idly by and do not protest against the rise of railroad rates from 2 to 3 cents. He intimates that the railroads are buying the Gazette's silence with advertising.

The matter does demand some explanation There are two reasons why the Gazette does not yowl and yip about the increase of railroad fares. The first and most important is that for all we know to the contrary, under the present status of facts, the rise may be just, the second is that it is not our funeral.

The election indicated pretty definitely who should walk the floor and tear his hair out about the increase in railroad rates. And a careful scrutiny of the returns fails to show much justification for the Gazette throwing any fits about what may happen in Kansas or in national politics until the next campaign At that time we shall have a full line of the newest creations in staple and fancy fits and shall throw them ad lib, and at any other old girl who gets in the way

But for the present the Gazette has a seat on the fence, watching the procession go by. These are not our obsequies. We are neither corpse, bridegroom, pallbearer nor undertaker. From time to time the Gazette will be glad to print such facts as may come out on the subject of railroad rates. Occasionally, in its well known and popular repressed and judicial manner, it may comment disinterestedly upon the showing of the facts

But if any reader expects the Gazette to go scaling up the wall like a cat in a cataclysm, now is the time to stop the paper.

To which the Kansas City Star, Colonel Nelson's paper, adds a loud "Amen" with three exclamation points attached

Translated into Iowa language these mean that Clarke and high taxes won and that it made the Kansans a bit tired.

Two Stories of Courteous Conductors Who Looked After Their Passengers.

"Once I was down in Louisiana," a traveler began, "on a little railroad that runs from Franklin to Week's island. It took five hours to go 20 miles. The most amazing thing to me was that the conductors stopped the train anywhere he was asked to, and if there were no one to meet a woman passenger with innumerable bags and the inevitable baby, he helped her across a plowed field or sent a brakeman to carry her traps to her own gate and the train waited until he came back."

"Nothing surprising about that," returned a born New Yorker The Madison avenue cars stop every day for reasons quite remote from a regular schedule. I was on a car this afternoon and a little boy dropped his mother's umbrella out of the window The conductor stopped the car and ran back a block and a half, got the umbrella, delivered it to the woman and incidentally advised her not to let her son have it again

MESMERIZED

A Poisonous Drug Still Freely Used.

Many people are brought up to believe that coffee is a necessity of life, and the strong hold that the drug, caffeine, in coffee has on the system makes it hard to loosen its grip even when one realizes its injurious effects.

A lady writes: "I had used coffee for years; it seemed one of the necessities of life. A few months ago my health, which had been slowly failing, became more impaired, and I knew that unless relief came from some source I would soon be a physical wreck.

"I was weak and nervous, had sick headaches, no ambition, and felt tired of life. My husband was also losing his health. He was troubled so much with indigestion that at times he could eat only a few mouthfuls.

"Finally we saw Postum advertised and bought a package. I followed directions for making carefully, and added cream, which turned it to the loveliest rich-looking and tasting drink I ever saw served at any table, and we have used Postum ever since.

"I gained five pounds in weight in as many weeks, and now feel well and strong in every respect. My headaches have gone, and I am a new woman. My husband's indigestion has left him, and he can now eat anything."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Mr Aulger's characterization of John Martin, the old Maryland farmer who does not think city folks in his class, ranks with the finest portravals of our theatre Denman Thompson in "The Old Homestead" and James A Herne in "Shore Acres," plays that will live forever in theatre goers' affection, are actors who with Mr Aulger have made the American play of country life the truest pictures on our stage today — At Klemme opera House Dec. 26th.

FELL OFF WINDMILL

Frank Rosendahl Took 50 Fall Tuesday and Is Not Seriously Injured

Frank Rosendahl who lives on one of the Wm. Katter farms about 4 miles north of town met with an accident Tuesday that might have easily cost him his life. During the storm that day the wire which is used to shut off the windmill became broke and Mr. Rosendahl climbed to the top of the windmill to try to stop it. The wind was very strong and he had not any more than reached the platform when the wheel hit him throwing him off to the ground a distance of nearly fifty feet. As near as the attending physicians are able to find out at this writing he did not recieve a broken bone but was unconscious until Wednesday morning and it is reasonably sure that he will recover. His many friends hope that he will enjoy a speedy recovery that he will soon be able to be out among them once more none the worse for his harrowing experience

HELD SUCCESSFUL SALE

The Short Horn sale at the Sterling Stock Farm Dec. 18th was well attended with a good crowd from a distance as well as local

While prices were not up to the average of former sales owing to the State Quarentine of Foot and Mouth Disease which kept many buyers away.

One pleasing feature of this sale was that more cattle stayed in the County than any former sale.

Chas Stiehl took four head getting Rose Jenks 2. a double Standard Polled heifer and the bargain of the sale. Gibbs Bros. were greatly pleased to see this heifer stay in the County and in the hands of Mr. Stiehl she should produce much good stock.

Mr. D Palmby of Owasa, a new buyer at the sale took eight fine good heifers, which was a credit to his judgement.

R. B. Cox, Cheney Nelson and Kuns of Forest City and Pete Ashlem of Garner were liberal buyers, Mr. Nelson is an old customer and is making good with the cattle he gets at the Sterling Stock Farm.

The 36 head sold averaged $120 per head.

Sir Jonn Jellicoe to whom it has fallen to command Britain's fleet in the supreme hour of its history has twice escaped death by a miracle. In 1880 when lieutenant on the Monarch, he volunteered to rescue the crew of a wrecked steamer off Gibraltar The boat in which he and seven others made the attempt was capsized by the heavy seas, and only after a terrific struggle for life did the gallant officer reach the shore. His second escape was from the ill-fated Victoria. Commander Jellicoe, as he then ranked was in his bunk in a high fever when the collision occured but made for his appointed station on the bridge, and when the ship went down, was towed into safe waters by a gallant midshipman

SEEKING DIVORCE AFTER 44 YEARS OF WEDDED LIFE

LeMars, Ia. Dec. 26.—After 44 years of wedded life, William Sebens, a wealthy farmer of this county, has applied for a divorce from Vinka Sebens, alleging cruel and inhuman treatment. He claims his wife unjustly accuses him of intimacy with other women and that her jealous and unreasonable temperament has wrecked his home.

Sebens recently returned from a trip to his old home in Germany, and his wife accused him of scaring up a flirtation on board the boat. He claims it was all pure delusion on her part.

GOVERNOR CLARKE DENIES OUTLINED ASPIRATIONS

Des Moines, Ia. Dec. 26.—In a statement made public last night Governor Clarke announced that he has no future political plans. An article in the Register & Leader said that it was known that the governor intends to be a candidate for a third term as governor and, following that, run for United States senator in 1918, as Senator Kenyon expects to retire from public life at that time.

The article was denounced by Governor Clarke as false. His statement follows

"The article in the Register & Leader has in it no more semblance of truth than that in conversation the list of probable candidates for governor has been mentioned and the informant had no further foundation for his statements It says I announced my 'plans.' I have no 'plans' politically I never spoke to any man at any time of having intentions of running again for governor I never spoke to any man of becoming a candidate for senator or of Senator Kenyon's intentions. I never heard it suggested by anybody that he would not be a candidate for reelection

"The article says 'No confirmation of this information has yet been obtained from the governor himself' No effort was made to confirm it. Nothing was said to me on the subject The story was published without even a suggestion to me at any time with reference to anything contained in it. I should just as soon be accused of any other reprehensible and detestable thing as to be accused of holding one office as a 'stepping stone to another or of 'planning' for another while holding it and this is in effect what this story does This thing I have denounced in public speeches in Iowa, and I condemn it now Such a course is a betrayal of the trust and confidence reposed in an official by the people when they elect him They elect him for the best service he can give them in the particular office, and not to use it for maneuvering and planning and scheming for another Such a course will destroy to a large extent the effectiveness of the public service of any man I am not even thinking of any office in the future much less talking about it I have enough to do in trying to render the best service I can as the days go by and then I cannot be reached by any ambitions ideals of what it ought to be I am free to say that I want the good opinion of the people of Iowa So the story as was published can fill them with nothing but disgust If they believe it it will shatter whatever confidence and faith they may have in me and it ought to"

London Dec 26 —Now that Switzerland has raised the point that in flying over her territory British aviators who dropped bombs on the Zeppelin sheds at Friedrichshafen violated Swiss neutrality British lawyers have raised the even more novel question as to whether the recognition of air sovereignty logically involves the prohibition of wireless communications by nations at war

COURT DECISION HAS STIRRED WET FORCES; ACTIVITIES RENEWED

Rule Now Established For Defining Proper Signatures on Petitions.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 26.—The supreme court of Iowa has stirred up interest in every community in the state by its recent saloon decisions, in which Waterloo was doomed to remain dry because of the insufficiency of its petition. For the same reason it was held that the saloons of Valley Junction are operating without cause because of an insufficient petition.

In retaliation the wets of Waterloo are already planning to circulate a new petition. The Valley Junction saloonists are going to operate under the 30-day clause pending an appeal.

The decision for one thing establishes for all time the rules regarding proper signatures on a petition. In regard to middle names the decision has the following to say.

> Where the given name is written, then the middle name or letter may be disregarded in identifying the individual, and where only a letter or letters precede the surname, such letter or letters, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, are to be treated as the given or proper name

As to correctness in spelling the court has the following to say.

> It should be added that differences in spelling are of no consequence if this makes no difference in the sound when correctly pronounced

One of the most important paragraphs is as follows

> The signing of a name of another to any statement of consent provided for in the section of this chapter relating to mulct tax shall be punishable as forgery, and every statement shall be accompanied by the affidavit of some reputable person showing that these persons personally witnessed the signing of each name thereon, and any false statement on such affidavit shall be punishable as perjury.

Speaking of signatures of dead men on petitions, the court says that if the names were signed by the persons in question during the 30 days' period to filing with the county auditor and they died afterward, the names must be counted

WOULD MAKE IOWA GUARD UNIT OF SERVICE ARMY

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 26.—Radical changes in the Iowa National Guard to strengthen its military power by making it a tactical unit, was recommended by Adjt. Gen Guy E. Logan in his biennial report In addition to organization of the guard into a fighting unit, General Logan provides for a reserve system The Iowa guard at present consists of four regiments required under regulations of the United States army General Logan would organize the following Brigade headquarters with the proper staff officers.

One brigade of infantry, to consist of three regiments.

One squadron of cavalry

Two batteries of field artillery

One company of engineers.

One company of signal corps

One fied hospital

One ambulance company

These changes would require the disbandment of one regiment of infantry and the organization of one battery of artillery four troops of cavalry, one company of engineers, one company of signal corps and one ambulance company The number of enlisted men and officers would be approximately the same as at present, or 3,700. To get reserves General Logan proposes to increase the term of enlistment from three years to five years, the first three to be under the colors and the last two as reserves After the first three years the active reserve strength would be 6,000 men.

BIG INCREASE URGED FOR SUPPORT OF IOWA COLLEGES

Des Moines, Ia Dec 26 —An increase of approximately $1,000,000 for the support of state educational institutions in the next two years was recommended in the biennial report of the state board of education filed with Gov George W. Clarke The cost to the state for the period covered by the report was $3,662 100 so if the Thirty-sixth general assembly grants the additional amounts requested the expenditures for the next two years will run close to the $5,000 000 mark

The board also recommends the renewal of the millage tax for a permanent building fund, but would lower the levy slightly on account of the increased valuation of property It proposes that the levy for the state university and agricultural college be cut from one-fifth of a mill to three-twentieths, and the State Teachers' college from one-tenth to one-twentieth mill. Request is made that the first levy for this fund be made in 1917 and for four years thereafter

The largest increase in appropriations is asked for the institution at Ames, which, the board says, will require an addition of $229,625 annually for maintenance and $84 550 in specials. The state university comes second with provision for an additional appropriation of $157,000 and an increase of $69 500 in specials The recommendation for the State Teachers' college requests $66,200 increase for support and $8,300 in specials

CUBAN ROMANCE FINALLY HAS HAPPY CULMINATION

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Dec 24 —A romantic courtship which the wealthy parents of the bride used every effort to prevent, terminated at Marion last evening when Miss Natividad Custin, daughter of a wealthy piano dealer at Havana Cuba, and Frank Navarro son of an attorney in the same city were married. The ceremony was performed by Rev C F Ensign, a Presbyterian minister at Marion, and was witnessed by Chief of Police Burgin and Detective McGuire of this city who are largely responsible for the successful culmination of the romance The couple will leave within a few days for Havana where Navarro is employed by the government.

Miss Custin accompanied by her brother and sister and a chaperone, was sent to Cedar Rapids by her father several months ago in order to get her away from Navarro. Navarro learned that she was here however, and when it was learned that he was coming to Cedar Rapids the girl was virtually kept a prisoner by her sister and brother When Navarro arrived he was told his sweetheart had changed her mind and left for New York, and, as he cannot speak English he was made to believe that he would be arrested if he remained in Cedar Rapids Miss Custin slipped away from the house and was given protection by the chief of police and when Navarro reached Havana he was informed as to the true circumstances and left again for Cedar Rapids.

IOWA HELPS IN CONTEST AGAINST CONCRETE PATENTS

Des Moines, Ia Dec 24 —Henry E Sampson, assistant attorney general, returned to the statehouse yesterday from a week's trip to New York, where he was taking evidence in the bridge patent cases now pending in the Polk county district court The state is helping to defend a Des Moines contractor who was accused of infringing on cement bridge patents owned by Daniel B Luten of Indianapolis, Ind. The defense is that the methods patented by Luten were in general use before the patents were secured

Mr Sampson said he obtained the testimony of 10 prominent eastern engineers to the effect that the methods were in general use before patented.

IDA COUNTY PETITION IS NOW BELOW REQUIREMENT

Ida Grove, Ia., Dec 23.—Unless the higher courts change the count, Ida county probably will be without saloons after December 28, 1915.

The drys filed 110 withdraways to the consent petition filed last week which had only a margin of 58 names. It is expected that the county supervisors, when they canvas the petition next week, will still further increase the shortage of names by rejecting a number

Ida county now has one saloon in each of the towns of Ida Grove, Holstein, Battle Creek, Galva and Arthur

IMPERIAL DIET OF JAPAN DISSOLVED

Emperor Decides to Act When House of Representatives Refuses to Adopt Budget For 1915.

Tokio, Dec. 26.—The imperial diet was dissolved today.

Considerable opposition developed in the house of representatives to the budget for 1915, which showed an estimated expenditure of 556,000,000 yen ($278,000,000) and a decrease of the revenues of $40,500,000. Recent dispatches from Tokio have stated that there was good reason to believe that unless the house adopted the budget it would be dissolved by the emperor. The Merchant's association and Baron Shibusawa, president of the American-Japanese association and Buei Nakano president of the Tokia chamber of commerce took steps a few days ago to urge the diet and cabinet to reach a compromies in the hope of preventing dissolution of the house or collapse of the ministry. They urged that a crisis in time of war would create an unfavorable impression abroad. The opposition leaders declared that proposals for increases in the army would be rejected.

The house of representatives rejected the army expansion measures proposed by the government. This led to the dissolution of the house.

NEGRO SEGREGATION ORDINANCES UPHELD

Court Holds City Has Right to Restrict Blacks to Certain Localities.

Louisville, Ky., Dec. 26.—Segregation of the 40,000 negroes in Louisville is the rightful exercise of a policy power of the state, according to an opinion handed down in the criminal court here by Judge James P. Gregory. It violates neither the Fourteenth amendment, nor the Kentucky bill of rights, the court held.

The city council passed a segregation ordinance last May. Arthur Harris, a negro, ignored its provisions. He was arrested, fined in police court and appealed. His counsel endeavored to show his constitutional rights had been abridged

FRENCH RED PANTS MUST GO, DECISION

At Last Lurid Legged Uniforms Have Been Abolished For All Time.

Paris, Dec 26.—The success of the new bluish gray infantry uniform, supplied to men who become eligible to service this year sounds the death knell of the red pantaloon

The red pantaloons were long in passing The heroic associations of their 85 years' reign made a change seem a sort of sacrilege, and in spite of the lessons of the Transvaal, the army clung fondly to the old red, immortalized on so many fields of battle and familiarized to the world by Detaille and other military painters.

Napoleon I was opposed to red [illegible] the infantry The adoption of color must be credited to Vicomte [illegible] Vaux minister of war in 1829, [illegible] was his sole contribution to military history.

During the second empire a proposed change to blue was defeated by the minister of agriculture, who objected that the change would ruin a thriving industry in the department of Vaucluse which furnished the "madder" with which the cloth was dyed

After the Transvaal campaign, the question came up again and the minister of war appointed a commission to examine it. Nothing developed, and the Japanese-Russian war broke out and the question being agitated again, the minister of war appointed another commission

After the Balkan war during which the Bulgarian officers found it expedient to tear off the red trimming of their cloaks, a third commission was appointed

In 1903 the Boer colors were most favored In 1905 a sort of violet blue had more partisans. In 1910 grayish green was preferred and specimen uniforms of this color designed by Detaille were worn by selected companies at the maneuvers

In the meantime commercial war had bested the industry of the department of Vaucluse and the coloring matter for the French infantry pantaloons was made in Germany. No obstacle remained but official routine had tangled the question in so much red tape that the outbreak of the war found the army still in the conspicuous red trousers

"The celebration of Christmas in France is in closest contact with the enemy Such a celebration none of us is likely to forget I wish all members of my brave army the blessing of God until we have with the good luck of a dutiful soldier established a peace of which we and our beloved fatherland may be proud.

"My grandfather, Crown Prince Frederick William, on Christmas, 1870, sent to every man of his brave army, your fathers and grandfathers, a pipe, with his picture. I do the same. WASHINGTON ABOLISHES EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES

Seattle Wash., Dec 26 --The law abolishing employment agencies, adopted by the voters of Washington last month, was declared valid yesterday in a decision handed down by Judge William B. Dilbert, of the United States court of appeals, and District Judge Neterer. District Judge Cushman will file a dissenting opinion. Counsel representing the employment agencies had attacked the constitutionality of the law.

"The public welfare is the determining factor," says the opinion, "and the expressed conclusion of the electors of the state is that the interest of the public generally requires the regulation provided by the act and is conclusive upon the court."

The Hunts' Happy Day

A NEW YEAR STORY.

By Ernest Gilmore.

From Christian Intelligencer.

It was a New Year's day. There had been a big storm and although the wind had spent its force the snow fell steadily.

"Regular winter weather and no mistake about it," observed Mr. Richard Hunt, as he came in rather noisily, stamping the snow from his boots, "but I like it. So cold and bracing."

Mrs. Hunt, who was sitting near an open fire, laughed.

"I like the house best such a day as this," she said, shivering a little. "I don't believe I'd be willing to face the cold, even for the sake of the bracing."

"I think I heard you say you were going to see old Mrs. Helfer today," Mr. Hunt remarked, as he seated himself comfortably. "Have you changed your mind?"

'Yes, I've changed my mind. I did tell you that I was going to see her, but I'll have to wait until some other day. Poor old Mrs. Helfer'"

"Is she sick?"

"Yes."

"And I suppose she's very lonely since her daughter died?"

"Yes."

"I shouldn't wonder if she has a continual struggle to make both ends meet since that disastrous bank failure?"

"I don't believe she does make the ends meet. I feel very sorry for her."

"But not quite sorry enough for you to go and see her as you intended to do today?" teasingly

"Some other day will do as well—will it not?" she questioned, wondering at his persistence

"Not if she needs you today Come, get ou your wraps and I'll go with you."

"Why, Richard Hunt, what's got into you? I thought you never liked to go calling, especially at such places."

"You thought right, my dear," smiling pleasantly, "but can you tell me what there is to prevent my turning over a new leaf on New Year's day?"

She laughed

'It would be a good idea, she said.

'Well, then, encourage me in it"

"So I will."

She arose at once and was soon ready to face the storm with a basket on her arm

"What's in it?" Mr Hunt asked, as he relieved his wife of the basket

"Sugar and spice and everything nice,' she quoted.

A little maid opened the door when they reached Mrs. Helfer's. To Mrs Hunt's questio as to how the latter was the child answered

"She's not very well ma am,' and then, lowering her voice to a confidential whisper, "I guess she's awful lonesome She's bin crying—I saw her"

The weary old face brightened when little Polly led the callers in, but both Mr and Mrs. Hunt were observant and read "between the lines' that the dear old lady was not only sorrowful but troubled

"I wish you a Happy New Year," said Mrs Hunt, taking the thin old hands in a close grasp.

'Happy New Year' Mr Hunt echoed, his greeting as cordial as his wife s.

"Thank you,' responded the old lady warmly, "and I wish you both a Happy New Year"

"We had a fine turkey for dinner today," said Mr Hunt, "and I rather think my wife brought you a piece,' uncovering the basket "Yes, sure enough here it is'"

"Now, Dick," said his wife, "you've made your speech, sit down, please"

He sat down with a sigh, pretending to feel hurt. He looked so comical that Mrs. Helfer's spirits arose so far that she laughed

"I am greatly obliged to you both for remembering me,' she said "I'm going to confess that I've been longing for some turkey for a week and now here it is."

The trio chatted pleasantly for a little while and then Mr Hunt arose suddenly

"I've thought of an errand or two," he said. "You two can have the floor to yourselves until I return I'll not be gone long' He met the small maid in the hall.

"Polly," he said, "I don't want to pry into Mrs Helfer's affairs, but I'm really anxious to know if she has everything she needs. She's an old friend, you know, and a friend of my mother's. Does she need anything, Polly?"

"Yes, sir, 'deed she do, but she didn't say so. She ain't no complainer—that's what she ain't. She ain't had no coffee since—since—'

"Go on, Polly, talk fast Since when?"

"Since her money took wings an' flew I dunno where it flew to, but that's what someone said—it flew, an' she don't hev butter no more I wanted to tell the grocer's boy we was out, but Mrs Helfer she say, 'No, not now, Polly, some other time.'"

"It doesn't seem hardly warm enough in the house, Polly Do you have plenty of coal?"

"That's what we don't, sir" she said, with decision "We'm jess about out. I guess by to-morrer 't'll be all gone Miss Helfer's a'most a shakin' with cold sometimes. She had two shawls aroun' her when you rung the bell, but she took 'em off."

Mr Hunt had heard enough—quite enough

"Poor, dear old soul" he said to himself, as he went out on his ministering journey

He kept his promise—he was not gone long He put a bunch of bright carnations into the old lady's hand and then he said to his wife smilingly that it was time to "move on"

Polly let them out of the front door Returning to the room, she found the old lady in a rapture of joy There were tears in her eyes, but she was smiling The fragrant, rosy carnations were still in her hand. On a low chair besire her was the basket the Hunts had brought

"Look, Polly," she cried, in a glee that was like a child's.

And Polly looked and laughed What she saw was a plate of sliced turkey, dainty biscuit, a print of butter, a mince pie, a frosted plum cake, oranges, grapes, nuts, raisins and candy

"Oh, my!" cried Polly, "what a fine New Year we do be havin' after all!"

Presently the grocer's boy delivered a heavily filled basket and a message.

"Tell yer missus Buck Bowers sed he'd be here tomorrer morning at 8 o'clock sure"

"What for?" asked the amazed Polly

"What for?" mockingly "Why, to bring the load o' coal of course."

"Oh, my gracious' I b'lieve there's fairies around'—I do so!" and after closing the door on the grocer's boy Polly felt inclined to stand on her head by way of celebrating the delightful new state of things.

She left the basket standing in the hall, as it was too heavy for her to attempt to carry, but she could smell the coffee and took that package with her, also two or three more

"Oh, Miss Helfer, she exclaimed, "an other big basket's come, an' it's jes' full o' everything. Here's coffee fer you—an' tea—an' sugar. An' tomorrer ther's a big load o' coal a-comin'"

"Polly!'

"Yes, mum

"What does it mean—all that great basket of things you're telling about and the coal coming tomorrow?"

"I dunno"

"But who sent the groceries? Who is going to send the coal?"

Polly looked mystified She stood boring the toe of her old shoe into the rug. Suddenly a light broke over her face.

"I guess it's the Lord, ma'am. You sed the Lord 'ud provide—I heard you—an' He's done it."

The old lady folded her hands.

"Bless the Lord, oh, my soul!" she said, fervently

"I've thought of something, Miss Helfer," Polly suddenly broke out, excitedly "I guess Mr Richard Hunt s a-bin helpin the Lord."

The old lady smiled

"We have the same thoughts about it, Polly, you and I," she said.

"Don't be waiting till the sorrow
All has passed away,
Don't be waiting till tomorrow,
Smile a bit today.
When the clouds all dull and dreary
Hang about the earth,
That is when a greeting cheery
Counts for what it's worth."

A GOOD BEGINNING FOR THE YEAR.

I believe in beginning the New Year well,' observed young Mr Talkington, as he carved the turkey, I am not superstitious, but—"

"Yes," said his wife, demurely, "I remember how well we began it last year."

"You were to start on a trip that day, weren't you?" queried a guest.

"Yes, and the train, a new one just put on, left at 9:25. Ned said we should arise at five, thus beginning the New Year well and catching the train comfortably He ordered a cab for 6:30, so it would reach the house at eight; he did this over night and also wound up the cook's alarm clock Ned duly waked me the next morning

"With difficulty, dear."

"You waked me, anyhow, and your voice sounded like the dentist's saying, 'Step this way please' We hadn't heard the cook go down, and going to investigate I found her asleep. She said the alarm had gone off at 2 15, and she'd been up every half hour since to see if it was five The volcano was awake then'"

"Oh!"

"When I returned, Ned pointed to the clock on the mantel and said it was 5:17, and we were late"

"Well?"

"Nothing—only that clock was a wedding present and so handsome that nobody ever expected it to keep time Investigation proved it was just four, and we went back to bed for an hour I was dreaming that the cook's New Year's resolve was that she would never leave me, when an awful noise waked me. The cook called that it was eight, and as breakfast had been ready three hours she thought she'd better call us!"

"But did you reach the station in time?"

"Yes In my haste I did my hair with three pins and Ned put on his dress coat and odd shoes—we are both forgetful, you know We scalded our throats with hot coffee and choked ourselves with overdone steak. The cabman, who had arrived at 6 30 sharp, demanded full pay for the time he had waited, else he'd deduct from the number of Ned's useful eyes'"

'Dreadful'" chorused the guests.

While he did this the cook gave warning and told me that the catch on the back cellar window was loose

"We were in time. To Ned's feverish inquiries the ticket agent calmly responded 'Oh, yes, we had plenty of time—24 hours and 29 minutes'"

"Why how on earth could that happen?"

"The train, as I said, was a new one, put on for the first time on New Year's day, and—and the calendar to which the agent pointed told us that today was December 31'"

FATTENING OYSTERS.

How the United States Government Helps the Bivalves Grow.

From Country Life in America

The oyster eating public is already familiar with the process of fattening adopted by some unscrupulous dealers in oysters This consists merely in throwing the oysters into fresh water, which they absorb in large quantities, and become plump The flavor is thereby injured and there is danger of infecting the oysters with typhoid fever At Lynnhaven, Va., the United States bureau of fisheries has been working for several years on a plan to establish an artificial fattening bed for oysters. The oyster lives chiefly on diatoms and other microscopic marine plants. These plants require for their growth a large supply of inorganic salts in the water The fattening bed must be in shallow water so as to have a relatively high temperature A wall is maintained around the fattening ground so as to retain the fertilizer and diatoms

Even after the diatoms have multiplied enormously the oysters receive no benefit from them unless a current is maintained in the water to carry the food to the oysters. Salt water is pumped in to prevent the fattening beds from becoming too fresh, and a little lime is added to the water to prevent the growth of algae and other plants which would give a disagreeable flavor to the oyster Too much lime, on the other hand, will destroy the food plants of the oyster. The process seems somewhat complicated, but it has been demonstrated to be feasible and to yield fine results in th number and quality of the oysters.

"Charley, dear," said young Mrs. Torkins, "I am sometimes sorry that Christmas does not come on the 28th of the month instead of the 25th"

"I don't see why"

"I have observed in going through the shops that so many things are cheaper on the 27th than they are on the 24th."

Mrs. Gardner Crane tells this about an old southern darky who was arguing with his pastor about the story of "Dan el in the lions' den" in the bible

"Duz yuh means ter tole me thet Dan'el wah trowed 'nter the lions' den an' they never teched him?" said the old man.

THE MESSAGE OF THE BELLS

A New Year Story.

BY ELIZABETH PRICE.

Sun clouds scudded gustily across the sky, hiding the peaceful face of the moon, whose radiance touched the edges of her somber veil with a fringe of silver. The great gray tower lifted its head far aloft in the midnight stillness, and the wind moaned around its rough hewn corner a requiem for the dying year. Within the tower sat the old bellringer, waiting for the stroke of twelve from the clock, and, as he waited, his thoughts drifted back to the years long buried in the dimness of the past—the years when his floating white hair had been crisp and black, when his long slender fingers were strong and supple and struck from the midnight chimes music of entrancing beauty

Ah! life had been worth the living in those far-off happy days. People had predicted a wonderful future for him and in spite of the poverty that retarded his progress, and a great ambition possessed him. Obstacles were pushed aside, difficulties overcome, as he worked by day and studied by night, and the bells in the tower spoke marvelous things to the many who listened, and who, listening, praised. Their praise was sweet, but Elspeth's was sweeter, and, when one New Year's eve, he told her of his love and won her promise to be his own, his heart beat with a rapture that thrilled through the chimes that night till listeners wondered and children came back from dreamland to hear

Oh, happy memory' Oh long ago' It was on another night like this that Ruprecht was born and the joy which beamed from the pale young mother's face was reflected in his own, as he left her baby on her bosom and rushed to the bell tower to make his chimes paen of praise to the Father who had filled his life with blessing How they loved him—that baby—their only one—their all! How he and Elspeth had watched each new development—how proudly guided the first tottering step, how carefully repeated the first lisping word! How joyfully they trained and taught him, while the father, too busy in his struggle for their maintenance to realize his great ambition transferred it uncomplainingly from his own future to that of his son' Nor had their hopes been vain The boy studied—improving every opportunity with untiring zeal, until at last the great organ in the cathedral below thundered its glorious music responsive to the touch of the boyish fingers People thronged to hear Ruprecht's services were demanded elsewhere brilliant prospects opened before him and the inevitable separation drew near

New Year's eve' How many anniversaries this shadowy hour held! The boy bade them goodby while Elspeth clung to him and sobbed, and her husband rushed away to tell the chimes his agony as he had poured into them his joy As he sat waiting even as now, a step came up the stair, and some one entered the belfry chamber, and the voice he loved said tenderly

Mein Vater, let me play the chimes tonight I will leave with them a message to comfort you when you are sad —a message for you and the mother, too.

"When I hear it in the far-off land it will be my mother's voice that sings to me, and when you play it mein Vater, it will say to you, 'Ruprecht loves me' Then you will pray 'God watch over my boy and keep him safe for me,' and the All-Father will hear'

When Ruprecht struck the massive keys it was the simple old Pleyel's hymn he played, but he lent his beautiful voice to the clangor of the bells and sang his mother's favorite words

"Children of the Heavenly King
As ye journey sweetly sing.
Sing your Saviour's worthy praise
Glorious in His works and ways."

A moment later he was gone. The years had been many and long since then, but no tidings ever came, and Elspeth's hair grew white before the look of expectancy in her dear eyes, changed to the calmness of resignation. He was dead of course They knew now that it must be so, though they had not given up hope till they had left the old home and followed their wanderer to the new country They had heard of the wrecked ship, to be sure, but hope dies hard Perhaps if they had been patient—had stayed on amid the scenes of his childhood—he might have come back to them, but how could they be patient when the world was so wide, and half of it lay between them and the land that had called their child. They were only waiting now—he and Elspeth—for the summons which should call them to the happy reunion in a home where there would be no sad goodbys, where music knows no minor, and hearts forget how to ache

The first stroke of midnight sounded and an instant later the bells pealed forth, while the old man sang with trembling lips and voice that no one heard but God—as he had sung every New Year since that one

"Children of the Heavenly King
As ye journey sweetly sing,
Sing your Saviour's worthy praise,
Glorious in His works and ways."

Then, as the last reluctant echo died away, he stumbled down the narrow stairs toward home and Elspeth.

Not far from the belltower stood mansion, where a great throng had assembled to watch the old year out and the new year in. Silken draperies rustled, jewels gleamed, music rippled on the perfumed air, and happy voices rang sweet and high. But every sound was silenced, and bright eyes grew dim in the flood of melody which suddenly poured about the gay throng. They crowded toward the music room, trying to catch a glimpse of the player. Those who were near saw a slender man, with fair curling hair brushed back from a brow as pure as a woman's The face was pale and the eyes sad, but the sensitive mouth displayed an expression of rare sweetness and beauty quietly he sat before the grand piano, playing without the slightest effort such masterful music as had hushed the listeners to awe-struck silence.

"Who is he?" was the question passed from one to another when at last the cessation of the music broke the spell

'He is a friend of father's," their hostess told them. "Father met him abroad some years ago, and by helping him in a search for some missing friends, won his heart. The search was not successful, but that did not seem to lessen Professor Von Bulow's gratitude, and they have corresponded in a desultory way ever since. Father invited him here for the holidays this year, but he declined the invitation, then this evening suddenly and unexpectedly appeared. These great musicians are always eccentric, you know. I heard him tell father that this is an anniversary he doesn't like to spend alone. Some love story probably. No, he isn't married. He spends his entire time with his wonderful music. That is really all know about him." With that the interested guests were forced to be content, for the player had vanished from among them as suddenly as he appeared, and soon the gayety resumed its sway."

At 11 o'clock the hostess seated her guests in a circle, saying: "Now we will turn down the lights and tell ghost stories till midnight. Everybody must contribute something. The more gruesome and harrowing the better," she added laughingly. The young people fell in with the spirit of fun, and ghosts walked, hobgoblins shrieked and ghouls moaned, till the more timid begged for mercy.

It was almost 12 o'clock when a new voice suddenly broke into a momentary pause. Everyone looked up to see the musician standing in the door.

"My friends," he said, "my story is not of the spirits of the unseen world—it is of a lad in the far-away fatherland, who once, on a night like this, left home and friends and went out into the wide world, with music as the priestess who presided at the altar, where burned the fires of his ambition. So brightly did this fire burn that its glow hid the quieter emotions which lingered in the shadow, and father and mother and home were left behind. The youth had not dreamed of the pain of broken ties—but he afterward learned it all.

"Shipwrecked, a weary sickness and deliverance, miscarried letter returned to its writer long afterward—all these came between the lad and his loved ones, and when at last, overcome by the deadly 'heimweh,' he turned toward home, he found it empty—the loved ones gone, while the chimes in the tower which the father had played ever since the lad had lived, responded sadly to the touch of strange, unfriendly hands.

"With breaking heart the lad turned back to the country of his adoption, hoping, against hope, to find the dear ones who had followed him there during his long silence The years have passed and the lad is a man, but the father and the mother he has not found, nor does he expect to greet them again until the new year of heaven dawns for him, as he believes it has already dawned for them. So, when the midnight comes I play each New Year's eve as I—as the lad played on that last night long ago—my message to my dear ones."

The clock on the mantel warned for 12, and the musician turned to the piano and played again simply and lovingly Pleyel's hymn, singing as in the long ago the beautiful words his mother loved.

As the last note died away in the quiet room the tower clock began to strike, but was drowned by the music of the chimes. A thrill ran through the hushed circle as they recognized the strain they had just heard, but the musician arose with a mighty cry. "Mein Vater!" and ran out into the night, guided by the music of the bells.

When the old bell ringer shut the door he could not see, for the tears that blinded him, the hurrying figure on the pavement A moment later he was gathered close to the heart that had yearned for him through all the space of silence and loneliness, and together, in the opening of the glad New Year, they went out from the shadow of the bell tower, home to Elspeth, whose mother heart came near to bursting, with the joy of a son's home coming

THEIR NEW YEAR'S DINNER.

So you went to Isabel's New Year's dinner?" said the brunette "Lucky you' Tom and I dine with his mother on the first day of each year, listening to a discourse on economy which lasts from oysters to coffee"

"Knowing that your bills will be in the next morning's mail, too," cried the blonde. "Yes, we accepted Isabel's invitation, and—"

"How do you like Isabel s new dress? Is it as cold as—"

"Her reception of a tardy guest? Not quite. I was ready at only ten minutes after the last moment at which we could safely start—and if that is not being punctual, I'd like to know what is' 'Eleven sharp Jack called to the driver, and then I looked up to see —Isabel's old house'"

"When the dinner was given to display the new one?"

"Exactly. After running a block through the snow in his thin shoes and nearly being arrested as an escaping thief, Jack got the driver to return. Once inside, he declared I hadn't told him Isabel had moved."

"Because he had kept on reading his paper while you told him about it?"

"Yes. I had even told him how the bathroom was tiled But, dear, I had forgotten whether the new number was 250 or 2550."

"What on earth—"

"Jack threatened to go home and get dinner on the chafing dish—the cook had a holiday. Then I remembered thoughtfully writing out the address while Mae and I discussed that new dressmaker, and putting it in Jack's waistcoat pocket, because I am so forgetful."

"How thoughtful'

"Jack gave the slip to the driver and promised him something awful to drive fast."

"Then your troubles were ended?"

"N—no. I had written down the address of the new dressmaker, instead of Isabel's."

"And you were no better off than before?"

"Worse. Jack's language was awful. I said we could just drive along the avenue until we came to the house, which I would recognize immediately."

"So—"

"He said we were invited to dinner, not to breakfast. Then he asked the driver if he happened to know where Mrs. De Style lived."

"Nonsense. He—"

"He knew. It was about six blocks from our house. Stupid of Jack not to have asked sooner. And he seemed to think the whole affair my fault'"

"Well, you reached Isabel's after all."

"Ye-es, in time for the salad. And—and I really should not like to repeat the things our hostess said when she had a chance to speak to me alone"

Mrs. Gould's Splendor.

From the New York Press.

Rivalry of the women of the "650" in the wearing of gorgeous evening wraps has gone so far that each new "creation" seems to literally outshine all former triumphs of the dressmakers. Mrs. George Gould seems for the moment to hold the prize. She appeared the other evening in a restaurant, the name of which has been the synoym for millionaires' patronage for years, wearing over her shoulders a wrap so gorgeous that it might have been envied by Solomon himself. It was of the finest w te cloth and hung in curious artistic draped folds, somewhat Grecian effect. The enormous sleeves were chiffon cut all in one piece, but cleverly manipulated to produce the semblance of a trio of puffs. The yoke was of duchess lace, which also formed an underfacing down both sides, the ermine lining showing only when the wrap was thrown back. It was finished with curiously twisted white silk cord and seed pearls.

A CLERK OBJECTS TO RECENT ARTICLE BY OUR "OBSEVER"

Editor's Note:—This week we are omitting Observer's article to give space to an answer to one of them printed a few weeks ago—the one in which a clerk was censored. We cannot attempt to print an answer to every one of Observer's articles, but we shall give space to the following, written by a clerk:

If "Observer" ever worked behind a counter in a retail store, he would know what clerks have to contend with. How we do appreciate waiting on a real lady or gentleman, gladly showing them our goods and giving such advice as we can. But the people who are so sociable on the streets and in public gatherings are, for the most part, different when they approach an employe behind a counter We clerks are human and feel entitled to the same courteous treatment from our customers that they expect from us.

"Observer" mistakes in calling us fools and jellyfishes because we perhaps wear better clothes than he—or she. He or she should remember we have to appear neat and clean. Our employers demand it—and if we did not, "Observer" no doubt would quickly find fault with what he would call slovenness.

I have no idea who "Observer" is, but his article sounds to me like coming from one who is glad to find an excuse for going out of town to buy. If he dislikes any certain clerk in town, that is no reason for his going away to buy, or even boycotting the store in which that particular clerk works The employer will be glad to wait on him Surely "Observer" doesn't stay away from church and the lodges, just because there may be some one in either whom he does not like.

Forget your little "grievance," Mr "Observer", give that same clerk half a chance treat him with the treatment you expect and I feel sure you will find him more human than you have imagined

JANUARY

January this year opens and closes with full moons, and in all probability a dozen more silly, sentimental, popular songs will be written about them. We never could see where anyone could find inspiration in a January moon But then one doesn't need inspiration to write a popular song It takes nerve Most of them sound like the writer had been fuller than the moon he was describing

The month has also been strong for bringing popular people into the world. Among January's products have been Mary Ellen Wilkins, John Hancock, Benjamin Franklin, Daniel Webster, Thomas Paine, Alexander Hamilton, and a bunch of others who never learned the value of printers' ink and so lived and died unknown outside of their own township

January also gave birth to the parcel post system a couple of years ago since which time we have learned that express companies are not the only destroyers of private property And there's the postal savings system, too, celebrating its fourth anniversary this January, but there's no many of us that could withdraw our entire account and buy a postage stamp with it

With firm determination, we resolve to start a clean, new leaf leave off all habits that are wrong and try to rid the world of grief. With shining face and lightened tread, we enter into life anew, and things go well until the mails remind us of "Accounts Now Due". It seems we owe most everyone, and though some owe us quite a bit, it doesn't em they have resolved to come around and settle it.

HOME-MADE CANDIES

Walnut Creams—Ingredients are two cupfuls of sugar, one-half cupful of water, a pinch of cream tartar, one cupful of chopped black walnut meats and one teaspoonful of vanilla extract. Without stirring the mixture boil the sugar, water and cream of tartar together until it forms a soft ball when tried in cold. Beat until it becomes white and creamy water. Take from the stove and set in a basin of cold water for three minutes. Then add the vanilla and the chopped nut meats. Pour into buttered pans and mark into squares.

Cocoanut Creams—Two pounds of granulated sugar, moistened with the milk of one medium-sized cocoanut. Boil together until heavy thread will spin from spoon to spoon. Take from fire and beat until it begins to turn white Put in grated cocoanut. Drop in little flat cakes on well buttered pan.

Brown Cream Taffy—To two pounds of brown sugar add one teaspoon of vinegar, butter size of egg and one-half cup of water.

Boil all together until it is hard when a little is dropped in cold water; add four drops of extract of orange, pour onto well greased pan; when cool enough to handle pull until it is creamy.

Chocolate Mints—Knead fondant until soft and smooth, adding either peppermint or wintergreen. Form into watershaped pieces and dip in melted chocolate.

Candy "Don'ts"

Do not scrape the sauce pan when turning out fudge or fondant. This will cause the candy to grain.

Don't use gray granite pans to boil candy. Use white lined pans as crystals as well as scorch shows on white more quickly.

Don't begin making fondant with an entire recipe. Use half or quarter the given amount until you are sure you can succeed.

Don't set candy in a refrigerator to cool; put it in a cool dry place in current of air.

Don't keep candy in open receptacle. Air tight boxes are the proper thing.

Don't throw away a syrup that has boiled past the desired stage; add a little water and boil up again.

THE WRONG MAN

By [illegible]

Copyright, 1914, by Associated Literary Press

I was at Stockholm simply as a tourist and sightseer and I was all alone. I had no idea of meeting any one I knew, and a surprise awaited me on the first night of my arrival when a man whom I had [illegible] I Po- imbrie edged along to me on the veranda of the hotel as I smoked my cigar and said

"You are discretion itself Mr Greiling You have registered under another name How were matters in London when you left?"

"I don't exactly understand you," I replied as I looked him over and made sure that we had never met before.

"The others will be here inside of two days, and we will have a meeting I have been here three days, and I find nothing to alarm me I trust matters in London are all right?"

"As far as I know," I replied as I returned his card and wondered whether he was trying to cheek me or had really mistaken me for somebody else.

Three hours later as I retired to my room the stolid faced and wooden headed waiter who carried my light hung about in a queer way after setting the candle down, and I finally gave him a small coin and waved him out. Instead of going he whispered to me:

"I wish to warn you! Strange men have been here for a week. I think they are waiting for you!"

Next morning at breakfast the same man waited on me I had a little table by myself, and while bringing my dishes the waiter whispered in my ear:

"The two strange men are at the fourth table I am sure they are Russian spies and will watch you!"

Now I had the key to the mystery. There was some sort of conspiracy on foot, probably against the peace of the czar, and the conspirators were to meet at Stockholm.

For the next two days I was closely shadowed After the first day of this spy business the same stolid faced waiter slipped into my room with pale face and whisperingly exclaimed:

"Those spies are following you everywhere! For God's sake be careful!"

"See here, Hans," I said as I put my hand on his shoulder, "you are evidently on the inside of this affair, and I wish you would tell me what the dickens it all means!"

He looked at me open mouthed for half a minute, and then a broad grin stole over his face. He thought I was playing off on him to test his prudence and loyalty.

"You will carry it through all right," he finally said, with many heavy nods of his head, and he went away looking very well pleased

At the end of another twenty-four hours I got a further insight into the mystery I had strolled into another hotel three or four blocks away to examine the register, as a globe trotter invariably does for no reason he can explain, when I saw a traveler who might have been my twin brother as far as outward appearance went. He was of my height and weight, had the same colored eyes, hair and mustache, and I believe our own mother would have wondered which was which. He stared at me, and I stared back, and I wandered back into my own hotel, knowing that the real man from London had arrived.

The Russian spies must have had a bad time of it trying to settle on the right man, but they finally decided in my favor The Englishman was free from surveillance, while I was dogged closer than before

At the end of a week, and while they were still dogging me and I was rather enjoying it, there was a fire aboard of a ship in the harbor It was about 9 o'clock at night, and a great crowd gathered on the wharf to watch the conflagration. I made one of the number, and in my anxiety to secure a good view I mounted the bows of a smart looking brig lying at a wharf. I was hardly over the rail before two men followed and seized me and hustled me down into the cabin. I found the captain of the brig the two spies and a Russian government official awaiting me

I have told you that the Englishman and I looked to be twins but I had not had time to look for little details As I sat down opposite the Russian official he began comparing my description and appearance with a written description and at the end of five minutes he rose up and thundered at the two spies

"Dolts, idiots, blunderers! You have arrested the wrong man!"

"If not too much trouble, I said to the official as he got through storming, "would you kindly explain why an American citizen has been made prisoner in this fashion?"

I was told that it was a mistake, but got no other satisfaction The brig was put about, but as the wind fell we did not make the harbor until after daylight Then I was dumped on the wharf without apology I walked straight to the American consul and told him the story, and his reply was

"Why man, you had best thank your stars instead of looking for an apology! When the Russian officials get hold of the wrong man by mistake he is generally sent to Siberia to cover up the blunder

Later on I found that the Englishman and his party had left to [illegible] the same evening, but [illegible] went and what sort of a [illegible] they had on hand I never [illegible]

TO TILL UNOCCUPIED CANADIAN LANDS

THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT ASKING FOR INCREASED ACREAGE IN GRAIN, TO MEET EUROPEAN DEMAND.

There are a number of holders of land in Western Canada, living in the United States, to whom the Canadian Government will shortly make an appeal to place the unoccupied areas they are holding under cultivation The lands are highly productive, but in a state of idleness they are not giving any revenue beyond the unearned increment and are not of the benefit to Canada that these lands could easily be made. It is pointed out that the demand for grains for years to come will cause good prices for all that can be produced Not only will the price of grains be affected, but also will that of cattle, hogs and horses, in fact everything that can be grown on the farms When placed under proper cultivation, not the kind that is often resorted to, which lessens yield and land values, many farms will pay for themselves in two or three years. Careful and intensive work is required, and if this is given in the way it is given to the high-priced lands of older settled countries, surprising results will follow.

There are those who are paying rent, who should not be doing so They would do better to purchase lands in Western Canada at the present low price at which they are being offered by land companies or private individuals. These have been held for the high prices that many would have realized, but for the war and the financial stringency Now is the time to buy; or if it is preferred advantage might be taken of the offer of 160 acres of land free that is made by the Dominion Government The man who owns his farm has a life of independence Then again there are those who are renting who might wish to continue as renters They have some means as well as sufficient outfit to begin in a new country where all the advantages are favourable Many of the owners of unoccupied lands would be willing to lease them on reasonable terms Then again attention is drawn to the fact that Western Canada numbers amongst its most successful farmers, artisans, business men, lawyers doctors and many other professions Farming today is a profession It is no longer accompanied by the drudgery that we were acquainted with a generation ago The fact that a man is not following a farming life today, does not preclude him from going on a Western Canada farm tomorrow and making a success of it If he is not in possession of Western Canada land that he can convert into a farm he should secure some make it a farm by equipping it and working it himself The man who has been holding his Western Canada land waiting for the profit he naturally expected has been justified in doing so Its agricultural possibilities are certain and sure If he has not realized immediately by making a sale he should not worry But to let it lie idle is not good business By getting it placed under cultivation a greater profit will come to him Have it cultivated by working it himself or get some good representative to do it Set about getting a purchaser a renter or some one to operate on shares

The department of the Dominion Government having charge of the Immigration through Mr W D Scott, Superintendent at Ottawa, Canada, is directing the attention of non resident owners of Western Canada lands to the fact that money will be made out of farming these lands The agents of the Department, located at different points in the States, are rendering assistance to this end —Advertisement

Strange Scorpion Found.

A curious, strange specimen of lizard or scorpion was captured by Walter T Todd near the trolley station of the Chambersburg, Greencastle & Waynesboro Street Railway company at Highfield Pa The reptile, or what not, was about eight inches in length and the color of brick dust It was found lying on the ground only a few feet from the station and, on account of the rain and cool weather, was unable to use its locomotive powers very actively and was easily captured

The reptile had an elongated body without scales, four short legs and short tail, and its body was almost as tough as rubber Where it came from no one seems to know

HOHENZOLLERNS SPRANG FROM PETTY HOUSE OF NOBLES—ASPIRED TO ROYALTY EARLY

Frederick William, First of the Dynasty, Was Capable Politician—His Son Organized First Great Prussian Army By Dint of Great Economy—Recruited Soldiers Everywhere.

The German imperial dynasty takes its name from the Castle of Hohenzollern, in Swabia, and traces its ancestry to a petty noble, Tassilion, who served under Charlemagne. A younger son of the house, Conrad, took service under Frederick Barbarossa, being steward of Nuremberg, about 1170. In 1248 Frederick III, burgrave of Nuremberg, sided with Rudolf of Hapsburg in the latter's assumption of the imperial crown. Burgrave John II became governor of Brandenburg and in 1415 Burgrave Frederick VI became margrave of Brandenburg. The present ruling Hohenzollerns are of the Franconian line. Two other lines have numerous representatives.

From the Kansas City Star

The Prussian monarchy, the youngest of the European states, sprang from a humble beginning About the beginning of the Fifteenth century the Marquisate of Brandenburg was bestowed by the Emperor Sigismund on the noble family of Hohenzollern In the Sixteenth century that family embraced the Lutheran doctrines Early in the Seventeenth century it obtained from the king of Poland the investiture of the duchy of Prussia

Even after his accession to this territory, the chiefs of the house of Hohenzollern hardly ranked with the electors of Saxony and Bavaria

The soil of Brandenburg was, for the most part, sterile. Even around Berlin, the capital of the province, and around Potsdam the favorite residence of the margraves, the country was a desert. In some tracts the deep sand could, with difficulty be forced by assiduous tillage to yield thin crops of rye and oats. In other place the ancient forests, from which the conquerors of the Roman empire had descended on the Danube remained untouched by the hand of man Where the soil was rich it was generally marshy and its insalubrity repelled the cultivators whom its fertility attracted

After the Title of King.

Frederick William called the great elector, was the prince to whose policy his successors have agreed to ascribe their greatness He acquired by the peace of Westphalia several valuable possessions, and among them the rich city and district of Magdeburg, and he left to his son Frederick, a principality as considerable as any which was not called a kingdom

Frederick aspired to the style of royalty. Ostentatious and profuse negligent of his true interest and of his high duties, insatiably eager for frivolous distinctions he added nothing to the real weight of the state which he governed, but he gained the great object of his life, the title of king

In the year 1700 he assumed this new dignity He had on that occasion to undergo all the mortifications which fall to the lot of ambitious upstarts. Compared with the other crowned heads of Europe he made a figure resembling that which a nabob or commissary who had bought a title, would make in the company of peers whose ancestors had been attained for treason against the Plantagenets

The envy of the class which he quitted and the civil scorn of the class into which he intruded himself were marked in very significant ways The elector of Saxony at first refused to acknowledge the new majesty Louis XIV looked down on his brother king with an air not unlike that with which the count of Moliere's play regards Monsieur Jourdain, just fresh from the mummery of being made a gentleman Austria exacted large sacrifice in return for its recognition and at last gave it ungraciously

A Parsimonious King.

Frederick was succeeded by his son, Frederick William, a prince who must be allowed to have possessed some talents for administration, but whose character was disfigured by the most odious vices and whose eccentricities were such as never had been seen out of a madhouse He was exact and diligent in the transaction of business, and he was the first who formed the design of obtaining for Prussia a place among the European powers, altogether out of proportion to its extent and population, by means of a strong military establishment

Strict economy enabled him to keep up a peace establishment of 60,000 troops These troops were disciplined in such a manner that placed beside them the household regiments of Versailles and St. James would have appeared an awkward squad. The master of such a force could not but be regarded by all his neighbors as a formidable enemy and a valuable ally.

But the mind of Frederick William was so ill regulated that all his inclinations became passions, and all his passions partook of the character of moral and intellectual disease. His parsimony degenerated into sordid avarice. His taste for military pomp and order became a mania, like that of a Dutch burgomaster of tulips. While the envoys of the court of Berlin were in a state of squalid poverty, as moved the laughter of foreign capitals—while the food of the royal family was so bad that even hunger loathed it—no price was thought too extravagant for tall recruits.

A Fortune For One Recruit.

The ambition of the kings was to form a brigade of giants, and every country was ransacked by his agents for men above ordinary stature. These researches were not confirmed to Europe. No head that towered above the crowd in the bazars of Aleppo, of Cairo or Surat could escape the crimps of Frederick William. One Irishman, more than seven feet high, who was picked up in London by the Prussian ambassador, received a bounty of nearly £1,800 sterling ($6,500)—very much more than the ambassador's salary.

This extravagance was the more absurd because a stout youth of five feet eight, who might have been procured for a few dollars, would, in all probability, have been a much more valuable soldier. But to Frederick William this huge Irishman was what a brass Otho or a vinegar bible is to the collector of a different kind.

It is remarkable that, though the main end of Frederick William's administration was to have a military force, through his reign forms an important epoch in the history of military discipline, and though his dominant passion was military display, he was yet one of the most pacific of princes. We are afraid that his aversion to war was not the effect of humanity but was merely one of his 1,000 whims.

Like a Miser With Soldiers.

His feeling about his troops seems to have resembled a miser's feeling about his money. He loved to collect them, to count them, to see them increase; but he could not find it in his heart to break in upon his precious hoard. * * *

The nature of Frederick William was hard and bad, and the habit of exercising arbitrary power made him frightfully savage. His rage constantly vented itself to right and left in curses and blows. When his majesty took a walk, every human being fled before him, as if a tiger had broken loose. If he met a lady in the street, he gave her a kick, and told her to go home and mind her brats.

His son Frederick (afterwards Frederick the Great) and his daughter Wilhelmina were in an especial manner objects of his aversion. His own mind was uncultivated. He despised literature. He hated infidels, papists and metaphysicians and did not very well understand in what way they differed from one another

The business of life according to him was to drill and be drilled. The recreations suited to a prince were to sit in a cloud of tobacco smoke, to sip Swedish beer between the puffs to play backgammon, to kill wild hogs and shoot partridges by the thousands * * *

Early in the year 1740 Frederick William met death and Frederick, who had just completed his 28th year, became king of Prussia.

A Progressive Township.

A remarkable instance of what a rural township can do is given in an article just published by the United States Public Health Service. Cape Fear township, in New Hanover county, North Carolina, started out last summer on a sanitary campaign under the combined leadership of the county board of health, the state board of health and the United States Public Health Service, in Wilmington, N C. As a result there has been great improvement in sanitary conditions According to reports that have just come in, every schoolhouse and every home in the township is provided with sanitary conveniences

If there is any other rural township in the entire south that can show a progress equal to this, it ought to come to the fore and let itself be known When a study of several hundred counties shows nearly one-half of the farm houses without any sanitary conveniences at all, it is a matter of pride to point to the achievement of a township like Cape Fear in New Hanover county which demonstrates itself as being so far ahead of the average

While it has been repeatedly claimed by some public speakers that the south is making more rapid strides in improving its sanitation than any other part of the country, an examination of tens of thousands of farm homes in the South Atlantic states shows that there are yet many townships where the sanitary index is less than 3 on a scale of 100

Assimilating By Electricity.

We made the point some months ago that our electric light companies have been far behind those of Europe in making it possible for poor people to get their service It is interesting to note that the Indiana & Michigan Electric company, which operates in South Bend, Ind., (plows, wagons, sewing machines), has started a campaign to do just this thing. About a third of the inhabitants of South Bend are laborers from Poland Austria, and the Balkan countries whose wages average about $1 50 or $1 75 per day The electric company has figured out plans whereby houses can be wired at a cost of from $9 to $15 each, and lighting service can be given for a minimum of $1 per month A Polish sales agent has been hired to talk to the newcomers write advertisements for their papers, and attend to their complaints—in short, to translate electricity into Slovak, etc. The men engaged in the work are confident of success and are going after it. The effect in giving these people better ways and standards of living, in getting them a share in our modern American civilization, and a feeling that they are so sharing will necessarily be very great This is solid public service, and it is far better than any charity What is being done on this problem in your town?

"Militarism, There Is the Enemy."

By Nicholas Murray Butler

The armed peace which preceded this war, and led directly to it, was in some respects worse than war itself, for it had many of the evils of war without war's educational advantages. We are not likely to return again to that form of wickedness and folly, unless perchance the continent of Europe is able to produce another generation of public men as self-centered and of as narrow a vision as those who have generally been in control of public policy there for 40 years past.

The whole cardhouse of alliances and ententes, together with the balance of power theory, has come tumbling heavily to the ground. Something far different and much more rational will arise in its stead. In the Europe of tomorrow there will be no place for secret treaties and understandings, for huge systems of armed camps and limitless navies, for sleepless international enmity and treachery, for carefully stimulated race and religious hatred or for wars made on the sole responsibility of monarchs and of ministers.

Moral, social and political progress will refuse longer to pay the crushing tolls which a conventional diplomacy and an unenlightened statesmanship have demanded of them

It is not the Slav or the Teuton, the Latin or the Briton, the oriental or the American, who is the enemy of civilization and of culture. Militarism, there is the enemy!

Love.

From the Atlantic

Love has no doubts. To itself love is the very substance of reality The phenomena of sight, sound, touch, and their fellows, are but the conditions under which life has made a foothold for itself in this boisterous world, the senses know nothing beyond their own functioning, they have nothing to say regarding the end or purpose of life. But to love, all the labor and effort of all the universe, with all its sidereal systems, with all its ethereal immensity, has been for the sake of producing love. Of what consequence is it, whether insensible matter endure a myriad years, or assume infinite bigness? In the absence of consciousness an infinity of matter is nothing. One flash of conscious life illumined by love is worth all the patience, all the effort, all the labor, of unconscious energy throughout an infinity of time. Consciousness is but a minister to love, to the love that is to be.

Madame Luis Corea, American wife of the former Nicaraguan minister to the United States, has taken up a course in law at the George Washington university.

TOLL OF RAILROADS IS 10,500 PER YEAR

Maximum Legal Indemnity Would Be $101,150,000 If Collected.

A. S. Henning, in the Chicago Tribune.

If the railroads of the United States were to pay the maximum legal indemnity of $10,000 for each life they took during the year ending June 30 last they would disburse $101,150,000 to widows, orphans and other dependents of the victims.

The report of railway accidents for the last fiscal year now being prepared by the Interstate Commerce commission discloses a death roll of 10,150 persons, the greater number of whom were employes During the same period 190,000 persons were injured in railroad accidents.

Confronted by this graphic evidence of the deadliness of the American railroad the commission has decided that radical steps must be taken to achieve a greater measure of safety for employes and for the traveling public. Although the efforts of the commission so far have resulted in some progress in the direction of "safety first," the shown by the official figures to be slight. For the last fiscal year the number killed was only 814 less than for the previous year.

Kill 210,000 in 25 Years.

During the last 25 years more than 210,000 persons have been killed on American railroads and more than 2,000,000 injured The property, loss due to wrecks since 1907 totals $52,000,000.

"The ravages of war pale into insignificance before these silent indications of the destruction of human life accompanying the peaceful operations of our railroads," said an official of the commission, discussing the forthcoming report

"The causes of death and injury are legion They include derailments, collisions, boiler explosions, miscellaneous train accidents and industrial accidents to employes

"There is a dreary monotony in the sameness of the reported cases of these accidents," says a report of the commission. "Year after year derailments and collisions due to identical causes are reported"

Most Victims Employes.

Under the present law, railroads are required to report by telegraph to the commission all accidents in which human life is lost There are more employes killed than passengers, many employes losing their lives in the operation of trains in railroad yards. In wrecks more passengers than employes are killed There are a surprisingly large number of trespassers killed on American railroads. This class includes persons not employed nor passengers.

The Interstate Commerce commission is doing all it can under present laws to prevent accidents. It prescribes safety appliances and enforces the law which limits the hours of service of train employes and telegraph operators This law was passed by congress when it was shown that many wrecks were due to the over working of train crews

Great speed has been developed on American railroads during the last decade, and this speed seems to be in deference to public demand The weight of trains has increased to such an extent that it has caused terrific wear on steel rails, notwithstanding the increase in the weight and size of the rails Ten years ago rails of less than 100 pounds were largely used on American roads

Now the prevailing rail weighs 100 pounds to every 36 inches and on the large systems the main line rail weighs 110 pounds to the yard In the recent hearing before the Interstate Commerce commission S. M. Rea president of the Pennsylvania system, stated that the Pennsylvania is making plans for laying 125-pound rails on its main lines

The high speed of trains has developed a defect in rails that is dangerous particularly as the defect cannot be detected under present methods in the making of the rail or after it is completed A heavy train running at a high speed develops the defect and ultimately a derailment takes place that causes loss of life and injury to many persons This defect is what is known as transverse fissure Its elimination calls for better mill practice, the experts of the commission say, and they are now engaged on a series of tests that may result in revolutionizing the making of rails in the United States

Whenever a wreck is reported to the commission which involves the loss of life, an investigation is made by inspectors if possible and a report published This ends the matter so far as the federal government is concerned.

Publicity Not Enough.

Something besides publicity, the commission has found by experience, is necessary to effect a reform. It has recommended that it be given authority to supervise to a large extent the physical operation of railroads. This authority would include the prescribing of signals and equipment, the character of rails, compulsory use of steel coaches, and a variety of other precautionary measures, including the regulation of speed

The New Haven investigation showed that two wrecks in which a couple of scores of lives were lost were caused by precisely identical conditions that had caused wrecks on the same line a few months previous To make the matter worse and to accentuate the fact that these wrecks could have been prevented it was shown that the commission in the case of the earlier wrecks had made recommendations which the railroad had deliberately ignored. The commission's experts think there is a vital need for a compulsory use of the block system and for the use of automatic stops in certain situations, and also for a uniform code of signals and rules

Train Order System Bad?

It is stated that the inherent weakness of the train order system is disclosed by the fact that of 47 collisions investigated, 23 were due to failure of conductors or engine men to understand or obey orders.

Had to Put In Money.

From the London Evening Standard.

A minister was once preaching at a little chapel on the subject of "Giving" During the sermon his heart was rejoiced by the fact that a member of the congregation went to the side of the chapel and placed a coin in a box and a little later another did the same.

Surely, the minister thought, his sermon had never met with so practical a response before.

On leaving he was accosted by one of the brethren who said:

"I hope we didn't disturb you sir; but ours is a penny-in-the-slot meter, and we should have been in darkness if we hadn't attended to it."

The largest tree in the United States is said to be the "Mother of the Forest," a giant redwood in the Calaveras big tree grove in California. It is supposed to contain 140,619 board feet of lumber.

AN AMERICAN NEW YEAR'S PA

New Year's calling is out of date, but many women who are enthusiastic over old time fashions are striving to revive certain last century customs. Some of those who are fond of appearing in last century apparel will celebrate the incoming of the new year with costume parties. The historic pageant given by the New York city Daughters of the Revolution recently and chronicled by newspapers all over the country proved how becoming the gowns of historic dames of our own land were and suggested that a historic costume reception attended by men and women representing the dignitaries of the time of General and Mrs. Washington would be one of the most delightful methods of ushering in a new year.

The New Year's reception of the president of the United States and his wife is to this day the first social event of the land, and in the stately days when Washington was chief magistrate how much more important would this great event have appeared! The first presidential mansion was at 10 Cherry street, New York city. The Washingtons moved into the mansion in April, 1789, but in the autumn of 1790 took up their residence in a new house on Broadway of the same city, where the Bowling Green buildings now stand. Consequently it was in the Cherry street house that the first president and Mrs. Washington, as was the custom in those days, were at home to all the world all day. In the evening they probably entertained their more intimate friends.

The old fashioned drawing room, lighted by candles and supplied with the rich mahogany furniture, must have presented a fair picture, for there were beautiful and brilliant women as well as gallant and handsome men in those days. Southern holly and mistletoe probably brightened the old fashioned interior, and a generous bowl of punch upon the massive sideboard in the dining room ministered to the comfort of the guests. What is now called a buffet lunch was served by the New Year's hostesses of the olden times. This consisted of cakes, fruits and sandwiches of all kinds, to which all helped themselves.

To hold a New Year's reception a la George and Martha Washington the drawing room should be arranged to look like that of a century ago. Let holly and mistletoe festoon doors and arches and be massed with pine and hemlock and other evergreens knotted with cherry colored ribbons. An evergreen motto, the letters built on shaped wires and placed in a conspicuous position, may wish the guests "A Happy New Year," while the dates 1790-1907 should appear in close proximity. The best position for the motto is over the mantel, because, standing in front of the fire with his hands folded behind him to indicate that no handshaking would be countenanced, Washington welcomed guests to his mansion

The gowns and headdresses of the ladies invited to attend may be copied from old-fashioned prints or reproductions of portraits of historic belles The rich brocades, the powdered hair and complexion patches will transform the appearance of modern beaux and belles in a manner truly wonderful. A few lines penciled on the face will aid in suggesting the appearance of the individual whose personality is to be represented. Every guest should be at liberty to select the character most pleasing to himself or herself. Of course this choice should preclude the characters of Washington and his wife, which belong to the host and hostess. If they have a son and daughter, Jack and Nelly Custis should be represented by their son and daughter.

The minuet will of course be the first dance, and it should be led by the host and hostess in the costumes of Washington and his wife. If other than buffet refreshments are served, the host takes to the dining room the most distinguished lady present—that is, the one whose position in the society of the time represented was most important. The hostess takes the most distinguished gentleman to the dining room. The selection, of course, will be largely influenced by personal feeling.

In the center of the dining room table a handsome decoration representing a chime of bells bearing aloft a silver star and the figures 1907 should be placed on a bank of green or of flowers. Ribbon streamers, red, white and blue, should extend to the edge of the supper table, where waxen cherubs, such as are made for decorations on the top of a Christmas tree, perch among the little clusters of flowers intended as souvenirs for guests. A knot of red, white and blue ribbon should tie the flowers intended for the ladies. If individual menus are prepared, each one may be given a personal significance by being inscribed with a verse relative to the flight of time. Any dictionary of quotations will supply the necessary lines.

The dining room ought to be lighted entirely with wax candles in handsome candelabra. A number of these, with tinted shades to tone down the glare, may decorate the supper table.

The punch bowl, which should stand upon the sideboard, must be a genuine old fashioned affair if such a one can be obtained among the friends of the host and hostess. Punch is made of hot water and wine or spirits, together with the acid juices of fruits and sugar. The hardy men and women of colonial and revolutionary times were inured to strong drafts and could stand more punch than their nervous, dyspeptic descendants, so the punch should be partaken of sparingly. It is probable that the punch served at Washington's table was made after this recipe: Rub the yellow rind of a lemon with sugar. Put the sugar into the punch bowl and squeeze the lemon juice over it. The rum or brandy is then added in the proportions preferred and mixed thoroughly with the sugar and lemon juice. Hot water is then poured into the bowl, the mixture being constantly agitated meanwhile.

Wine punch is made with two pints of port wine, a quart of good, old Jamaica rum, the juice of twelve lemons, one pound of sugar and six pints of hot water

The supper itself may consist of bouillon in cups, assorted sandwiches in fancy shapes, oyster patties, chicken salad, New Year's cake, iced and trimmed with holly, ices, fancy cakes, fruit and coffee.

If a cotillion is danced, the favors should follow the general idea of the party, representing old fashioned souvenirs.

While in the main historical accuracy should be aimed at, the guests should be given liberty to represent many historic Americans who could not have possibly been present at that first reception All who attend should have been persons of quality in those days and alive at the time the first president celebrated New Year's in 1790. Among those who should have the privilege of attending such an entertainment may be named Robert Morris and his wife, Ington; Governor and Mrs. Clinton, the widow of General Montgomery, Lady Stirling, the lovely Lady Kitty Duer, Lady Mary Watts, the Marchioness de Brienne, General Knox and his wife, Mr and Mrs. Robert Livingston, Mrs. Mercy Warren, Washington's vice president, John Adams, and his wife; General Philip Schuyler and his wife; General Greene and his beautiful and brilliant consort Mr. and Mrs. Jay cock, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander ton, Mr. and Mrs John Jay, Fulton and his wife, Patrick Henry his beautiful daughter, the lovely Celica Peale, daughter of the Lawrence Washington and his who was Anne Fairfax the General Anthony Wayne, Thomas ferson, John Marshall, Franklin, Oliver Ellsworth, Joseph dolph, William Bradford, James John Paul Jones, John Rutledge, Knox, Gouverneur Morris, Baron lenberg and the other statesmen generals of the period, with their or daughters.

Such an entertainment will awaken the latent patriotism neighborhood wherein men and have given little thought to the ful and romantic in their country tory.

It would be a most admirable for a house party diversion and be supplemented by tableaux representing scenes in colonial and revolutionary history. A careful perusal of the of the celebrities of the time will many a suggestion as to what effective. Washington's first with his wife; Martha Washington with the ladies at Valley Forge Morristown; scenes in the courts John Hancock and Alexander Hamilton, or anything which affords a mantic picture may be easily arranged by amateur talent.

The best scenic effects are produced if a transparent green screen stretched across the front of the Cheap green mosquito netting with the touch of vagueness that is required Rose netting will suggest sunrise, the blue will throw over faces the ghastly tinge needed to represent the starving soldiers at Valley Forge. Colored fires, such as are used lar at Fourth of July celebrations light the pictures if nothing better be obtained. Care should be taken that the light falls well on the faces of the performers. In most neighborhood theatrical lights may be obtained will be a great deal more effective though they are not absolutely necessary.

The gas should be turned out in audience room and every available light in the house placed to advantage back of the stage to illuminate the picture. Care must be taken that the lights are not apparent to the gaze of the audience. Tinted shades or lights projected through colored glass will impart any needed tint.

Old brocades are sometimes expensive. For tableaux and even for costume parties handsome cretonnes containing small patterns may be successfully substituted. Powdered hair and powdered faces will not look well without a touch of rouge for the cheeks and a bit of carmine for the lips The brows and lashes, too, must be made up, or the countenance will present a curiously inane appearance What virtues may have been their other virtues the fashionable ladies of "ye olden time" had no prejudice against facial make-up.

Bachelor maidens are increasing in Massachusetts to an extent which greatly alarms Charles Felton Pidgin, the head of the state bureau of labor statistics

His last report shows marriages are on the decline, but unmarried—women by the thousands.

Mr. Pidgin doesn't blame the men at all for this state of things He takes it for granted that all these unmarried representatives of the feminine gender have had, O, countless offers

But they prefer to stay single Such is their sense, thinks Mr Pidgin.

"There certainly has been a startling increase in the number of unmarried women during the last ten years," he says. "A greater increase than among the married women.

"This is due to more than one cause probably, but the greatest is the fact that women are entering the business field on an equal basis with men and are therefore not so dependent upon marriage as a livelihood.

"They can earn as much as men do and they very often prefer to work eight hours a day in an office and be sure of a weekly salary than to do housework at home, keep up the house and have half that to live on "The American girl is averse to doing domestic work of any kind. She is unlike the English girl and the German girl—any other girl in fact, except the French.

"She is distinctly not domestic and that in spite of the inherent fact that I believe is in every girl's mind the desire to marry.

"This independence, which is becoming more and more prevalent among women, is the cause of the great increase in divorces, too, I believe.

"When women marry and things don't go smoothly or there is too much forced economy in the living, then the woman who has worked for a living remembers her weekly salary and wishes she could get it back—and the chances are that she does get it back unless things straighten out pretty soon

"In a great many cases— a majority of cases I think I may say—the woman would have to confess that when she earned her own living she was better off, and leaving out the issue of love she might wish herself single again."

Secret of Picking a Safe Lock.

From the Louisville Courier-Journal

"Milner James was the most artistic safe breaker in the business," said Lecoq, the detective. "He is dead now He opened in his time more than 700 safes without tools or gunpowder—solely by working out the combination with his fingers.

"'It took me a year,' he once said, 'to learn the trick of picking combinations. I studied all the locks there were and I had three safes of different makes to practice on. The ear is the most important factor in my method, and it must be held tightly against the safe door on a line with the tumblers. When the knob of the lock is turned slowly and one of the tumblers reaches the notch corresponding to the first number of the combination the tumbler will fall with a little click Care must be taken not to displace this tumbler but keep on trying the knob back and forth gently till each of the tumblers drops. Then the door opens. Hhardly one man in a thousand has an ear delicate enough for this work, and to be a success at it you've got to give up tobacco and alcohol."

Little Mabel had been taken by her parents to a New Year's watch party, and when the clock struck 12, some one shouted "The old year is dead; hurrah for the new!"

"Mamma," said sleepy Mabel, "will we have to stay for the funeral?"

PARIS MUSIC HALLS RIOT OF VULGARITY

American Tourists Largely to Blame for Bad Quality of Shows.

From the Chicago Tribune.

Paris—Among the many things for which to blame the American tourists is the quality of the early summer bills at the Paris music halls. They are, so far as we have been able to discover them, unutterably stupid, and usually the worst of the list is the most prosperous.

There is a reason for this. One of the things the tourists invariably brings to Paris with him is a desire to be shocked. To be here and not to be shocked is to have the whole trip spoiled. Therefore he (usually egged on by her) arranges his playgoing schedule by inquiring the way to the "most characteristic," which is to say the warmest of prevailing entertainments.

Al the Law Allows.

This after a period of years, has resulted in placing the Parisian music hall manager in rather an awkward position. He has done all that the law permits him to do and done it over and over again. There is nothing left. The living picture, which for years served as an excuse for the introduction of naked ladies, powdered, painted and framed, and is still used for that purpose in many of the halls, has become a worn excuse and nothing more, even to the Travel club of Portland, Me.

In fact, so common has the nude woman become as a flashy feature of the finale in all Parisian revues that she ceases to excite even the paid claque. At the Marigny, the other night, an undraped nymph rode in astraddle the neck of a husky chorus faun and the audience all but yawned. Another, strapped to a shield as a pink and white captive slave and carried on the shoulders of four nervous natives, aroused neither comment nor applause, even when her foot slipped and she gently kicked one bearer in the ear.

Familiar American Music.

A second handicap for the Parisian producer appears to be the music. All that which is acceptable as having the music hall spirit and swing evidently is composed in America, and by the time it gets back here it is a feeble echo of all the tunes the tourists have been hearing for the last five years. The principal dance at the Marigny right now is "Sumurun," the Olympia offers a pale imitation of a winter garden show of three years ago, while the Moulin Rouge and the Folies Bergere are trailing with the best efforts of our tunesmiths of from three to five years ago.

The comedy, of course, is awful. To employ a fittingly ancient comparison, there is only one thing sadder than a French comedian, and that is two French comedians. Unfortunately, they usually work in pairs. Neither is it because you do not understand them that they are so impressively unfunny. Their own countrymen usually take to the promenades as soon as they become active, and the only laughs they ever get are from such hilarious invention as hanging an umbrella upon an artificial wart. The rough comedians engaged to put over the low comedy in Mr. Ziegfeld's follies were as gentle and refined as Melville Ellis by comparison.

Dancing Is Weird.

And the dancing! Only one thing funnier than the French chorus girl trying to dance can be found on this side of the ocean, and that is the English matron trying to one-step. The French Tottie is lithe and lissom, but evidently not naturally light on her feet. Therefore, when the local Ned Weyburns, inspired by a visit to America and a desire to copy the American style of chorus figures, attempt to teach them how it is done, the result is amusing. Even the daintiest of them wabble about with the conscious awkwardness of an alcoholic ballet girl, and where, here and there in the line, there happens to be an imported American girl, or a Gaiety girl from London, she can do nothing to improve the ensemble because he French sisters can't move fast enough to get out of her way.

So far we have found nothing resembling a novelty in the halls. At the Marigny, Max Linder, apparently a local popular comedian, is combining a cinema feature with a comedy sketch. A dramatic prologue introduces a Parisian called away on a political errand to a near-by town. His infantile mistress insists on going with him. As they leave their apartments, lugging a very large hand trunk, the cinema takes up the story and they are shown at the station, where the wife, clinging to her husband's neck, is carried away with him on his journey

Hides Her in Bathtub.

Arriving at the village, where the presence of the mistress would be embarrassing, the youth tries to ship her back home, but is finally compelled to pack her in his trunk and in this fashion carry her into the home of an irascible uncle.

Again the picture ends and the reminder of the playlet is acted, the somewhat boisterous fun being extracted from the effort of the youth to keep the mistress concealed, first in the bed, later in the bathtub of his suite, and her final exposure when the uncle, (discreetly covered by a bathing suit, however,) tries to take a path in the same tub in which the young woman is hiding.

Still, if the bills are bad, there is always the promenoir in the French and English music halls. And the promenoir, at least for the men of the party, has its attractions. Some blonde, some brunette.

Do You Know?

From the Wisconsin State Journal.

That the 11 countries which have the lowest death rate among babies are all equal suffrage states?

That in 26 years the socialist vote in the United States has multiplied itself 600 times?

That a publicly owned telephone system, free to use the best appliances, could give first class service at the rate of a penny a call, thus enabling practically every American citizen to have a phone in his house?

That if every college and high school in the country gave its young men military drill two hours a week, including rifle practice and occasional maneuvers in mass, Uncle Sam would soon have, as a fighting reserve, the largest army in the world, needing only equipment to make it immediately available in case of crisis, yet costing a mere fraction of a standing army's cost, and essentially democratic?

That if workingmen could put their savings directly into small denomination, public improvement bonds it would soon be possible to have municipally-owned, 3-cent street car fares and electricity to light, heat and do the cooking in every home?

The Mystery of the Boule Cabinet

BY

BURTON E. STEVENSON

Copyright, 1913, by Burton E. Stevenson.

CHAPTER XXVIII.—(Continued).

To my relief, Drouet's identity was established without any help from me. The bag which he had left on the pier had been opened at the request of the police and a card case found with his address on it. Why he had sent in to Vantine a card not his own, and what his business with Vantine had been, were details concerning which the police could offer no theory, and which I did not feel called upon to explain, since neither in any way made clearer the mystery of his death.

An amusing incident of the inquest was the attempt made by Goldberger to heckle Godfrey, evidently at Grady's suggestion.

"On the morning after the tragedy," Goldberger began sweetly, "you printed in the Record a photograph which you claimed to be that of the woman who had called upon Mr Vantine the night before, and who was, presumbably, the last person to see him alive. Where did you get that photograph?"

"It was a copy of one which Drouet carried in his watch case," answered Godfrey.

"Since then," pursued Goldberger, "you have made no further reference to that feature of the case. I presume you found out that you were mistaken?"

"On the contrary, I proved that I was correct."

Goldberger's face reddened, and his look was not pleasant.

"'Prove' is rather a strong word, isn't it " he asked.

"It is the right word."

"What was the woman's connection with the man Drouet?"

"She had been his mistress."

"You say that very confidently," said Goldberger, his lips curling. "After all, it is merely a guess, isn't it?"

"I have reason to say it confidently," retorted Godfrey quickly, "since the woman confessed as much in my presence."

Again Goldberger reddened.

"I suppose she also confessed that it was really she who called up Mr. Vantin?" he sneered.

"She not only confessed that," said Godfrey, still more quietly, "but she told in detail what occurred during that visit."

"The confession was made to yourself alone, of course?" queried Goldberger, in a tone deliberately insulting.

Godfrey flushed a little at the words, but managed to retain his self-control

"Not at all," he said "It was made in the presence of Mr. Lester and of another distinguished lawyer whose name I am not at liberty to reveal."

Goldberger swallowed hard, as though he had received a slap in the face. I dare say, he felt as though he had!

"This woman is in New York?" he asked

"I believe so."

"What is her name and address?"

"I am not at liberty to answer."

Goldberger glared at him.

"You will answer," he thundered, "or I'll commit you for contempt!"

Godfrey was quite himself again.

"Very well," he said, smiling. "I have not the slightest objection. But I would think it over, if I were you. Mr. Lester will assure you that the woman was in no way connected with the death either of Drouet or of Mr. Vantine."

Goldberger did think it over, he realized the danger of trying to punish a paper so powerful as the Record, and he finally decided to accept Godfrey's statement as a mitigation of his refusal to answer.

"That is only one of the details which Commissioner Grady has missed," Godfrey added, pleasantly.

"That will do," Goldberger broke in, and Godfrey left the stand.

I was recalled to confirm his story. I also, of course, refused to give the woman's name, explaining to Goldberger that I had learned it professionally, that I was certain she had been guilty of no crime, and that to reveal it would seriously embarrass an entirely innocent woman. With that statement, the coroner was compelled to appear satisfied.

Grady did not go on the stand; he was not even at the inquest. In fact, since the first day, he had not appeared publicly in connection with the case at all, and I had surmised that he did not care to be identified with a mystery which there seemed to be no prospect of solving, and from which no glory was to be won. The case had been placed in Simmonds' hands, and it was he who testified on behalf of the police, admitting candidly that they were all at sea. He had made a careful examination of the Vantine house, he said, particularly of the room in which the bodies had been found and had discovered absolutely nothing in the shape of a clue to the solution of the mystery. There was something diabolical about it, something almost supernatural. He had not abandoned hope, and was still working on the case; but he was inclined to think that, if the mystery was ever solved, it would be only by some lucky accident or through the confession of the guilty man.

Goldberger was annoyed; that was evident enough from the nervous way in which he gnawed his mustache; but he had no theory any more than the police; there was not a scintilla of evidence to fasten the crime upon anyone; and the end of the hearing was that the jury brought in a verdict that Philip Vantine and Georges Drouet had died from the effects of a poison administered by a person or persons unknown.

Godfrey joined me at the door as I was leaving, and we went down the steps together.

"I was glad to hear Simmonds confess that the police are up a tree," he said. "Of course, Grady is trying to sneak out of it, and blame some one else for the failure—but I'll see that he doesn't succeed. I'll see anyway, that Simmonds gets a square deal—he's an old friend of mine, you know."

"Yes," I said, "I know; but we're all up a tree, aren't we?"

"For the present," laughed Godfrey, "we do occupy that undignified position. But you don't expect to stay there forever, do you, Lester?"

"Since my theory about the Boule cabinet exploded," I said, "I have given up hope. By the way, I'm going to turn the cabinet over to its owner tomorrow."

"To its owner?" he repeated, his eyes narrowing. "Yes I thought he'd be around for it, though I hardly thought he'd come so soon. Who does it happen to be, Lester?"

"Why," I said, a little impatiently, "you know as well as I do that it belongs to Armand & Son."

"You've seen their representative, then?" he queried, a little flush of excitement, which I could not understand, spreading over his face.

"He came to see me yesterday. I'd like you to meet him, Godfrey. He is Felix Armand, the 'son' of the firm, and one of the most finished gentlemen I ever met."

"I'd like to meet him," said Godfrey, smiling queerly. "Perhaps I shall, some day. I hope so, anyway. But how did he explain the blunder, Lester?"

"In some way, they shipped the wrong cabinet to Vantine The right one will get here on La Provence tomorrow," and I told him in detail the story which Felix Armand told me. "He was quite upset over it," I added. "His apologies were almost abject."

Godfrey listened intently to all this, and he nodded with satisfaction when I had finished.

"It is all most interesting," he commented. "Did M. Armand happen to mention where he is staying?"

"No, but he won't be hard to find, if you want to see him. He's at one of the big hotels, of course—probably the Plaza or the St Regis. He's too great a swell for any minor hostelry"

"What time do you expect him tomorrow?"

"Sometime in the afternoon He's to call for me as soon as he gets Vantine's cabinet off the boat. Godfrey," I added, "I felt yesterday when I was talking with him that perhaps he knew more about this affair than he would admit. I could see that he guessed in an instant who the owner of the letters was, and what they contained. Do you think I ought to hold on to the cabinet a while longer? I could invent some pretext for delay, easily enough."

"Why, no; let him have his cabinet," said Godfrey, with an alacrity that surprised me. "If your theory about it has been exploded, what's the use of hanging on to it?"

"I don't see any use in doing so," I admitted, "but I thought perhaps you might want more time to examine it."

"I've examined it all I'm going to," Godfrey answered, and I told myself that this was the first time I had ever known him to admit himself defeated.

"I have a sort of feeling" I explained, "that when we let go of the cabinet, we give up the only clue we have to this whole affair. It is like a confession of defeat."

"Oh, no, it isn't," Godfrey objected. "If there is nothing more to be learned from the cabinet, there is no reason to retain it. I should certainly let M. Armand have it. Perhaps I'll see you tomorrow," he added, and we parted at the corner.

But I did not see him on the morrow. I was rather expecting a call from him during the morning, and when none came, I was certain I should find him awaiting me when I arrived at the Vantine house, in company with M. Armand But he was not there and when I asked for him, Parks told me that he had not seen him since the day before.

I confess that Godfrey's indifference to the fate of the cabinet surprised me greatly; besides, I was hoping that he would wish to meet the fascinating Frenchman More fascinating, if possible, than he had been on Monday, and I soon found myself completely under his spell There had been less delay than he had anticipated in getting the cabinet off the boat and through the customs, and it was not yet 3 o'clock when we reached the Vantine house

"I haven't seen Mr. Godfrey," Parks repeated, "but there's others here as it fair breaks my heart to see."

He motioned toward the door of the music room, and, stepping to it, I saw the inventory was already in progress. The man in charge of it nodded to me, but I did not go in, for the sight was anything but a pleasant one.

"The cabinet is in the room across the hall," I said to M. Armand, and led the way through the ante-room into the room beyond.

Parks switched on the lights for us, and my companion glanced with surprise at the heavy shutters covering the windows.

"We put those up for a protection," I explained. "We had an idea that some one would try to enter. In fact, one evening we did find a wire connecting with the burglar alarm cut, and later on, saw some one peering in through the hole in that shutter yonder."

"You did?" M. Armand queried quickly. "Would you recognize the man, if you were to meet him again?"

"Oh, no; you see the hole is quite small. There was nothing visible except a pair of eyes. Yet I might know them again, for I never before saw such eyes—so bright, so burning. It was the night that Godfrey and I were trying to find the secret drawer, and those eyes gleamed like fire as they watched us."

M. Armand was gazing at the cabinet, apparently only half listening.

"Ah, yes, the secret drawer," he said. "Will you show me how it is operated, Mr. Lester? I am most curious about it."

I placed my hand upon the table and pressed the three points which the veiled lady had shown us. The first time I got the order wrong, but at the second trial, the little handle fell forward with a click, and I pulled the drawer open.

"There it is," I said. "You see how cuevorly it is constructed. And how well it is concealed. No one would suspect its existence."

He examined it with much interest; pushed it back into place, and then opened it himself.

"Very clever, indeed," he agreed. "I have never seen another so well concealed. And the idea of opening it only by a certain combination is most happy and original. Most secret drawers are secret only in name; a slight search reveals them; but this one . . ."

He pushed it shut again, and examined the inlay around it.

"My friend and I went over the cabinet very carefully and could not find it," I said.

"Your friend—I think you mentioned his name?"

"Yes—his name is Godfrey."

"A man of the law, like yourself?"

"Oh, no, a newspaper man. But he had been a member of the detective force before that. He is extraordinarily keen, and if anybody could have found that drawer, he could. But that combination was too much for him."

M. Armand snapped the drawer back into place with a little crash.

"I am glad, at any rate, that it was discovered," he said. "I will not conceal from you, Mr. Lester, that it adds not a little to the value of the cabinet."

"What is its value?" I asked. "Mr. Vantine wanted me to buy it for him, and named a most extravagant figure as the limit he was willing to pay."

"Really," M. Armand answered, after an instant's hesitation, "I would not care to name a figure, Mr. Lester, without further consultation with my father. The cabinet is quite unique—the most beautiful, perhaps, that M. Boule ever produced. Did you discover Madame de Montespan's monogram?"

"No, Mr Vantine said he was sure it existed, but Godfrey and I did not look for it."

M. Armand opened the doors which concealed the central drawers.

"Voila!" he said, and traced with his finger the arabesque just under the pediment. "See how cunningly it has been blended with the other figures. And here is the emblem of the giver." He pointed to a tiny golden sun with radiating rays on the base of the pediment, just above the monogram. "Le roi soleil!"

"Le roi soleil!" I repeated. "Of course. We are stupid not to have discerned it. That tells the whole story, doesn't it? What is it, Parks," I added, as that worthy appeared at the door.

"There's a van outside, sir," he said, "and a couple of men are unloading a piece of furniture. Is it all right, sir?"

"Yes," I answered." Have them bring it in here And ask the man in charge of the inventory to step over here a minute. Mr. Vantine left his collection of art objects to the Metropolitan museum," I explained to M. Armand, "and I should like the representative of the meuseum to be present when the exchange is made."

"Certainly," he assented. "That is very just."

Parks was back in a moment, piloting two men who carried between them an object swathed in burlap, and the Metropolitan man followed them in.

"I am Mr Lester," I said to him, "Mr. Vantine's executor, and this is M. Felix Armand, of Armand & Son, of Paris. We are correcting an error which was made just before Mr Vantine died. That cabinet younder was shipped him by mistake in place of one which he had bought. M Armand has aused the right one to be sent over, and will take away the one which belongs to him I have already spoken to the museum's attorney about the matter, but I wish you to be present when the exchange was made."

"I have no doubt it is all right, sir," the museum man hastened to assure me. "You, of course, have personal knowledge of all this."

"Certainly, Mr Vantine himself told me the story."

"Very well, sir," but his eyes dwelt lovingly upon the Boule cabinet. "That is a very handsome piece," he added. "I am sorry the museum is not to get it."

"Perhaps you can buy it from M. Armand," I suggested, but the curator laughed and shood his head.

"No," he said, "we couldn't afford it. But Sir Caspar might persuade Mr. Morgan to buy it for us—I'll mention it to him."

The two men, meanwhile, under M. Armand's direction, had been stripping the wrappings from the other cabinet, and it finally stood revealed. It, too, was a beautiful piece of furniture, but even my untrained eye could see how greatly it fell below the other.

"We shall be very pleased to have Mr. Morgan see it," said M Armand, with a smile. "I will not conceal from you that we had already thought of him—as what dealer does not when he acquires something rare and beautiful? I shall endeavor to secure an appointment with him. Meanwhile . . ."

"Meanwhile the cabinet is yours," I said.

He made a little deprecating gesture, and then proceeded to have the cabinet very carefully wrapped in the burlap which had been around the other one. I watched it disappear under the rough covering with something like regret, for already my eyes were being opened to its beauty Besides, I told myself again, with in would disappear the last hope of solving the mystery of Phillip Vantine's death. However my reason might protest, some instinct told me that, in some way the Boule cabinet was connected with that tragedy.

But at last the packing was done, and M. Armand turned to me and held out his hand.

"I shall hope to see you again, Mr. Lester," he said, with a cordiality which flattered me, "and to renew our very pleasant acquaintance. Whenever you are in Paris, I trust you will not fail to honor me by letting me know. I shall count it a very great privilege to display for you some of the beauties of our city not known to every one."

"Thank you," I said. "I shall certainly remember that invitation. And meanwhile, since you are here in New York . . ."

"You are most kind," he broke in, "and I was myself hoping that we might at least dine together. But I am compelled to proceed to Boston this evening, and from there I shall go on to Quebec. Whether I shall get back to New York I do not know—it will depend somewhat upon Mr. Morgan's attitude, we would scarcely entrust a business so delicate to our dealer. If I do get back, I shall let you know."

"Please do," I urged. "It will be a very great pleasure to me. Besides, I am still hoping that some solution of this mystery may occur to you."

He shook his head with a little smile. "I fear it is too difficult for a novice like myself," he said. "It is impenetrable to me. If a solution is discovered, I trust you will inform me. It is certain to be most interesting."

"I will," I promised, and we shook hands again.

Who Are the "Unfit."

From the New York American.

"Educate only the fit," says Dr Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia, and college presidents all over the country echo his sentiments. They reason from a standpoint of economics that it is a waste of time, effort and money to put the facilities of colleges at the disposal of the physically weak.

Yet some of the finest contributions to the world's well-being have come from the physically unfit.

Shelley, himself a very great sufferer, gave to the world these fine lines

"Most wretched men are cradled into poetry by wrong;
They learn in suffering what they teach in song."

Shelley may not have meant physical suffering alone, but there is no mistaking Darwin, who gave the world's thinkers a stimulus such as they had not known. He said: "If I had not been so great an invalid, I should not have done so much work.

Dumas asked Reboul: "What made you a poet?" and the answer came in a single word, "Suffering."

Of the physically unfit "immortals," think of Gibbon, the historian; Beethoven, Moliere, Calvin, Carlyle, Ruskin and Robert Louis Stevenson.

All physically unfit, and yet every one made the world richer. Physical "unfitness" or suffering is indeed often a stimulus to mental effort. Sacrifice of health is the price many noble men have paid for mental intensity and spiritual earnestness. Some souls consume their bodies.

Is President Butler right? Should not our colleges aim rather to strengthen the weak, to aid those of strong minds and poor bodies to bear the burden of life? Nature often puts precious parcels in small packages and mighty brains in frail bodies.

SYRUP OF FIGS FOR A CHILD'S BOWELS

It is cruel to force nauseating, harsh physic into a sick child.

Look back at your childhood days. Remember the "dose" mother insisted on — castor oil, calomel, cathartics. How you hated them, how you fought against taking them.

With our children it's different. Mothers who cling to the old form of physic simply don't realize what they do The children's revolt is well-founded. Their tender little "insides" are injured by them.

If your child's stomach, liver and bowels need cleansing, give only delicious "California Syrup of Figs." Its action is positive, but gentle. Millions of mothers keep this harmless "fruit laxative" handy; they know children love to take it; that it never fails to clean the liver and bowels and sweeten the stomach, and that a teaspoonful given today saves a sick child tomorrow.

Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on each bottle. Adv.

His Frame of Mind.

The horse had run away and was tangled up in the wire fence at the side of the muddy road. Its half-witted owner had kicked and sworn and tried to lift the animal until he was out of sorts and covered with mud.

A well-groomed man came along, took in the situation, and suggested: "Spring the fence back, then he can get his feet free."

The owner of the horse did as he was told. "Now give him a cut with the whip and he'll get up himself."

This the owner did. Then he looked at the horse, up and ready for travel, looked at himself covered with mud, and looked at the immaculate gentleman in the road. Wrath filled his soul.

"Well," he grumbled, "thank you just as much as if you'd helped me."

GRANDMA USED SAGE TEA TO DARKEN HER GRAY HAIR

She Made Up a Mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to Bring Back Color, Gloss, Thickness.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," you will get a large bottle of the famous old recipe for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time, by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy.—Adv.

No Failure Is Final.

One of Napoleon's marshals is said to have approached him on the battlefield and exclaimed:

"General, I fear that the battle is lost."

Napoleon coolly looked at his watch and replied:

"Time for another battle. Summon the army to a fresh charge."

Not Ready.

"Put on your helmet an' your red shirt, Silas, there's a big fire down the road a piece."

"Shucks! I can't go. My shirt's in the washtub an' the old woman's out in the garden fillin' my helmet with a mess of beans."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

MINNESOTA LAND FOR SALE

I have the agency for a number of choice pieces of Minnesota land and anyone interested will do well to see me before investing elsewhere.

C. L. Yahnke.

The world's record for corn-raising belongs to Walter L. Deenson, an Alabama boy, yet in his early teens. Last year this boy raised 232 bushels of corn on a single acre of land, which is the largest yield per acre ever recorded. This remarkable record was made by an ordinary boy and on ordinary land. He became interested in corn raising and studied into the matter of the kind and proper use, of fertilizers and proper cultivation at a Short Course. As a result of putting his knowledge to practical use, he has raised 232 bushels of corn on one acre of land, thereby winning the championship of the world. What Walter L. Deenson has done serves to show what a common every-day, out-and-out boy can do if he is given the chance. There are thousands of ambitious boys on the rich farms of this state who never know what it is to be encouraged to take an interest in agriculture or stockraising. If these boys were given a small plot of ground and some seed-corn for example—to plant and cultivate, a circus would not be able to turn their thoughts very far away from the "enchanted spot" where a wonderful harvest will be theirs to reap. A boy may not be able to raise 232 bushels of corn to an acre of his father's land, but he can do well enough to make his efforts worth while. The boy in this county that is going after that world's championship record next year should buy a ticket for the Short Course to be held in Klemme, Jan. 25th to 30th.

Jacob Waltz was born in Wittenberg, Germany, April 24th 1838. In 1853 he came to this country and for the past 50 years he lived near Belmond, and where he is well known in the vicinity. In 1894 he was married, three children being born to them of which one died in infancy.

During the past year he has been making his home with Rev. G. Hoefner and has attendad the German Methodist Church most regularly. During the past few months his health has been failing. He died Dec. 22 with the testimony of having faith in God.

The funeral services were held at the German Methodist Church on Thursday morning with Rev. W. J. Witter officiating, and burial was made at the Belmond cemetary. He leaves to mourn three brothers, one sister and two daughters, Mrs. Corwin Smith and Mrs. Ellis Burg of Belmond, Ia., besides distant relatives and friends.
